Although it is several hundred miles south of Constantinople, it is connected with it by the Bagdad Railroad, which makes it an excellent base from which to attack the capital of the Turkish Empire. Beautiful fruit and vegetable gardens lie around the city, stretching for a distance of at least twelve miles from its suburbs.

The achievement of the Serbian army in reoccupying their country and rapidly clearing it of the invaders is a source of no less satisfaction to fair-minded people than is the reoccupation of Belgium. Serbia has suffered from the pillage and oppression just as bitterly as have the Belgians, and it is quite a coincidence that they should both be re-established within a month of each other.

The mystery of the catastrophe which overtook Lord Kitchener on his way to Russia after he had performed the gigantic task of creating England's army, is explained by Mr. Henry W. Mapp, head of the Salvation Army in Russia. In an address before the Division of Pictorial Publicity at the Salmagundi Club in New York he made the following statement: "The sinking of the ship on which Lord Kitchener was lost was accomplished through the treachery of the former Czarina, who telegraphed all the plans in regard to Lord Kitchener's proposed visit directly to the Kaiser."

"The Czarina was the great force in Russia," Mr. Mapp said. "All information that Russia received from the Allies regarding their plans was immediately conveyed to her and she sent it to Germany. The Kaiser controlled Russia. The corruption, treachery and intrigue in the Russian court was terrible. Munition plants were blown up at the instruction of the Germans and unbelievable damage to the allied cause was effected through the treachery of the former Empress. If the revolution had not taken place, the Germans would have been able to lead the allied cause to destruction. Bad as the situation is now, it is not to be compared with the conditions which existed under Czardom. The downfall of the Czar's regime was the greatest possible advantage to the Allies."

If these facts are true, we need waste no further sympathy on this royal lady, who has perhaps by this time followed her husband to a violent death, nor need we squander any regrets over the "collapse of Russia," for collapse is better than treachery.

The transformation of Connecticut from a State burdened with a net obligation of ten million dollars to one that to-day has a balance on hand of $1,320,000.00 in four years' time is directly attributable to the adoption by that Commonwealth of a modern budget system under a State Board of Finance in place of the haphazard plan of managing its finances. At present to the State Board of Finance all other boards, all State departments and all State institutions have to make itemized reports, and the Finance Board holds regular meetings and hearings with the legislative appropriation committee.

There is no doubt that the adoption of such business-like methods will prove equally advantageous to all our other State governments, and the wonder is that it has been so long delayed.

Having successfully put over a six billion dollar loan it is interesting to look back to the early days of Uncle Sam's financial career. We find that Alexander Hamilton, Secretary of the Treasury one hundred and twenty-nine years ago, had to negotiate on his personal responsibility a loan of two hundred thousand dollars (less than a quarter of a million), which could only be advanced to the government in twenty thousand dollar installments. The estimates for government expenses now run to over ten billion dollars a year, which is a little more than at the rate of twenty thousand dollars a minute. The world does move, so does Uncle Sam's pocketbook.

Mr. Pashitch, the Serbian Premier who is now in London has announced that he would like to have a vote of the people living in the Slavic provinces of Austria to decide whether they wish to join Serbia or to organize a separate state of their own. This is a practical following of Mr. Wilson's principle that the people themselves should determine the form of government under which they are to live. The introduction of this plan throughout the world will be one of the greatest benefits of the war.

Denmark has demanded of Germany that a vote be taken in the provinces of Schleswig-Holstein to determine whether or not they shall remain German or be returned to Denmark. Their seizure by Prussia from her northern neighbor constituted just as great a piece of territorial robbery as did the taking of Alsace-Lorraine from France, only it happened a few decades further back, so that German may be hoping that it will not be disturbed in the grand settlement and readjustment of territories which is about to take place in Europe.

Thanksgiving Turkey for the world this year will probably be the carcass of the Central Empires. It will take pretty careful carving to make it go round because there will be several new guests at the table. Poland Bohemia, and Jugo-Slavia must all have liberal slices, and Serbia and Rumania must be helped to something more than the dressing. Italy must come in for a piece of the southwestern part, and France's plate will be piled high with Alsace-Lorraine.

Peter's Loan.

"Lend me thy boat," the Master kindly said

To Simon, wearied with unfruitful toil.
He lent it gladly, asking but the smile
Of Him who had not where to lay His head.

But Jesus knows our need of daily bread,

And will be no man's debtor. If awhile
He uses Simon's boat, in kingly style
He will repay—a hundred-fold instead.
And Peter's Lord, as yesterday the same,

Walking, though now unseen, among His own,

Still condescends to ask from each a loan.

Oh, humble toiler, when He calls thy name,

Lend Him thy all. The Master ne'er forgets

Discouraged fishermen or empty nets.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS AND REUNITED CHRISTENDOM.

Mr. Editor: The recent interchange of letters of Christian love and esteem that have passed between some of our American Bishops and the Russian Church (which we often term the "Greek Church" because it represents a development of the Greek branch of the original Church and not a development of Western or Roman Christianity with its center at Rome), signifies a longing on the part of these bodies, or parts of the body, to effect a closer relationship.

There seems to be a tendency in American Protestantism to draw its separate parts and divisions into a closer organization. Men are saying that the war is breaking down denominational barriers and welding these forces into a unity of the spirit in the bond of peace.

This is a consummation devoutly to be wished, but it is not all that God's Word seems to require:

If the Church is a Kingdom it is nowhere said to be a monarchy. The King, the Head, the only King and the only Head named in the Gospel or the other Scriptures of the New Testament, is the Lord Jesus Christ Himself. Yet this King and Head sent at Pentecost and declared as His vicegerent upon earth the Holy Spirit whom He sent from the Father.

Now, the Holy Spirit of God must be able to speak or he could not guide the affairs of the Kingdom at all. A voiceless vicegerent could not perform his function of leadership and direction of the Church.

It was generally thought that the Councils of Bishops, the ecumenical Councils of the early centuries expressed the voice of the Holy Spirit, the will of Jesus Christ, the King and Head of His Body, the Church.

A new factor is arising in the world to point the way toward a solution of our problem of getting the voice of the Holy Spirit heard and accepted by every part and every individual who are comprehended in the Kingdom of God on earth. For the moment we may consider the Kingdom and the Church to be coterminous. This is a concession to such as believe the Church to be a kingdom. The downfall of monarchies and the uprearing of republics is at hand. The overthrow of autocrats and the rule of democracy is at hand. The representative government of the people, for the people, by the people, is winning its way upon the earth.

Can the Roman monarchy remain an autocracy, a kingdom amid the general change that is near?

Shall not the representative principle prevail in the Roman organization, and shall not the remodeled organization of the Roman branch of the Church then be accepted as a valid and integral part of the Holy Catholic Church, with which branch the rest of Christendom can confer and determine upon closer affiliation and a real organic unification?

There can be no Christian unity with Roman Christianity left out. Nor with the Russo-Greek Christianity left out. Nor with the Anglican branch of Christianity left out, including the Episcopal Church in these United States. We can certainly pray, and it is our duty to pray on scriptural grounds for the growth of the principle of consiliar expression in the Roman Communion. We can and ought to pray for the loosening of the tight bonds of monarchical control in the Roman organization.

Kaiserism, Caesarism, monarchical rule, are growing rapidly unfashionable upon God's earth. This is the center of hierarchy. "Ye shall sit upon thrones judging the twelve tribes," Christ's promise to the twelve, is fully balanced by His statement, "Let him that is chief among you become as he that doth serve." "If I your Lord and Master have washed your feet, ye ought also to wash one another's feet," cannot mean a formal ceremonial act. It must mean and does mean, let the Bishop be the true servant. Let the priest or the minister be a minister indeed, lowly, humble and self-sacrificing, like the Saviour Himself.

It is not the idea of a priest offering the sacrifice of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ as the agent and servant of the people present that is repugnant to and unpopular with our national democratic mind. It is the insidious power of the priest, the arrogance and haughtiness of Bishops, and the cruelty and tyranny of medieval Papal rulers that men and women detest and abominate, just as they do the same things in Kaiser Wilhelm. And for the same reason. Both are ungodly and unscriptural and contrary to the teaching of Jesus Christ. Could the whole Church on earth be organized with ministers duly ordained according to Apostolic practice, organized into Dioceses, guided each by a true shepherd or Bishop, with national conventions and an international or ecumenical representative Council at intervals of five years or so, I can see no reason why the Church could not be so reorganized and reunited according to the mode of organization that seems to have prevailed in the first two or three centuries.

The Methodist Episcopal and Presbyterian bodies would not require much readjustment, the Baptist bodies might be allowed with full authority the practicing of immersion, even adult immersion in any case where infant baptism was not acceptable to the believer as entirely adequate. Lutheran bodies and the Christian principles would not find such an organization distasteful, especially if lay representation in the original group conventions became an accepted principle.

As to liturgical modes of worship, the great liturgical forms of the past should be utilized, but great liberty in the use of ejaculatory, impromptu and extemporaneous prayer should be granted.

We have no more right to gag individual members of the Church to-day than St. Paul did in his day. But to lose the liturgical glories of the past would be as silly as to give up the Old Testament itself because we have the New. When the Holy Spirit in the whole Body of the Church had free expression, the pneumatic gifts would be multiplied and the voice of the Christianized people would become more and more the voice of God. An enlightened and reunited Church would become the stabilizer of society, the bulwark against selfish nationalism and the agency by which the former kingdoms of this world should become the Kingdom of our God and His Christ.

A FORM OF SERVICE FOR SUNDAY-SCHOOLS OR CHILDREN'S SERVICE.

Mr. Editor: Enclosed please find copy of "An Order of Service for Children," which has just been sent me by the Canadian Sunday-school Commission as adopted by the Synod of the Church of England in Canada.

I met with the Sunday-school Commission and was glad to take part in their discussions. What an advance step it is to have in the Canadian Prayer Book a special prayer service for children which, it is hoped, will be used by all Sunday-schools.

In our own Church each rector or superintendent does "what is right in his own eyes" in choosing a service, and the result is the greatest diversity and lack of unity. This service is most admirable and I sincerely trust something like it, with perhaps one or two changes, will be adopted and included in our coming revision of the Prayer Book. Will you not please print it in full and ask for criticism so that the mind of the Church may be prepared to take action at the next General Convention in Detroit?

JAMES HENRY DARLINGTON.
The Bishop's House, Harrisburg, Pa.,
October 22, 1918.

The Editor regrets that the excellent Order of Service enclosed by Bishop Darlington is too long for publication in full, but doubtless a copy of it will be furnished the Commission on Prayer Book Revision, and we would be glad to see it printed at least as an appendix to that book. The service follows in the following order:

A short Invocation.
Sentences of Scripture.
A Form of Confession (or the General Confession).
Prayer for Pardon (or the Absolution).
The Lord's Prayer, and Versicles.
Gloria Patri.
A Psalm.
A Lesson.
A Canticle or Hymn.
Creed.

Here may follow a short Sermon or Address or Catechising.

Here may follow a Hymn.
Versicles, Collect for the Day, two or more Prayers from the Prayer Book or from these following:

O Lord God, who didst reveal Thyself to Thy prophet Samuel while he was yet a child; grant unto us whom Thou hast made Thy children by adoption and grace, that we may above all things seek to know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent; and in all our learning grant us to fear and love Thy Holy Name; through the same our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

O Lord Jesus Christ, who didst sit lowly in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them and, asking them questions; be with us who are assembled in Thy Name, and grant to those who teach a right understanding of Thy Holy Word, and to those who learn, a readiness to hear and do Thy blessed will, who livest and reignest with the Father and the Holy Spirit, one God, world without end. Amen.

Heavenly Father, we thank Thee for loving us and for sending Thy dear Son into the world to save us from our sins. We pray to Thee for all who do not know of Thy love both at home and in foreign lands. Grant that through the work of our missionaries, they may be led to confess the faith of Christ crucified, and may with us become soldiers and servants in Thy Holy Church, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Almighty and everlasting God, who makest us both to will and to do those things that be good and acceptable unto Thy Divine Majesty; we make our humble supplications unto Thee for Thy favor and gracious goodness towards all teachers and scholars in our Sunday-schools. Let Thy fatherly hand, we beseech Thee, ever be over them; let Thy Holy Spirit ever be with them; and so lead them in the knowledge and obedience of Thy Word that in the end they may obtain everlasting life; through our Lord Jesus Christ, who with Thee and the Holy Ghost liveth and reigneth ever one God, world without end. Amen.

For Sunday-schools.

O Holy Lord and Saviour, who didst call little children unto Thee and bless them; guide, we pray Thee, Thy Church in the teaching of the young, that it may wisely order the work of our Sunday-schools and strive earnestly to feed the lambs of Thy flock. Grant alike to pastors and people to see and know the greatness of this work, and give us grace to fulfil it. Make us ever mindful of Thy presence in our homes, that our children may be brought up in Thy nurture and admonition. Give to teachers aptness to teach, and to our scholars willingness to learn Thy blessed will. All this we ask in Thy Name, O merciful Saviour, whom with the Father and the Holy Spirit, we worship as one God, blessed forever. Amen.

O God, our loving Father, we thank Thee for all the blessings Thou hast given us and, above all, for our salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ. Help us to show forth our thankfulness by trying in everything to please Thee; for the sake of the same, our Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

Almighty God, who hast promised to hear the petitions of them that ask in Thy Son's Name; we beseech Thee mercifully to incline Thine ears to us, that have now made our prayers and supplications unto Thee; and grant that those things, which we have faithfully asked, according to Thy will, may effectually be obtained, to the relief of our necessity, and the setting forth of Thy glory; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ and the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost, be with us all evermore. Amen.

A REMARKABLE GROUP AND A NOTABLE WORK.

By B. F. Finney, Chief Secretary, Army and Navy Department, Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

It has been the writer's good fortune to be thrown during the past year in close contact with a very remarkable group of men and to have had the privilege of seeing much of a very notable work that they are doing among the soldiers and sailors, gathered in the various camps throughout the country.

It is a work that means much—more than can be told—to make our boys fit to live. It means much to our nation in helping our boys, to help make the world fit for Christ's Kingdom, and it means more to the Church than the Church dreams of, in holding our boys close to her and her teachings.

During the year that has passed since our boys in khaki and blue commenced to gather by the hundreds of thousands into the various camps and training stations, a man who is a wizard in his knowledge of men's character, has been quietly drawing out from their business some eighty men, who have been sent out, one to each camp, to help our boys to live right amid the new surroundings in which they find themselves. Some of these men are young and some are old in years, most of them are middle-aged, and all are young in spirit. They have been drawn from all walks in life, from all professions; there are lawyers and clerks and students, active and retired business men among them. No two of them are alike save in this one thing, in which they are all alike, that they are loyal Churchmen with an overwhelming love for men and a desire to serve God and men. In camps from coast to coast and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, these men, without mechanical equipment of any sort and without any blare of trumpets or noise of publicity, are quietly, from day to day, doing a work which has no parallel in all the good work that is being done among the men with the colors.

From the beginning of the mobilization of our forces, the great heart of America has throbbed to give everything that our fighting boys would need, to see that they were guarded from unnecessary temptations, and well has the work been done.

One organization alone, that the writer knows, among all the hundreds that began to work for our soldiers and sailors, announced at the beginning that it had no material help to give, but rather was going to demand that our boys should give, not money—but service to God, among their comrades. It was not at first a popular movement, and many there were that doubted its practicability and its need. But as the weeks and months have passed and the life of the camp becomes more and more the normal life of our boys, the need of just this work becomes more apparent, and more and more does it appeal. It is this work that these men of whom I write are doing and the story of the way it is being done is as full of heart thrills as is that of the student in arms.

It is of the life and work of these men that the head of one of the bureaux of the great international laymen's work writes: "They have not only been an inspiration to our secretaries in their lives and service but their emphasis upon personal evangelism has proved contagious to the Christian men in the camp."

The position of these men is absolutely unique. They have no official standing. They are not even official representatives in any sense of the word. They are there simply to do a layman's work in a layman's way. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew, through the help of the Church's War Commission, has arranged it so these men shall not have to worry about the support of their families while they are giving their entire time to this work and through its organization the Brotherhood acts as a clearing house that each may know the best ways of getting results that others have found. And the results are coming, hundreds of men are being brought to baptism and confirmation by their comrades under the leadership of these men. Thousands are being brought closer in touch with their Church and countless thousands are being helped, by the work of the little groups these men are organizing, to live cleaner, better lives and to fight as valiant Christian soldiers to make the world fit as well as safe for the true democracy of Christ's Kingdom.

LESSONS FOR THE DAY.

The Rev. Dr. Carl E. Grammer, of St. Stephen's Church, Philadelphia, sends the following message to his people from his "closed pulpit" through the Public Ledger of that city:

They have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace, when there is no peace.—Jer. 6:14.

This stern rebuke was administered by Jeremiah to the false prophets who were more solicitous to comfort the anxieties and allay the apprehensions of their followers than they were zealous to bring out the realities of the situation and to define its duties.

The churches need Jeremiahs in their pulpits to-day. We must be on guard against prophets who cry peace too soon.

In national affairs we do not want any peace with our enemy until the foundations of a righteous order have been laid and the disturbers of the world's peace have been sufficiently schooled.

We are willing to meet them after the principles of the most enlightened philanthropy. We will discipline them with an eye not to vengeance, but to their reform; but before the work of reformation can begin, the criminal must first be caught and sentenced.

Before our remedial treatment can be administered to the Central nations of Europe, and especially to Germany, it is essential that those peoples be made to realize that they are international criminals and are no more entitled to sit with other nations in a council and vote upon the final settlement than the prisoner at the bar is entitled to take a seat and have a vote in the jury that is trying him.

Justice and mercy must be joined together in our Christianity. Our churches must not take a superficial sentimental view of this great question of the right treatment of nations that have played for years the part of robbers, murderers and pirates. We must highly resolve that the work to which we have set our hands shall be thoroughly done and the foundations of the new order laid in righteousness.

Neither must we cry "Peace, peace," too soon at home. In this time of civic trouble we must not be too eager for comfort or too anxious to console or be consoled. Now that so many of our people have been smitten down by the pestilence, that has not walked in darkness, but has been seen afar off approaching our city, an enemy that found our gates open, we must not try to lighten the heaviness of sorrow by whispering, "It is the Lord's will."

It is indeed God's will that we are so bound together in the bundle of life that we answer individually for our corporate sins, and the negligence of one is often the loss of many. But it is not His will that we should supinely allow evil conditions to continue.

We ought to inquire, How can these epidemics be more efficiently handled? How can our city be made less subject to their influence? How can we secure cleaner streets, more sanitary homes? Now is the time to arouse ourselves. What we want is not consolation for Rachel mourning for her children, but the vote for Rachel that she may secure a clean city for her babes.

We need an awakening to the obligations of Christian citizenship. Deaf to the warnings of our civic prophets of righteousness, or wearied with defeat, we had given up any strenuous efforts for reform as the delusive pursuit of a rainbow. Perhaps we will heed death's knocks upon our doors, knocking at homes of rich and poor, but mostly of the poor. It may be the long line of hearses traveling to our cemeteries is the only parade that can arouse our patriotism. What we want is not comfortable words, but true words. We want to see things as they are, in order that we may ascertain the path of wisdom and bring about the things that ought to be.

"SILENT MOMENT" IN RED CROSS WORK-ROOMS THROUGHOUT LAND.

Beginning Wednesday, October 23, a minute of silence will reign in Red Cross workrooms throughout the United States, at the hour of noon daily, while thoughts are concentrated on and prayers breathed for the sons of America who are facing the enemies of liberty in foreign lands and on the high seas. This impressive "Silent Moment" has been observed by the women of England for several months. It was inaugurated at the American Red Cross national headquarters in Washington on October 3, following the reading by Mrs. August Belmont, assistant to the War Council, of this preamble and resolution:

"The steady flow of Red Cross supplies to our own people and to our Allies is an evidence of the loyalty, devotion and service of our Red Cross workers. The assistance given is to a great degree material, but a spirit permeates each gift which immeasurably transcends the value of the gift itself.

"We desire to preserve this spirit as the inspiration of our service. We hope as the work of our fighting force increases that now more than ever Red Cross workers will make apparent our kinship of thought as well as kinship of effort, even through the rush and stress of active work.

"Therefore, at a meeting of the War Council, held on Wednesday, October 2, it was

"Resolved, That every day at the hour of noon, in every workroom of the American Red Cross, throughout the whole of these United States, upon a given signal, all work shall cease for a period of one minute. During this time, in silence, we will solemnly concentrate our minds upon our beloved soldiers and sailors overseas who are so nobly offering their all, even unto their lives, for us. We will think as one, hope as one, for their definite victory and their individual well being; consecrating ourselves anew to our country and to those who fight, labor and suffer for her, becoming one with them in service. May this united prayer, gathering power from our love and faith, mount to Heaven itself, descending thence in the midst of our dear ones wherever they may be, fall upon them as a benediction, to be at all times their comfort and their strength."

RELIGION, LIKE CHARITY, BEGINS AT HOME.

"You can tell them every time! The boys who have been brought up under the influence of the Church are the boys who are seeking and finding opportunities to attend Church services in camp."

This is the statement of not only one Secretary of the Army and Navy Department, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, it is the consensus of opinion of all of them. From the following letter, it would appear to be the conviction also of officers of high rank, as Colonel H. _____, of the F. A., A. E. F., writes:

"It has been my experience that the men who are most closely identified with their several churches are the men who give no trouble and can always be relied upon to conduct themselves correctly in any emergency. The men who have no moral or religious anchorages, are the ones who get on the rocks and come up again and again for discipline."

Last week two Field Secretaries came into Central Office, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, and in a general discussion, one of them said, concerning men in a large hospital where he had been working:

"It is pitiful to see those 2,000 men, and to know that so many of them possess absolutely nothing in the way of spiritual food which they can use in their time of physical disability. Their faces express discontent and distress, they have nothing substantial to hold fast to."

The other, who has been working in a smaller camp, but doing much intimate, personal work among men of all ranks, said:

"You've got to trace a man's religious influence farther back than the camp. If he hasn't had something before he entered the service, you're going to be careful how you feed him. It isn't hard to tell that the men who constantly use profanity of the worst brand have not attended Sunday-school regularly while they were at home."

It would seem that the responsibility of the home and of the home parish has now met a splendid testing time. It is well for parents and for ministers to stop now and ask themselves whether they are using their utmost endeavors to teach the young men in their care the far-reaching benefit and invaluable worth of a Christian character, a character which will stand inviolate when cast upon its own resources as firmly as when under the protection and shelter of home and of Church.

"These are times when men's souls are tried," and blessed indeed are those young men of ours who are tried and not found wanting.

"BACK TO SCHOOL."

"The school is your training camp. Don't be a deserter." This is what the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor is saying to the thousands of children who are leaving the schools for industry, dazzled by the present high wages offered. Jobs that offer very little training, and less hope of a future are being taken unquestioningly by the youngsters who "don't like school anyway," and think they are "old enough to work," or who feel the urge of home necessity.

The Children's Bureau has just announced a Back-to-School Drive, whose object may be stated in the President's words, "That no child may have less opportunity for education because of the war." The drive will attempt two things: to return to the schools and keep there the children who have deserted them for industry, and to keep the children now in school from leaving prematurely. The actual work of the drive will be done through the Child Conservation Section of the Council of National Defense, which is organized into State, county and local units. In each school community committees are being formed whose first duty will be to study child labor and school attendance laws. After that they will go to the county superintendent, the school principals and teachers to get accurate lists of the children who have not returned to school. Then begins the real work of getting the children back. Parents will be called upon, and the committee members will talk over with them why it is important not only to the child but to the country that he be well prepared for work before attempting it.

The refusal of the Federal Government to employ children in essential industries gives point to the Bureau's contention that they should not be allowed to be employed to furnish a cheap source of labor for non-essentials. The War Labor Policies Board, which is composed of representatives of all the departments directly concerned in the prosecution of the war, has made a definite ruling that children under fourteen shall not be employed on war work and that children between fourteen and sixteen shall not be employed on war work for more than eight hours a day or six days a week, or between 7 P. M. and 6 A. M. This action has been followed by a general order to all branch offices from the Director of the United States Employment Service.

The Bureau emphasizes the fact that the success of the Drive depends largely on an educated and intelligent public opinion which will insist upon the complete enforcement of child labor and school attendance laws, and demand that each community shall see to it that its children are not deprived of schooling because of poverty. The school welfare committees are urged to secure for their communities the visiting teachers, vocational advisors and similar means of guarding the school child's well-being which have proved their value in other localities.

Church Intelligence

Bishop Thurston in Charge of Missionary District of Oklahoma.

Because of the death of Bishop Brooke on October 22d, the Presiding Bishop has appointed the Rt. Rev. Theodore Payne Thurston, D. D., the Bishop of Eastern Oklahoma, to be his substitute in charge of the missionary District of Oklahoma.

DANIEL S. TUTTLE,
Presiding Bishop.

Bishop Payne Divinity School: The Bishop Payne Divinity School for colored students, Petersburg, Va., begins this session with nine students, and one or two more are expected. The number of students already is equal to that of last session, which is an agreeable surprise, as it was feared and expected that war conditions would seriously affect the school.

Death of the Bishop of Colorado.

The Rt. Rev. Charles Sanford Olmsted, S. T. D., D. D., Bishop of Colorado, died on October 21, at his home in Saybrook, Conn., after an illness of three years. Bishop Olmsted was born in 1853 at Olmstedville, N. Y., was a graduate of the General Theological Seminary, and had spent his entire ministry previous to his consecration in New York and Pennsylvania.

He was consecrated Bishop of Colorado on May 1, 1902, but was forced to come East to live about three years ago, as he could not stand the high altitude of Colorado. Bishop Irving P. Johnson was consecrated Bishop-Coadjutor to carry on his work.

Plan for Assistance to the Chaplains Through the Voluntary Service of Clergymen in the Camps.

Those who have taken an interest in the important services rendered in our army camps by the camp pastors and were disturbed by the possible consequences of a recent order of the adjutant-general terminating the services of these voluntary workers, will be gratified to learn that the War Department has approved a plan by which voluntary services of clergymen are to continue to be available to supplement the ministrations of the regularly commissioned chaplains.

The matter of the voluntary service of clergymen in the camps has been the subject of frequent conference between representatives of the churches and of the War Department, which has taken a sincere and sympathetic interest in the moral and religious welfare of the men. It is earnestly desirous of encouraging and assisting the chaplains in their important work and has given careful attention to the considerations urged by the churches in favor of continuing the services of the camp pastors. Through the General War-Time Commission of the Churches a conference was arranged between Dr. Frederick P. Keppel, Third Assistant Secretary of War, and a committee, which included representatives selected by the several Protestant denominations. As a result of this conference, and at the suggestion of Secretary Keppel, a committee was appointed to confer with representatives of the War Department. After thorough discussion of the whole problem this committee formulated a plan by which the denominational authorities are to nominate clergymen qualified to render efficient service in the camps. Their names, after approval by the Executive Committee of the General War-Time Commission of the Churches, will be filed with the War Department and their services placed at the disposal of the regular chaplains for assistance in the immense task of ministering to the religious needs of the thousands of men in the cantonments of this country.

Aid For Sailors in Port of New York.

Influenza victims among sailors in the port of New York are receiving aid in large numbers from some of the organizations doing work for sailors here, according to observations made at the Sailors' Home and Institute on the North River water front. This Sailors' Home is conducted by the American Seamen's Friend Society, 76 Wall Street, which reports that they have thus far been able to take care of scores of sailors convalescing from the epidemic.

These sailors were taken ill on board ship and all of them are from ocean liners engaged in the transportation of supplies or men across the Atlantic. Although the absence of these men from their posts on board ship has to some extent lessened the working force, it is said that they are convalescing rapidly and that those who have thus far been at the Sailors' Home have been able to return to their work after a week or ten days.

No cases of Influenza have originated at the Sailors' Home during this epidemic.

Demand for sleeping quarters on the part of sailors doing trans-Atlantic service to and from the port of New York is almost exceeding the supply, judging by observations made at the American Seamen's Friend Society, which maintains a large Sailors' Home at 507 West Street.

The society reports that for at least six weeks back the call for rooms, both on the part of the officers and men, has established a record in the society's history. The figures show that as many as one hundred officers of merchant ships are obliged to seek other quarters each month and that the number of seamen is proportionately large. The only convenient quarters that are left for these men are in lodging houses on or near the North River waterfront, the better grade of which are, it is said, also taxed to capacity.

The society maintains Sailors' Homes in a number of ports in this country and abroad, and records at these points also indicate an exceedingly busy season.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. R. A. Gibson, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Coadjutor.

A Word of Counsel From the Bishop.

Of the many calls for help coming constantly to the people of our churches, some must be made prominent because of their extreme urgency.

Bishop Gibson asks that the following be kept constantly before the minds of the people of the Diocese of Virginia, and especially the Church people and Sunday-school children:

1. The calls of the government for loans and taxes.

2. The calls of the War-Work Campaign, Red Cross and other organizations for war service.

3. The food conservation suggestions and instructions. The number of starving people in the world whom America must feed is greater this year than last year, and seventeen million tons of food is required, so Mr. Hoover tells us, saying at the same time that last year we sent more than eleven million tons.

4. The Sunday-schools are requested to remember in a special way the awful heart-breaking sufferings of the people of Bible lands. Of these, something like a million were helped last year. This year three million and a half depend on the Allies to save them from starvation. Money can be used for these people.

5. Our Church societies must not be allowed to fall behind; missions, home charities, personal work for the dependent have enlisted our interest in the past, to keep them up is an obligation.

Every service in the church should be used to give a reminder of these liens on our lives, sometimes general, sometimes specific. In that way the leadership of the Clergy can be made to count.

Death of Mrs. Margaret Micou Daniel.

Mrs. Margaret Micou Daniel, the wife of J. M. Daniel, Jr., Episcopal High School, Alexandria, Va., on October 16, died from pneumonia in the thirty-third year of her age. Mrs. Daniel was the daughter of the late Rev. R. W. Micou, D. D., the well-known professor of the Virginia Theological Seminary. Mrs. Daniel held an important place in the community life of the High School and Theological Seminary. She is survived by her husband and three young children, and also by her mother and two brothers, Rev. Paul Micou, Collegiate Secretary of the General Board of Religious Education, and Lieutenant Richard D. Micou, U. S. N. R. F.

The Rev. Robert A. Jackson, rector of St. Philip's Church (colored), Richmond, has been appointed Assistant State Director of the Colored Division of the United War Work Campaign.

MARYLAND.

Rt. Rev. J. G. Murray, D. D., Bishop.

Death of the Rev. Dr. J. J. Sams.

The Rev. Julius J. Sams, D. D., rector emeritus of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Baltimore, and the oldest clergyman in the Diocese of Maryland, died at his home in Baltimore on October 16, after a brief illness of pneumonia, following influenza, aged ninety-three years.

Dr. Sams was a native of South Carolina, graduated at the Theological Seminary in Virginia in 1854, was ordained deacon the same year by Bishop Meade and priest in 1855 by Bishop Johns. He held charges in Summerville, Chester and Yorkville, S. C., and was the second rector of Meade Memorial Church, South Richmond, Va. He was rector of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Baltimore, for twenty-five years, and for the past fifteen years rector emeritus. He is survived by one son, Mr. Conway Sams, two daughters and six grandchildren.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. R. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thompson, D. D., Suffragan.

To the Parish Branches of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

My Dear Fellow-Workers: Miss Jane Neely, of Portsmouth, who has proven so efficient as our Box Secretary, has been obliged to resign this office, but we are most fortunate in securing the services of Miss Aurelia Davis, of St. Paul's, Lynchburg, for this position.

One of the chief regrets of the postponement of our annual meeting was that it might cause our mountain missionaries to fail to receive the help of the boxes usually pledged to them at these meetings, upon which they so largely depend; so I am asking all our branches that have usually given these boxes, and any that feel they can help in this way, to write at once to Miss Davis asking her where their help is needed, and I also ask the missionary workers to write to her, telling what their needs are. Her address is Miss Aurelia Davis, 215 Harrison Street, Lynchburg, Va.

Already appealing letters are coming to me, telling how great is the need for these boxes and asking if they will not be sent this year.

We all realize that everything seems chaotic this autumn, but there is all the more need, that without waiting for the stimulation of our annual meeting, and the inspiration that our mountain missionaries always give us, we should promptly rally to their aid, knowing well what it has meant to them in the years past, and what a loss its absence would be now.

Mrs. Lindsay Patton, 3 University Place, Lexington, Va., has been appointed leader of the war plan of the Woman's Auxiliary for the Diocese of Southern Virginia, and all letters of inquiry regarding it should be addressed to her.

There has been some little delay in starting the work in this Diocese, as Bishop Tucker consented to its being undertaken, only when assured from the Mission House in New York that no prayers, which he could not endorse, would be distributed in this Diocese.

LOULIE TAYLOR LETCHER,
Diocesan President.

October 26, 1918.

The Rev. Arthur P. Gray, Sr., has moved to Salem, Va., where he can be addressed for the future.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt, D. D., Bishop.

The three Episcopal churches in Wheeling, have, with others in the city, been closed during the month of October, and there is a fear that the quarantine may extend even longer than this month, for though the epidemic seems to be abating in the city, many are afflicted in the nearby towns. The autumn meeting of the Kanawha Convocation, which was to have been held in Beckley, was for this reason interrupted, the health officer ruling "all public gatherings off the program." The business of the Convocation was carried out in two sessions.

The various branches of the Woman's Auxiliary in the Diocese are more or less active, in responding to the request of the President, Mrs. Peterkin, in aid of the immediate wants of the Sheltering Arms Hospital. Naturally much church work has been hindered in the Diocese, but the President says, "It must gladden the heart of our Heavenly Father that His children are learning to give as He gives, freely and lovingly . . . it is the heart behind the gift that I am so pleased with."

The Rev. F. Alan Parsons, who has accepted a call to Lowell, Delaware, will doubtless, ere this have left Roncerverte.

Rev. Albert N. Slayton, of Uniontown, Pa., who has accepted the call of the vestry of St. John's Church, Charleston, expects to enter on his duties there early in November.

NEWARK.

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Rev. Malcolm A. Shipley, rector of Trinity Church, Hoboken, has been appointed Archdeacon of Jersey City, which district includes Hudson County and Bergen County, east of the Hackensack River.

The Rev. Robert S. Hooper, who graduated at the General Seminary this year and was ordained deacon on Ascension Day, died of pneumonia in the hospital at Fort Oglethorpe, Georgia, on October 16. Desiring to be in the service of the government he enlisted and was on duty in the hospital assisting the chaplains in distinctly religious work, hoping in due time to prepare himself to be a United States chaplain. His many friends were not only very fond of him as a very attractive young man, but had large hopes concerning his usefulness in the ministry.

The Rev. John I. Bridges, from 1909-1911 rector of Trinity Church, Arlington, and thereafter rector of St. John's Church, Montclair, until compelled to resign by broken health, died at his winter home, in Orlando, Florida on October 21 of pneumonia, at the age of forty-seven. He was a very attractive man, an excellent preacher and in the two parishes which he had served there had been a remarkable response to his work.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. C. Whitehead, D. D., Bishop.

Attendance of Children at Church: The Bishop of the Diocese has appointed the Rev. Messrs. Brown and Porkess and R. R. Calvin, Ph. D., lay assistant at the Church of the Ascension, Pittsburgh, to formulate plans and submit them to the Clergy at the November meeting of the Clerical Union, for arousing interest in the attendance of children at the regular church services. Mr. Porkess is chairman of the committee.

Losses: During October the Church in the Diocese has lost two of its oldest vestrymen, namely, Mr. John W. O'Neal, long time vestryman of the Church of the Nativity, Crafton and for many years its senior warden, who was stricken with apoplexy on October 2, while serving as a juror. His body was taken for burial to his old home at Steubenville, Ohio. Dr. Francis G. Gardiner entered into rest at Passavant Hospital on October 22, succumbing in a few days to an attack of pneumonia. He was a practicing physician in the Lawrenceville section of the city for thirty-five years, for thirty of which he served as a vestryman in St. John's parish, and was senior warden for a long term of years. Burial was made at Mt. Forest, Ontario, where he was born.

Postponements: Owing to the prevalence of influenza and pneumonia all over the Diocese, the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, which was to the churches of San Antonio since October have been held at St. Thomas' Memorial Church, Oakmont, has been postponed, and will probably be held in connection with the Annual Convention of the Diocese in January. Also the festival service and reception set for October 30, Bishop Whitehead's seventy-sixth birthday, to celebrate the jubilee of his ordination and his golden wedding, have been indefinitely postponed partly for the same reason, and because, although the Bishop is recovering from the effect of his late operation, he is still confined to the hospital, and would be unable to stand the necessary exertion of such functions.

MISSOURI.

Rt. Rev. D. S. Tuttle, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. F. F. Johnson, D. D., Coadjutor.

Churches Throughout Diocese Closed.

Because of the prevalence of influenza, the health authorities closed all churches in St. Louis and throughout the Diocese. The Bishop of the Diocese at once sent out letters to the Clergy, suggesting that, in acceding to the orders which had been issued in the interests of public health and safety, the people of the Church should make good use of the greater opportunity now given to renew the old-fashioned custom of family prayer.

The Bishop Tuttle Commemorative Church, in St. Mary's parish, St. Louis, is not yet wholly completed, but the first service under its roof was held the Sunday before all churches were closed by the influenza epidemic. The Rev. L. H. White, pastor of the congregation, celebrated the Holy Communion at an early hour. Later, the Bishop-Coadjutor celebrated the Holy Communion, assisted by the Rev. Mr. White, and preached the sermon. The new building, with the beautiful lots on which it stands, is costing about $35,000. It is hoped that it may be dedicated in a few weeks.

Sister Eliza died after a brief illness in St. Luke's Hospital, St. Louis, on the Feast of St. Luke the Evangelist. Some twenty years ago, Sister Eliza was a member of the staff of Christ Church Cathedral, busy in all good works among the poor and the unfortunate. For a dozen years she has lived retired from active duty on a little farm among the Ozark Mountains in southeast Missouri. Here she gathered children about her and instructed them in the teachings of the Church and exerted a constant, purposeful influence for good on the rough dwellers in the hills. Sister Eliza's early home was in New York. She was trained in the Sisterhood of St. Mary, and had lived to her seventieth year.

WEST TEXAS.

Rt. Rev. Wm. T. Capers, D. D., Bishop.

The Church schools of the Diocese, St. Mary's Hall and the West Texas Military Academy, have opened with an unusually large enrollment of students. The Academy has an organized unit of the Student Army Training Corps, with a considerable enrollment of men.

The Church Congress, which was to have held a meeting in San Antonio in 1919, has been postponed. It was felt by the Executive Committee that a general session at this time would be impracticable on account of the unsettled conditions. It is hoped that a meeting of the Congress will be held in San Antonio at a later date.

No public services have been held in her 3, in compliance with the requirements of the Board of Health made to meet the conditions due to the epidemic of influenza. The same state prevails largely throughout the Diocese. At St. Mark's, San Antonio, intercessions are said on Sunday morning with small groups in the church. In St. Mark's and in other parishes the Holy Communion is being celebrated with several invited individuals present.

The State Assembly of the Daughters of the King, which was to have held a session of three days in San Antonio, beginning October 25, has been postponed on account of the epidemic of influenza. The dates announced are November 22, 23 and 24.

The Rev. Carl H. Williams, formerly in charge of Indianola and associate missions of Inverness and Belzoni, Miss., has resigned and returned to his home in the West.

Ordinations.

On Sunday, October 13, in St. John's Chapel, Racine College, Wis., the Bishop of Milwaukee ordained to the diaconate Mr. Clarence Arthur Kopp, presented by the Rev. B. Talbot Rogers, D. D., who also preached the sermon. Mr. Kopp will remain at Racine College as instructor.

Deaths.

The Rev. Frank Hallam, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Jackson, Miss., died on September 14 in that city. Funeral services were conducted in St. Andrew's Church on the 16th by the Bishop of the Diocese.

The Rev. B. Wellington Paxton, rector of St. Andrew's Church (colored), Cleveland, Ohio, died in that city on September 25. Burial was at Waterbury, Vt.

"You may say what you like against young ministers, but I have nothing but praise for our young pastor," the pompous Mr. Brown remarked, as he passed out of the Church. "Nothing but praise!"

"So I observed," dryly retorted the deacon who had passed the plate.—Harper's.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

PRACTICAL BROTHERHOOD WORK.

We consider the efforts being put forth by the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in Richmond, Va., at its Soldiers', Sailors' and Marines' Club to be of such a thoroughly practical and Christian character that we quote liberally from their first annual report.

This was one of the first organizations of its kind in the country, and we are told in the following words of its activities:

Surrounded by beautiful flowers, vines and plants of all sorts and kinds, once a handsome old Virginia home and residence, is now this club. This was the first club organized in the United States of America for soldiers, sailors and marines. It is undenominational, the uniform of the United States Government being the badge of admittance. The club is heated by furnace and roaring open fireplaces—cheerful, bright, and homelike.

During the past nine months a committee has met the soldiers at the depot in South Richmond and brought thousands of them over in a large truck to the corner of Fifth and Grace Streets to the club, where they found games of all kinds, stationery, soft mattresses and clean linen, barber, baths, boot-black, etc., on premises. During the winter apples were given for the free use of all who were present, and in the summer icy cold melons every Saturday afternoon from 6:30 to 7:30 o'clock. Many hearts have been made happy by delivering them from being the victims of misfortune; and the warm welcome given to all has won for Richmond an enviable name for genuine hospitality. All writing material, including post-cards, free to our guests; 25,000 sheets of writing paper, 10,000 envelopes, and 15,000 post-cards used by them; also 20,000 cigarettes, cheroots, bags of tobacco, etc.

All sick soldiers in the Memorial Hospital are visited each day by some member of the Brotherhood, and fruits, magazines, etc., carried to them, as well as good cheer and sunshine. Plenty of cigarettes and safety matches free to all guests of the club.

Sunday mornings phone messages have been sent to the club by our loyal and hospitable citizens inviting two to four, and occasionally six men were invited; 400 invited and accepted invitations to dine in private families, auto rides and sight-seeing; 1,800 meals served gratis during Christmas and 3,000 registered; at least 10,000 have taken advantage of the club rooms. Prayer Books have been given to those who desired to have them. The club has been the regular meeting place for the Clericus, also for the Diocesan, Educational and Missionary Societies.

The Junior members of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew have free access to the pool-room, and, a register is kept of those who enter; have been very successful in keeping boys off the streets. An auto harp was presented to Camp Lee for the sick soldiers by the club, and a handsome new Victrola, a cabinet and sixty records for the contagious ward at Camp Lee.

As we are now entering upon our second year, it is necessary for you to say whether this club is to be continued. We must provide for the rent, fuel, lights, water rent, printing, secretary, janitor, etc., etc.

We have a balance on hand to meet current expenses for several months to come, and we have paid all outstanding obligations. We own thirty-two double white iron beds, and fourteen single beds with soft mattresses, clean linen and blankets; towels, face and bath; silverware and crockery, four dozen plates, desk, six writing tables, chairs and settees for these writing rooms, pictures, rugs, flags, clocks, pool and billiard table. No funds are thrown away for high salaries; total of $100 per month for secretary and janitor; 3,000 shaves and hair cut and 5,000 boots blackened.

We also have a library of over four hundred books and leading magazines. If it is your pleasure to continue this good work, we will be pleased to hear from you. Four thousand ($4,000) dollars will be sufficient for the coming year's expenses, but we must know at an early date what we can depend upon for an income. This is the only club that has beds; no cots in this club; all homelike, and not like a camp.

A fire escape had to be erected for the safety of those sleeping in the club at a cost of $300.00, also boarding house license, etc., taken out.

Hundreds of uniforms mended, repaired and cleaned in our club at no cost to our guests.

Ten barrels of apples.

Smileage books also presented to visitors.

Visitors sleep as late as they wish to on Sunday.

Smoking allowed in all rooms except bed-rooms.

Porcelain bath tubs; hot and cold water on all floors.

A cordial welcome to all denominations.

Many soldiers, sailors and marines have been helped out of trouble and cared for by us when other organizations have turned them out on account of their condition. This is the place to bring or send our men; they are always welcome and cared for regardless of their condition. It is with very great pleasure that we can say no visitor has ever given us any trouble or anxiety whatsoever. This club is not for officers, but a club for privates.

The club is never closed to our men in uniform.

Have had as many as 105 men sleeping in the club at one time. Men of all denominations welcome.

On many occasions have men in uniform been substantially assisted when their private funds have been exhausted.

Hot coffee and sandwiches will be served to our guests every Sunday morning during this winter.

Many letters have been received by us acknowledging sincere and grateful appreciation for what has been done for our guests.

On Monday, October 7, 1918, your chairman, after having secured the consent of the majority of the Board of Directors, offered the Soldiers', Sailors' and Marines' Club, entirely furnished and complete, and ready to be occupied by the medical authorities of our State and city, for the free use of a hospital during the Spanish influenza epidemic. This was the first offer made by any institution in our city. It was accepted, but later on was not needed, so it was not occupied.

Respectfully submitted,
Henry Lee Valentine,
Chairman.

A SPECTACULAR HISTORICAL EVENT.

Nothing could have a more dramatic setting than the "Congress of Oppressed Peoples," which has been in session in Independence Hall, Philadelphia, for the past week or more.

It is not mere accident that the deliberations leading up to a declaration of independence for Europe should take place in the same building which saw the preparation and adoption of our declaration, for we are told by a Washington correspondent that at the invitation of the Mayor of Philadelphia and of the Patriotic Societies of America, representatives of nationalities comprising 65,000,000 people of Middle Europe left Washington on Tuesday afternoon for conferences to be held on October 25 and 26, in Independence Hall, Philadelphia. There, under the chairmanship of Professor T. G. Masaryk, Prime Minister of the newly organized Tzecho-Slovak Republic, the representatives will endeavor to draft a joint declaration of independence.

The nationalities include Bohemia, now united in the new Tzecho-Slovak Republic; Jugo-Slavia, Poland, Italian (Irredentist), Austria, Ukraina (Galicia), Lithuania, the Rumanian National League and the Uhro-Rusins. As the delegation left Washington Prime Minister Masaryk said:

"The following organizations and representatives are authorized to help in formulating a declaration of independence for their respective nations in Europe:

"John F. Smulski, for the Polish Committee; Dr. John Szlupas, for the Lithuanian National Council; Captain Vasile Stoica, for the Rumanian National League; Dr. H. Hinkovic, for the Jugo-Slav National Council; Charles J. Tomaselli, for the Italian Irredentists; M. Sichinsky, for the Ukrainian Federation, and Gregory I. Zatkovitch, for the American National Council of Uhro-Rusins.

"Possibly other representatives will, in certain cases, be chosen to affix their signatures to a document which I trust will go down in the history of the oppressed nations of Europe. One or two more nationalities may be represented. If so, this will be announced later.

"We consider it an honor and a singular privilege that our conferences, based as they will be on the principles of self-determination and co-operation among all groups against Teutonic aggression, may be carried on under the roof where the American Declaration of Independence was drafted and published. We shall do our work under the shadow of a great tradition."

The chairman of this great gathering, Professor Masaryk, holds a chair in Prague University, and it is interesting to remember that he comes of the Twenty-third Sunday After Trinity:

Judas Maccabeus had been killed in battle and was succeeded by his brother Jonathan, who took advantage of a civil war that arose in Syria and undertook to line up with the stronger party. By this means he gained for a time religious independence for Judea, but was finally betrayed and put to death (1 Mac. 12:48. Note: In reading first morning lesson, omit first four words). All persons who desire to be well informed should acquaint themselves with at least the outlines of this story. In addition to what has already been pointed out, as to its bearing upon the New Testament, it is particularly worth knowing in these days of world struggle for liberty and democracy. The roots of this struggle, especially its religious roots, go back to the spiritual faith and military valor of the Jews of the second century before Christ. All these struggles, both of war and of diplomacy, are to be regarded as steps in the history of human liberty, but with this distinctive characteristic that they all aimed, under the inspiring guidance of God, at that highest liberty, or freedom, rather, of those whom the truth makes free. It was with this in mind that the second lesson was chosen, rising to the climax that "where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." While of course these lessons, belonging to the Historical course, were selected without reference to the special teachings of Collect, Epistle or Gospel, there are interesting points of contact. The whole Maccabean story illustrates how God was guiding His Church (Collect); and the outcome has been in two directions (after our Lord separated Church and State): one, that citizenship which is in heaven (Epistle), and the other that loyalty to the State whose foundation stone was laid by our Lord Himself when He said, "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's." There are many "good" men who are not good citizens, and there are Christians who are not efficient Churchmen: but the righteousness is not in either case that of the Kingdom, which is a social as well as an individual goodness.

The Old Testament Alternates for several Sundays are from the Book of Ecclesiastes, which belongs to this general period of Jewish history and also leads up to the coming Advent season. (Note: The lesson for last Sunday was too short; this one is too long.)

The evening lessons were selected to illustrate the petition of the Collect, "We beseech Thee to hear the devout prayers of Thy Church"; the first being Solomon's Prayer at the Dedication of the Temple and the second dealing with that for which the Church stands, rather than with the Church itself, a point of the utmost importance lest our religion should degenerate into ecclesiasticism. Solomon's Prayer ought to appeal to us at this time for its wide range. It is indeed to the highest level of Old Testament teaching that we must go even today for God's word as it applies to nations, while we must be on our guard against losing the ideals of the New Testament. The second lesson stresses that higher fellowship towards which this war is bringing us under the Church's guidance, the Kingdom of God over against the "lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes and the pride of life" of the world, loyalty to our Lord and practical righteousness.

Is Your Religion Real?

Real religion is not in a man unless it is going out from him. Robert Speer says: "A man must do one of two things with his religion. He must either give it up or give it away." It is the giving away or outgoing Church that is the ingathering one. Congregations talk about a preacher that will draw, but what is really needed is a congregation that will draw.

Modern churches take their Christianity too easily. They are languid, lukewarm and lazy. They are satisfied with admitting a certain number into the Kingdom of Heaven each year when they could easily admit twice as many. They are satisfied with presenting one hundred for confirmation when, if they tried hard, they might enlist in the everlasting fight three or four hundred.

Collect for Twenty-third Sunday After Trinity.

O God, our refuge and strength, who art the author of all godliness; be ready, we beseech Thee, to hear the devout prayers of Thy Church, and grant that those things which we ask faithfully we may obtain effectually; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

They are satisfied with an average good attendance at their services when their churches should be thronged. They have a couple of hundred seeking strength and power from God in the Holy Communion, when there should be five or six hundred and a corresponding multiplied Christian influence through their community and their city. St. John rated the Laodiceans as lukewarm. I wonder how he would rate us?—St. Andrew's Cross.

Obedience, self-restraint, respect for authority—these things in citizens make for community power and safety. We owe it to others as much as to ourselves to develop and exhibit these qualities. The topic seems suggested to match our need in this section of the world. Thoughtful men are fairly agreed that whatever else the institutions of our country may have done for us, they have not taught us a practical respect for authority with that consequent self-control and obedience to law that made for strength and security. A clock can strike the hour with clearness and on time only when the myriad inner parts of the machinery work together with unity of stroke and purpose. Each wheel and spring and cog must know its place and respond to its superior when it calls for service, or the time is never told. And now in these times that are trying the souls of men we feel the national weakness.

Happily it is not too late. It seldom is for people that are ready to learn. The events of the hour are teaching lessons of self-control and obedience. The homes and churches and schools and courts are taking up the subject, and will teach it as never before. The alert type of youth among us will undoubtedly respond to the new program of obedience and self-discipline.

Obedience to whom obedience is due should be rendered because it is right. Is this not the supreme motive in all conduct? In the end does not the import of that brief clause, "for this is right," lie back of justice, truth-telling, kindness, and loving, and every other fine thing that was ever done or thought or attained to in the world? "For this is right" is the rule that God lives by, and theologians tell us it is necessary that He should. Every young man or woman should make this motto the foundation thought of his life. When this lesson on conduct reminds us that obedience in home and school should be yielded because it is right, all has been said that can be said. Young men and young women made in God's image must and can take this law of right as the yoke that they will bear.—Exchange.

Sympathy.

If Jesus had not walked the earth,
Footsore and weary, long ago,
O, I might very tired be,
And even He could scarcely know
The depth of my discouragement:
Or just how weary I might grow.

If Jesus had not suffered much
And borne the greatest agony,
I might have more than I could bear
Of pain, and He could scarcely see
How very great my suffering,
Or what that pain would mean to me.

Eut, ah! my Jesus understands,
And looks in loving sympathy,
Like as a mother pitieth
Her child, 'tis thus He pities me,
And I rejoice that Jesus knows
When I am walking wearily.

And so perhaps 'tis best that I
Must down a troubled pathway go.
For how can I reach forth a hand
In sympathy, unless I know
Somewhat the weariness and pain
That Jesus learned long, long ago?

The Household Altar.

By Eugénie du Maurier.

Slowly and with listless step John Thomas crossed his farm-yard, and, leaning over the battered entrance gate, looked out with thoughtful eyes upon the tranquil beauty of the night. The moon had risen, bright and full, above Broad Mountain. Under its crystal light fields appeared almost as clear as at noonday. Unhappily the restful peace of the autumn night was not in harmony with John Thomas' present mood, as with wistful interest his gaze wandered between the boundary lines that marked the limits of his farm. From the strong high fence that ran to the north like a black seam through that patchwork of hillside fields, to the narrow silvery Schuylkill River winding its way through the meadow-land beneath, stretched the plot of land that was nominally his, but a month hence, under a mortgagee's sale, it would have passed out of his possession.

He had striven hard to ward off this crushing blow, but the struggle had ended in hopeless failure. Not alone had he vainly spent the best years of his life in striving to lift the mortgage which had hung like a millstone round his neck, but he had blighted the prospects of his son—an earnest lad, who had sacrificed his own ambitions in order that he might stand by his father.

For the past few months the boy had seemed dispirited and dull. It was evident that the thralldom of his life oppressed him. He craved change of scene, and was already in communication with a relative out West, who impressed upon him the advisability of bringing the family out to that part of the country to start life anew. When the subject was first broached John Thomas and his wife refused to listen, but later the decision of the mortgagee to put up the land for sale obliged the broken-hearted couple to consent to their son's arrangement, and preparations were now in progress for starting on their enforced exile during the ensuing month.

It was no wonder, then, that poor John Thomas' heart was full of bitter pain as he looked over the familiar ground that was so soon to pass into a stranger's hands. The sorrow that he felt was weighted with a dull despair. He was old to make a new start in life, far away from the Pennsylvania farm where he was born. He had begun to feel that everything and everybody was against him, and had slowly grown forgetful of the need of prayer, unmindful of the fact that all things are possible with God. The whole atmosphere of the home felt the influence of his mood. Family worship was first merely neglected; after awhile it was forgotten.

The sound of footsteps roused him from his reverie. Recognizing them as his son's, he stood erect, and swinging the gate open, he greeted the boy cheerily.

"You here, Ben! Fine night, isn't it?"

"A good, clear night, sir, but a bit crisp. Are you coming inside?"

"I may as well, then. The mother and Patty will be thinking of bed by this—only I felt lonesome-like till you turned up." And with the submission of a child the drooped figure followed the boy's long strides across the barnyard and into the lighted kitchen.

Mrs. Thomas, a fragile, pale-faced woman, rose at their entrance and brought her husband a chair. "Sit here, John," she said gently. "It is a bit chilly out tonight, and you were bare-headed. And Patty," addressing a fair-haired girl who sat crocheting, "perhaps your brother would like a place by the fire."

"Don't trouble about me, mother. It's bed-time, and I'll be going on upstairs," Ben answered. It was plain that the prospect of a family conclave was distasteful to him.

His mother detained him. "Don't go, Ben. Patty and I were thinking of having family worship tonight," she said, laying a detaining hand upon his arm. "This is the first of November—the last month we are likely to spend in the old home—" Her voice broke. "We have been neglecting our evening worship at the very time we needed it most."

There was a short silence. Then John Thomas reached for the big Bible from the mantel above the fireplace, and laying it on his knee, began to turn the pages with toil-worn hands. But he did not seem able to find his place.

"Patty," Ben whispered, "come and help me look for a good chapter. It's so long since I've even opened a Bible!"

The general depression had touched light-hearted Patty also. "I don't think I've seen you with a Bible for years," she flung back under her breath.

Her brother's cheek flushed slightly under the reproach. "You're right," he said, humbly. "Do you want for me to read tonight, father?" he said, reaching for the book.

"'Tis best that your father should read, Ben," said the mother. "Wait a little!"

Presently Mr. Thomas found his place and began to read in trembling tones. It was the eighth chapter of Romans.

When he came to the twenty-eighth verse his voice cleared. "And we know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purpose." And that's just it," he said, looking at them over his glasses, "we none of us has acted as if we loved God. So how could things go right with us?"

"Why, that is the very verse," interrupted his wife, "that I was reading a few minutes ago, and that made me want to start again our praying together."

The devotion thus begun was continued without interruption, night after night, during the weeks that followed. Toward the end of the month the sudden failure of John Thomas' health became a source of grave alarm to his family. He became so weak that it was necessary for him to stay in bed. But even in his weakness he insisted upon having the members of the household gather in the little white-washed room each night to offer their united prayers and to read the Bible together.

Above the dresser, just opposite the foot of the sick man's bed, hung a beautiful painting of the boy Jesus, a prized possession, not only for the sake of its sacred subject, but because of the little history attached to it. The picture had been given John Thomas by a man whom he had rescued from drowning at grave peril to his own life. Later on the grateful stranger spent a week with the Thomas family. He was at a loss to know how he might best reward John for his great services. The Thomas family seemed happy and prosperous, and he left without coming to any decision. It was not till the time of his death that the presentation of the wonderful picture was made to John.

"Preserve the picture, John," the dying man had written. "It is something I have prized beyond all else that I possess. Some time—perhaps years hence—you will realize its great value." At the time the simple-minded farmer had wondered to himself at the impressive nature of these words. Now, when the shadows of death seemed hovering around himself, he often turned his eyes appealingly upon that pictured face.

One morning, when the minister was summoned quickly to his bedside, he found the sick man repeating softly: "All things . . . to them that love God." Seeing John much brighter, the young minister turned with eager interest to the picture which hung opposite the bed and upon which the sick man's gaze was fixed. His eyes were bright with wonder as he turned to the patient with the question: "Why, where did you come by this treasure?"

Simply John Thomas told the history of the gift, ending with, "Maybe you, sir, would take it into your charge when we are turned out."

"Turned out!" the minister repeated, his face alight with enthusiasm. "Why, my dear friend, with a gem like that in your possession you could pay away a fistful of mortgages. Don't you know this exquisite painting is by one of the most famous painters of his time?"

John rose upon his pillow and clasped his hands together nervously. His wife, attracted by their conversation, slipped up beside the minister.

"The gentleman told us nothing of its value, sir," she said, in a voice that trembled with emotion.

"He knew that some day the secret would unfold itself," the minister replied. "It was a princely gift, particularly now, when so many of the great masterpieces are being destroyed in this terrible war. If you will allow me to act for you, I can get you into communication with one of the wealthiest collectors in the country."

"God bless you, sir! Do your best for us! It was God Himself that brought you here to help us out of our trouble." And the thankful woman broke into sobs.

"Do not be anxious now!" the young minister said cheerily; "you will soon have all you need." And with this happy assurance he left the room with a buoyancy of spirit that showed his personal pleasure in the news.

"We must thank the Giver of all good, John," quavered Mrs. Thomas through her tears.

"Yes, wife, it is part of the 'all things,' you know," said John, looking reverently at the picture. "But 'tis too bad we must part with the picture. It has been a heap of comfort to me while I've been lying here alone. But 'tis too valuable for the likes of us to have around if the parson is right about it. We could, mayhap, get a wee one of the boy Jesus to hang in its place."

"Yes, John, the emblem's just the same, be it costly or no," and she lovingly patted the canvas with her trembling fingers.

A week later, under the supervision of an expert who had pronounced the painting to be a genuine masterpiece by a world-renowned artist, the beautiful boy Jesus was removed from its humble resting place and given into the custody of its new owner.

When it had left the house an awed silence fell on the Thomas family. The father, who had mustered sufficient strength to meet the visitors, was the first to speak.

"May God be praised," he said, huskily, raising the bulky roll of greenbacks in his thin hand. "We have not deserved this good fortune."

"But, father," said Patty, "you are always so fond lately of saying, 'All things that work together for good to them that love God.' Isn't that the solution, perhaps? We have been backsliders. But God has known us best. He knows we needed this. Haven't we prayed for help the hardest we knew how since you've been so sick? And hasn't He answered us?"

"John, John, we never deserved it at all. But, thank the dear Father in heaven, He does not give us always what we deserve." His wife dropped on her knees beside his chair. "He pitied us that we should be without a home, though there was a time when His own Son, the Child Jesus, was denied a shelter. It was a kind gentleman who trusted us with the care of the wonderful picture—'twas the blessing he sent in to us because you saved him from being drowned."

"And now, sir, will you kindly lead us in prayer and read again before you leave us?" asked the sick man of the minister, who had stayed with them. "Tis never too often we can pray to the good God above, who cares so much for us."

"Oh, that men would praise the Lord for His wonderful works to the children of men," he answered.

"That, sir, is what we 'most forgot to do," interrupted Mrs. Thomas.

"But we've begun again to do so to our utmost strength," said Ben, deeply moved by the minister's voice. Then, looking down with misty eyes into his sister's face, he said: "Patty, I can't forget that only a month ago you were obliged to tell me where to find places in the Bible. But now," his voice broke slightly, "so long as this roof shelters us—the roof that God gave back to us—let us not allow a day to pass without doing honor to our Father in heaven by our family worship."

FAMILIAR HYMNS.

XX. The God of Abraham Praise.

Perhaps the above hymn does not properly fall under the title "familiar," since it is not, strictly speaking, a household hymn, nor is it used with great frequency in churches. Yet, once heard, the lines are bound to attract, the hymn itself sure to become, shortly, both loved and familiar.

Indeed, there is something about the poem that instantly commands the attention of even the most casual reader. Its peculiar measure, its crisp, tense exclamations and exhortations, its curious combination of brevity and strength, thrill and awe the heart as few hymns can. Sonorous, dignified, full of music and of might, it is a sad-stirring piece of praise.

God moves in a mysterious way! The author of that hymn, one Thomas Olivers, little known to posterity, was even more utterly without honor in his own country—England. "He is the worst boy in all this region round about," one of his contemporaries wrote sadly to another. And alas, Olivers seems to have deserved his reputation. He was reckless, unprincipled and wild. Left fatherless at an early age, he was soon led astray by evil companions, and thus he went on from bad to worse until, as one writer says, his life was a continual dishonor. It was not long before he was guilty of open crime.

Yet always, strangely, there burned in him a faint flame of conscience. He was forever resolving to mend his ways, praying, repentant, "until his knees were made stiff by kneeling," then rising from those same knees to travel weakly back into the old unhappy paths.

At length his wanderings took him—nay, rather, God's hand, "moving mysteriously, led him"—to an old seaport town in England. On the day that he reached there a noted revivalist was scheduled to preach. It was none other than Whitefield, the great Methodist evangelist. The young profligate was one of the congregation that night. He listened—stirred, astounded, overwhelmed. When the sermon ended he felt himself to be a new creature. From that time on, "I saw God," he testified, "in everything."

Afterward the young penitent entered the ministry, where he labored with faithfulness, ever ready to endure any hardship in order to pass on to other men the great blessing that was his own. In an hour of poignant gratitude for his signal deliverance he wrote his powerful hymn:

The God of Abraham praise,
Who reigns enthroned above;
Ancient of everlasting days

And God of love:

Jehovah, great I AM,

By earth and heaven confessed;

I bow and bless the sacred Name,

Forever blest.

He by Himself hath sworn,

I on His oath depend,

I shall, on angel wings upborne,

To heaven ascend:

I shall behold His face,

I shall His power adore,

And sing the wonders of His grace

Forevermore.

There dwells the Lord, our King,
The Lord, our Righteousness,
Triumphant o'er the world and sin,
The Prince of Peace;
On Zion's sacred height
His kingdom He maintains,
And, glorious with His saints in light,
Forever reigns.

The whole triumphant host
Give thanks to God on high;
Hail, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost!
They ever cry:
Hail, Abraham's God and mine!
I join the heavenly lays;
All might and majesty are Thine,
And endless praise!

Restoring the Cross.

Before the war the cross was practically a nonentity. It had almost faded out of Christian thinking and life. No longer was it a vital factor in the Church. In pulpit and classroom the cross has been taboo. The remainder of the matchless life has been cordially endorsed. Christmas, Easter and other holy days have been welcomed, but nobody has cared much of late for Good Friday. Calvary has surely been slurred. Men have thought to hold Christ fast without clinging to His cross. But apart from the cross Jesus is no Christ.

The cross was buried out of sight because it was bloody. We reckoned ourselves too aesthetic for the gory cross. It was not nice. Religious (not Christian) societies, which boldly deny the suffering, redeeming Saviour, have made capital out of this aversion to the cross.

"Without shedding of blood there is no remission of sins." It is an historic fact that Jesus died upon the cross. It is a spiritual fact that He died there for our sins. The sin of the world has fattened furiously since the only effectual antidote, the cross, has been turned down. War is the issue of a neglected cross.

But the war is restoring the cross. Men are being baptized into Christ's sufferings; we are all being conformed to His death. Most all men, the world over, bear a cross today, and thereby are being awakened to the cross. Dr. John R. Mott has represented Europe as being stretched on a cross of pain, as running deep rivers of blood and suffering. He has said: "In Europe I was never in a home that was not a house of tears. I did not visit a home across which death had not cast its shadow as a result of this war, sometimes many times." Men, even men of the Church, endeavored to efface the blood of the cross, and they are being bathed in the blood of war. But they are being purified. The Church is being purified. Sacrifice and redemption are potent terms now. The trenches breed heroes after Christ's kind. And the contagion of crucifixion envelops the world. Gethsemane and Calvary are understood and accepted. The buried cross is being restored to Calvary's brow, and men everywhere are looking thitherward to the bleeding Lord for life. The war will not be in vain. Christ and the cross will surely emerge.—Ernest A. Miller, in the Christian Advocate.

England's Most Coveted War Medal, the Victoria Cross.

The Victoria Cross, one of the most coveted of military decorations and the most rarely conferred, was instituted during the Crimean War and is made from the bronze of captured cannon. It is not a Maltese cross, but a cross pattée, its obverse center bearing the royal crest of a lion passant, gardant, upon the British crown, above a ribbon inscribed "For Valor." On the reverse is a circular space reserved for record of the act that gained the decoration. The name and rank of the recipient are on the far above. The ribbon is red for the army and blue for the navy.

The cross was instituted in 1856, but its award was made retroactive, so that it happened that the first Victoria Cross was awarded for an act of valor on June 21, 1854. The recipient was "Mr. Lucas," then mate on board H. M. S. Hecla. A live shell fell on the deck of the Hecla and, without an instant's hesitation, Mr. Lucas picked it up and threw it overboard.

The Victoria Cross is a dignified piece of sculpture, dominated by a lion worthy of Barye. Its possession, like those of most of the British crosses, confers a sort of military "degree," in certain cases, permitting the wearer to write V. C. after his name. Moreover, the cross carries with it an annuity of £10, which, in case of extreme want, may be increased to £50. Every recipient of a Victoria Cross is the ward of a grateful country.—Scribner's Magazine.

An Attic Window.

It opened toward the dawn,

High up in gray home gables, and a chair,

Easy and old and kindly, waited there; And thence, o'er porch and lawn,

The view led out, and on, and far away Down the long valley, past the river gray,

To dreaming hills withdrawn

So faint, so far, none might their borders scan,

Though somewhere round their dim peaks heaven began.

'Twas not the outlook there

Claimed us of old, but inside sights; a wealth

Of rare old treasures, best explored by stealth:

Bellows and stovepipe hats, an inlaid chest,

And on it carved what mother called "a crest."

Yet in some twilight fair,

When to the attic we her feet would trace,

We found her oftenest at the window place.

And when with smile and sigh,

So joked that each made other doubly dear,

She turned, but left untold the vision clear

That held her lingering eye,

We, too, looked out; we saw the vale, the hill,

Fair and afar; and seeing, wondered still:

All that we might descry

Too shadowy seemed and strange, withdrawn too far

New fears to kindle or old joys to mar.

But 'twas a magic seat

Under the antique casement, and the view

The wide, wide vision that makes old eyes new;

And now, when one poor street

Marks our horizon, and an outraged ear

Warns us how weary wears a world too near,

Gladly would we repeat

For our own weal that simple, high emprise,

And give life back its outlook toward the skies.

Praise.

A. B. J.

Little bird, singing your morning song,

Trilling your notes so sweet,

You are doing your part your Maker to praise,

You are casting your best at His feet.

Floweret, shedding your perfume forth,

Scenting the morning air,

You, too, are doing the best you can To thank your Lord for His care.

Little lamb, skipping about in play,

Happy the whole day long.

You are doing the work you were meant to do,

Playing to grow more strong.

Children, dear, are you doing your best,

Like the lamb, the bird and the flower?

Do you thank your Father for all His love?

Do you pray in the morning hour?

When the Girls Made Out a List.

"Oil and lard and sugar, Edith, and the mail, and matches and pins and soap."

Miss Woodson rested a detaining hand on the buggy wheel and spoke slowly, an audible hyphen between each word, as she tried to catch her niece's dancing eyes and bring them to attention. The two girls in the vehicle were anxious to be gone; the little black horse was held back impatiently, with poised whip and taut rein.

"Oil and lard and sugar," Edith repeated glibly, her look on the whip tassel, "and the mail—and what else? Why, Aunt Ada, the mail ought to come last of all in the list, or there'll be anti-climax; what could be more important than the mail?"

"Several things," answered Miss Woodson dryly. "Now listen again, if you won't write it down: oil, lard, sugar—those are the big things; and matches, pins and soap."

"And the mail," Edith amended gaily, giving Clipper the rein with a flourish. "She doesn't think that's important at all, Olive, with two letters from two homes expected, not to speak of papers and magazines." They took the curve at a fine dash, and Edith righted herself and began again. "You can remember the big things by their first letters, O. L. S.—now, who on earth would have thought of that but me!"

"I'll remember," Olive promised, vaguely, her gaze busy with the lay of the level green fields into which the road had emerged. When there was anything beautiful to look at, Olive could converse, but only as a sleep-walker, automatically. "Oil and sugar and lard," she repeated docilely, "and—"

"And a few minor things," Edith interrupted, deftly smiting a horsefly that harassed Clipper's smooth flank. "I declare, Aunt Ada worries me with that dreadful way she has of ramming details down one's throat. I wonder she has time for any of the larger things of life, at all. And wanting me to stop for an itemized list when such a day as this was waiting!"

Edith," Olive said hesitatingly. "Your

"Well, you know you do forget, memory's rather treacherous, isn't it?"

"Not in the long run," said Edith, undisturbed by this criticism. "I always grasp the big things, if you'll notice. Sometimes I accidentally let the little ones slide, but only the odds and ends—the sundries, you understand."

Olive nodded, engrossed with the look of the right-hand pine woods, flecked marvelously with sun and shade.

"Isn't it glorious," Edith remarked after awhile, "to think we'll be coming back to a perfectly boarderless house?"

The last month of the two girls' vacation at Beechwood had been shared with a half-dozen "paying guests," for Miss Ada's slender resources needed a little help in the keeping up of the old place, and she had "a genius for boarders," so everybody said. The last had gone the day before, and Edith and Olive, while honestly missing their chatter and good cheer, rejoiced in the golden quiet that the wild little Ray twins had left in their wake.

"There'll be such a silence we can almost hear it," Edith prophesied.

Holly Corners, three miles from Beechwood, was post-office, market and general emporium, and the brisk little merchant bounced out like a jack-in-the-box, alert for the substantial order that he knew awaited him.

"We want a whole string of things, Mr. Grimes," laughed Edith, stirred to ready mirth at his promptness. "Oil—the can's in the back—lard, and—"

"Sugar," supplemented Olive, finding nothing to attract her eye. "There were five or six things in all."

"So there were," Edith agreed. "To be sure there were. But listen, Mr. Grimes; you bring us out the mail first, and we'll read it while you fill the order."

The two fell upon the fat budget with alacrity, and Mr. Grimes, after waiting a little wistfully for the other items, departed to fix up those that had been mentioned, while Edith and Olive read paragraphs aloud to each other in joyous antiphony.

When the groceries had been brought out and stowed away, Edith folded up a final letter and regarded Mr. Grimes ruefully. There was something more—a number of other things. Could Olive remember?

Olive could not, at all. Aunt Ada's parting instructions had penetrated her brain through a maze of dreamy thoughts. "I've quite forgotten," she confessed with regret.

For a few minutes they sat groping mentally for the names that seemed to have left their memories as completely as figures sponged from a slate. The little storekeeper stood at attention, putting in a suggestion here and there, until he had exhausted almost his entire stock, but to no purpose. The elusive items could not be coaxed back.

"Well," Edith concluded at last, gathering up her reins, "they must be too picayune to make much difference if they've slipped through our minds like this. If only we had a telephone at Beechwood it would be easy enough to call Aunt Ada up, but we haven't and that's all," she settled herself comfortably and they drove off.

"I declare, this is too bad," Olive said. She felt secretly exasperated. What a way Edith did have of dismissing catastrophes with a light shrug, even when they had been of her own making!

"So 'tis," the latter agreed. "But after all, I'm positive we remembered the principal things, Ollie; it was only the odds and ends that we forgot."

They found Miss Ada in the barnyard waiting to unhitch, the hired man having gone home for Sunday. She was sorting the purchases before Edith and Olive had time to gather themselves and their scattered mail together.

"Take these into the pantry," she directed, "and I'll be there directly."

Her keen eyes noted the numerous letters and papers, then, her glance swept the buggy seat, but she made no remark.

"We had a lovely drive," said Edith. "Clipper outdid himself."

"And the roadsides were a dream," Olive put in. Both had serenely forgotten all delinquencies.

An hour later the girls ran blithely to their room. The shades were down and the room in darkness. They began feeling about in the dark in quest of a match.

"Can't even find the head of a match," came from Edith, stumbling over a stool. "Oh, here's a whole one—but just one. There, it's gone out!"

Aunt Ada's voice came from the direction of the kitchen. "Girls, bring a match from upstairs; there are none down here, and it's high time supper was under way."

"Why, Aunt Ada Woodson!" There was a kind of reproach in Edith's tone. "No matches down there?"

"Not one. The twins dumped the whole box yesterday into the washtub, and the last one we had was struck at dinner-time."

Olive was creeping along the hall, feeling her way to the guest rooms. "The boarders' boxes must have gone into the tub with the rest," she muttered when not a match was forthcoming. The two girls made their way down the stairs through the unlighted front hall to the kitchen.

"Aunt Ada, why don't you say something about my forgetting the matches. Now, what are we going to do?"

The answer to this seemed rather obscure. Beechwood boasted no near neighbors. In the darkness a silence fell on the group of three.

"I'm bound to say," Miss Ada remarked, "that it looks like cold food and general darkness and chilliness until the store opens Monday morning." She began to bustle about, sure-footed despite the darkness, while the girls stood helpless. They were waiting in vain for the scolding that by rights was due.

But Miss Woodson was not given to many words; besides, the fish were waiting the frying pan. A little more rustling, a few more efficient moves, and she had the two penitents settled down to an odd task. "We'll have to turn savage for the time being," she remarked, and with a brief outline of the ancient expedient of striking spark from flint, left them scraping and blowing madly. It was a hard job, and a long one, but after awhile Edith, excitedly captured a spark, and a flame was kindled.

Quite pleased with herself again, Edith went upstairs to wash her face and hands before supper, but in a few minutes she came back. There was no soap, either, to be had, and the reason why had occurred to her, after a while—at least, one of the reasons why.

"All the rooms ran short of soap at the same time," Aunt Ada explained, beating eggs without emotion. "And Mrs. Ray gathered up every fragment when she left, because the children have to be washed all along the line, you know, and I couldn't refuse her. We'll have to use turpentine soap," she finished.

Olive's look was plaintive and injured. "I just can't, Miss Ada, truly." She cast a reproachful glance at Edith.

"Neither can I," said Edith. She made a feeble attempt at jocularity, to hide her discomfiture. "Why, we might as well be pots and pans."

"Might as well," Miss Woodson agreed, briefly, and turned to the frying pan. Her face was inscrutable.

They came to turpentine soap at last, though, and an hour or so later on tried not to show the white feather when they understood what must be done in order to have light and heat to-morrow, spark striking having proved a bit too strenuous. The fire would have to be banked, it seemed, and once, at least, in the night have fresh wood put on.

"As if any one will wake during the night!" Edith commented with assumed lightness.

"You have your alarm clock," replied her aunt, and another significant silence fell. No more was said, but at midnight the brazen little clock sent two yawning, sleepily complaining figures creeping downstairs to the kitchen, and the fire was saved.

The two girls slept late the next morning, and when breakfast was over barely enough time remained in which to dress for church.

"Nearly ready," Edith announced breathlessly, slipping into her crisp lawn and holding it together at the waist with one hand, while with the other she groped anxiously through boxes and drawers.

"So am I," Olive rejoined. "Just as soon as I get this girdle fastened. Here, you do me and I'll do you; even at that we'll be ready none too soon."

They began an undignified scramble. "Well, give me a pin!" demanded Edith, testily. Then, all at once, she stopped tossing things about. "I forgot," she said, feebly. "We're out of pins!"

Olive reconnoitered the upper floor in haste, and came back with a slow step. "Edith Woodson, your Aunt Ada is out, too, and there's none in the yellow room and none in the blue room." She looked dazed. "I can't understand it. Did you ever hear of anything so queer as their all going at once?"

"Nothing queer at all, now that I think about it. Those Ray children had their fishpond day before yesterday, you know. They must have searched the very cracks for their fishbooks."

"They did. Don't you remember seeing them on their hands and knees crawling around the floor? Come, it's nearly half past ten; we'll have to find some of the bent ones and straighten them. It surely seems silly that the lack of a few little old pins should keep us from church, but that's how it looks."

A fruitless search was instituted. The twins had evidently either carried away with them their numerous fishbooks or else buried them. Certainly, Beechwood had been thoroughly cleansed of pins. When the girls sat down, at last, to fan themselves, the clock spoke eleven.

"Miss Ada left on time," Olive observed, ruefully. "How did she manage, do you suppose?"

"Aunt Ada? Child, she isn't dependent on pins; her buttons and hooks and all those little things never fail to be in place. Well, with the short hand swinging past eleven and the church half a mile away, our going is pretty much settled. And the fire's gone out, after all. I noticed while I was pin hunting in the kitchen that 'twas black. I forgot to put on more wood. And we smell like laundry soap, and everything has gone wrong—everything. All for the lack of such trifles, too."

Olive drummed thoughtfully on the window, and for some reason known best to herself Edith changed the subject with haste.

The next morning Clipper stood harnessed for Holly Corners. Miss Ada helped the girls silently. Her face was calm and unaccusing; she even waved them a cheerful good-by, which Edith missed, her gaze being fixed intently on Clipper's ears.

"Let's see," murmured Olive, shutting her eyes to the vision of the sun shining over far blue hills, "Matches, and soap, and—"

"You needn't enumerate them," Edith interrupted. "I've got it all down, this time. Every stone in the road looks like a cake of soap, to me, and every twig like a match or a pin. I declare they do. Only they seem ten times their natural size; they're not trifles any more, Olive Shane!"

The two drove on awhile in a silence that Edith broke with an odd note of shyness in her usually self-confident tones. "I might as well be frank about it. I've learned my lesson."

"And I have learned mine," Olive agreed. "I never realized how important little old common things can be."

Mr. Grimes came out of his store to meet them when Clipper slowed down at Holly Corners.

"Here's the list, Mr. Grimes," said Edith, before the horse had fairly stopped.

Mr. Grimes smiled as he went in to fill the order. "It's the little things that count," he said as he came out, having added the morning's mail to the goods ordered.

"It surely is," Edith answered with promptness.

"The odds and ends," added Olive.—Nancy Byrd Turner, in Girls' Companion.

Little green men,
In a green pen,
Huddled up, all in a row;
Open the door!
One, two, three, four,
Out, helter-skelter, they go.
Fight little fingers, as spry as can be,
Two little thumbs, quite as nimble, you see,
Open the door for the little green men,
All in a row in the little green pen.
See how they run!
Isn't it fun?
Out they come tumbling, ho!
Pippity-pop!
Hippity-hop!
Right into the pan they go!
Fight little fingers—how fast they can fly!
Two little thumbs, quite as nimble and spry;
All of the little green pens, we shall see,
Soon will be empty as empty can be!

The Autobiography of a Word.

Charles Corbin.

I am just a word that you may use every day. It takes twelve letters to spell me.

I am on land and sea, in the air, and wherever you go.

I am quite old, but, nevertheless, I am as active now as I was when Adam was living.

I caused the great ship Titanic to sink. I have caused thousands of vessels to be wrecked. I cause the spread of germs.

The story I am telling sounds pretty bad for me to tell of myself, but every word of it is true.

I am always near you when you think I am far from you. I cause children to fail on their examinations and often have them punished in various ways.

I delight in going with people who go out in the afternoon in their cars for a pleasure ride. It is my delight to overturn their cars and stick them in the mud, and have them pay for having them repaired.

Does not my record sound as though I am a naughty fellow?

As I told you, I am a word of twelve letters. I am not hard to pronounce. You hear my name every day of your life.

Just stop and think for a moment, you can guess my name.

My name is "Carelessness."

A Prayer.

Heavenly Father, let me stay
Close beside Thee night and day;
Make me happy and obedient,
Teach a little child Thy way.
Be with father, be with mother,
Make us grateful for each other,
Keep us in Thy loving Kingdom,
Give us helpful hearts, I pray. Amen.

How Bobby Left Home.

Bobby was the very dearest, sweetest little fellow that ever lived. Everybody said so—father, mother, grandpa, grandma, Sister Lou, Uncle Bob and Sue; that's everybody, of course.

But every now and then Bobby would have an "off day." Grandma said that he got out of the wrong side of the bed, but Bobby said that could not be, for he always got up just the same— if it was the wrong side one day, it was every day.

Whatever the trouble was, these days were rather trying, for everything went criss-cross all day.

"I wish eggs grew bigger," said Bobby, complainingly, one of these mornings. "I don't any more'n get begun eating mine before it's all gone."

Then he wondered how much longer it would be before he was "growed up" enough to have doughnuts and coffee like father.

After breakfast he looked his playthings over, but could not find anything he wanted to play with. "I think I'd rather have my newest box of soldiers," he said, presently.

"But," said mother, "I put that away in the closet upstairs, you know, because you have so many things around now."

"But I'd rather have that than anything else," persisted Bobby.

So mother told him when she had finished baking her cookies she would go and get it for him.

But, alas; when it came he did not care for it. He had got all over that, he said; now he wanted one of mother's cookies.

"But mother does not like you to eat warm cookies, Bobby; they are not good for you."

"I can't know why; father has them, and I should think you'd like me to have them when I want them so much. I'd make 'em for my little boy every day," was Bobby's reply.

So it went all the morning.

After lunch mother proposed that they go upstairs to rest, and try to get up the right side. But Bobby would not hear of that. He wasn't a bit tired and, anyway, he believed he would rather go and live with grandma.

"She's always doing something nice for me; I could have more fun there. She lets me have everything round at once, and when I don't like those things she tries to find somethin' new. I should like to live with her all the time."

"Very well," said mother, "if you would like it better there than here with your father and mother, you had better go. We want our dear little boy to be happy if he can. I will put your nightie in your bag and you can go right over."

Bobbie looked very much surprised; he had not expected to be taken at his word in that fashion.

"I—could wait until to-morrow," he said, hesitatingly.

"Oh, no, there's no need of waiting," answered mother, cheerfully. "Grandma is home, and will be glad to see you, I know. If you really think you would be happier there, I think you had better go."

So presently Bobby, with his little bag, was trudging down the street to grandma's.

But somehow it did not seem half as nice as usual there. Grandma got out all his playthings for him, and she had two cute little kittens that someone had just given her.

Usually Bobby would have been delighted with them, but he hardly looked at them to-day. "They're very nice kittens," he said, "but I don't seem to care much for 'em this afternoon."

Then grandma got him the nicest little lunch, but there was a queer little lump in his throat so he could not swallow very well. He wondered what mother was doing now. It must be most supper time. He always helped her set the table. He didn't see how she could manage without him. And he was afraid grandma didn't know such nice stories to tell him when he was going to sleep.

"I think I ought to go home," he said all at once. "It is most midnight, and father will be home pretty soon. He and mother will be dre'fully lonesome without their little boy. It—makes me feel—all choked up—to think my mother and father are lonesome," and Bobby's big brown eyes were brimming over.

So, before mother had even started

Look around at the men and women you meet in a single day. One glance is enough to tell the ones with plenty of rich, red blood, strength and physical energy to back up their mental power and make them a success in whatever they undertake.

Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York and the Westchester County Hospital, says that to help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in his experience which he has found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron. It often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down people in two weeks' time. It is conservatively estimated that Nuxated Iron is now being used by over three million people annually, and it has been used and endorsed by such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, former Secretary of the Treasury and ex-Governor of Iowa; General John L. Clem (retired), the drummer boy of Shiloh, who was Sergeant in the U. S. Army when only 12 years of age; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson, of the Court of Claims of Washington, and others. Nuxated Iron is dispensed by all go-drug-gists everywhere.

The Proud Teacher.

The young teacher was proud of her little pupils and beamed with pleasure at the appreciation shown by some visitors, who applauded generously. Then came the lesson, and the teacher announced the subject.

"Children," she said, "to-day we are going to learn about the cat, and I want you to tell me what you know about it. Tommy, how many legs has a cat?"

"Four," replied Tommy, proudly conscious of rectitude.

"Yes; and, Daisy what else has the cat?"

"Claws an' tail," murmured Daisy, shyly.

Various other portions of the feline anatomy were ascertained, and finally the instructress turned to one of the latest acquisitions of the kindergarten and said sweetly:

"Now, Mary, can you tell me whether the cat has fur or feathers?"

With scorning or contempt, mingled with a vast surprise, Mary said:

"Teacher, ain't you never seen a cat?"

And the lesson came to an abrupt end.—Chicago Daily News.

In Memoriam

ROBERT L. M. SCOTT.

ROBERT L. M. SCOTT, who died in Petersburg on October 5th at the home of his uncle, the Rev. F. G. Scott, was possessed of rare mental qualities and a heart of gold. He was greatly loved and will be sadly missed by the many people who knew and admired him as a Christian gentleman, a loyal friend, an earnest student and an ardent lover of all things beautiful.

Being intensely patriotic, he hoped to serve his country with the Engineers, but before his call came to duty in France he passed from this life to a better country where—

Often-times cometh our wise Lord God, master of every trade,
And tells them tales of his daily toil, of Edens newly made,
And they rise to their feet as he passes
by, "gentlemen unafraid."

MISS JANET GORDON GOODWIN.

MISS JANET GORDON GOODWIN died on Sunday, October 11, 1918, out in the beautiful sunshine, covered over with lovely flowers. We laid the worn and weary body to rest until the resurrection morn shall call it for union with that Soul, which had already heard the words of welcome, "Come, inherit the kingdom prepared for you." "Inasmuch as you have done to the least of these, my brethren, you have done to me." Her life, up to the time when health and strength gave way, was one of sacrifice for others, and few were the homes in this community in which her presence was not felt as a benediction. With a display of taste unusual she was in place to adorn for the Bride, with loyalty and love of service, to comfort the mourner, and give ready help for the last offices of the beloved dead; inestimable help in times of sickness; and always ready to do what her hand found to do for those she most loyally loved and as faithfully served. No wonder that in those homes she entered into the inner-shrine of their lives, and was their loved and trusted friend. Now she is "before the Throne of God, serving Him day and night." "The Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed her," "and God shall wipe away all tears from her eyes."

A FRIEND OF A LIFETIME.

C.

JOHN G. MONCURE.

At a meeting of the vestry of St. David's Church, St. David's Parish, King William County, Va., held the 15th day of October, 1918, the following preamble and resolutions in regard to the death of JOHN G. MONCURE were adopted:

In referring to the records of St. David's Church, we find that John G. Moncure was elected vestryman of the church in the month of May, 1895, and he continued to serve as such to the time of his death on August 4, 1918, a period of twenty-four years. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That in the death of John G. Moncure the vestry has lost a most useful member and the church one of its chief pillars and support; one always punctual in attendance and wise in its councils; zealous in all things that pertained to the good of the church. For a number of years previous to his death he was most efficient as superintendent of the Sunday school. As treasurer of the parish, his accounts were always kept in a most satisfactory manner, and we, his associates, feel without doubt that the "good seed" sown in good ground will spring up and bring forth good fruit in due season. We shall miss his familiar form, his cheery greeting, his wise council; but we feel assured that his life has not been spent in vain.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to his family, and that they be spread upon the minutes of the vestry.

THE REV. AUGUSTINE JAQUELIN SMITH.

Entered into life eternal on the 30th day of May, 1918, after a short illness, the REV. AUGUSTINE JAQUELIN SMITH, JR., rector of St. Peter's Parish, Folesville, in the Diocese of Washington and in the State of Maryland. The last halloved service of the Church was held over all that was mortal of this faithful minister and true servant of Jesus Christ in the Bethlehem Chapel of the Cathedral of Washington on Monday, the 3d of June, with the Bishop of the Diocese, the Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding, D. D., officiating, assisted by the Revs. Drs. Phillips and Morton, of Alexandria, Va. He was laid to rest in the beautiful Oak Hill Cemetery, of Georgetown, D. C., where he sleeps in peace, until there breaks the last and brightest Easter morn.

Such is the brief record of the close of his earthly life. But there is also a record of years of service, as a good minister of Jesus Christ in our beloved Church, before he heard the Master's call to come up higher, which is worthy of being commemorated here. By descent and connection the Rev. Mr. Smith belonged to an old and honorable family of Virginia, whose history goes back to the early Colonial period. He was brought up in all the inspiring and noble traditions of the ancient Church and State of Virginia, and in a home where God was honored, His word the law of its life, and the sacred service of the Church enshrined in the Book of Common Prayer, the guide of their devotions in the worship of the sanctuary. It was therefore natural that his thoughts were turned to the holy ministry in the Church of his fathers. He therefore decided to enter the Theological Seminary in Virginia, where he graduated, and was ordained to the diaconate in 1882 by Bishop Whittle, and to the priesthood in the succeeding year.

During his ministerial life the Rev. Mr. Smith served in parishes in Virginia and two or three other dioceses with consecrated devotion to his Lord and Master, and the people committed to his charges. Many letters written by parishioners from the parishes he served, after his entrance into the life of the world to come, testify to his ability as a preacher of the word of God, his faithfulness as a pastor, his comforting ministrations to the sick and suffering, and the consistency of his daily life, as a man of God in the communities where he dwelt. It was our privilege to have known him from days together at the Seminary. We were impressed by the purity and sincerity of his character. Quiet, modest and retiring, he was always the fine Christian gentleman. Beloved and respected by all who knew him in the work of his high calling, he has fulfilled his course, and is now numbered with the saints in glory everlasting.

There are over 1,000,000 communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church. 950,000 of them never read or look inside of a church weekly. Think of your own parish? How many subscribe to any church paper?

We believe that a number of people in every parish would subscribe if they were approached in the right way.

We will pay well for a good representative in every parish to secure new subscribers and to attend to the renewals each year.

"Leather's" Heart.

"Leather" is the particularly endearing name by which this machine gun sergeant is known to his intimates in France—possibly because his hide is tough and his heart is strong and fears neither the devil nor the Hun.

He had his regular ten days' leave awhile back. "Fed up" on war and steel and men, he asked the Hospitality League of the American Y. M. C. A. to find him a quiet place—a place just about in keeping with what his home life had been just outside of a small town in New York.

"Leather" wasn't much company to his host and hostess the first day, for he slept twenty-four solid hours. Then he took more precious hours for careful bathing, shaving and putting his clothes in order.

Presently he seemed to show a little interest in the surroundings—especially the edibles, the best that war-times could afford. Soon he was quite at home and fast making friends with the five-year-old daughter of the house.

"Tell me a story about the war," she pleaded when they had become quite good pals.

"I don't want to think about the war," said Leather. "I tell you what we'll do. You show me how little girls play 'Ring Around the Rosy,' and I know—I'll show you how to play 'high spy.' I'll hide my eyes and count a hundred and you run and hide and see if I can find you."

And so they played all day. The sergeant was just a child again, and, oh, so happy. Each day of his leave seemed to be the greatest day of sunshine in that New York soldier boy's whole life.

Late one afternoon "Leather" seemed to have something on his mind. "What time do you put Mary to bed?" he asked.

He was told the hour—8:30

Then he picked up a book, thumbed absent-mindedly through its pages and quickly dropped it. Nothing held his attention for long. He seemed quite restless as he passed from one object to another.

"You say you put the little one to bed at 8:30," he said, reverting later to what was on his mind.

"Yes, 8:30," said the hostess, "but why do you ask?"

"Say," blurted out Leather, "would you let me put her to bed to-night and hear her say her prayers?"

CHRISTIANITY AND COMMUNITY.

same stock as that other great reformer of five hundred years ago, John Huss, who was the first to try to break the crust of corruption that had hardened around the Roman Catholic Church and who, like his modern prototype, was also a Czecho-Slovak and a professor of Prague University.

Let us hope that the efforts of the Premier of the new Bohemian Republic will be more successful, both for his cause and for himself. It will be remembered that John Huss was burned at the stake, and that his followers were almost all killed in the course of fifty years or so.

We dwell on the frontiers of the kingdom of darkness. "Blasts from hell" as well as "airs from Heaven" reach the place in which we live. These two are on. The ideal is the Christian as he exists in the Divine intention, and the actual shows him as he is in the present imperfect state. The first is what he shall be when his redemption is complete; the second is what he is now while the process of redemption is being carried on. One is the precious stone in the hand of the lapidary; the other is the same jewel flashing in the King's crown.—Thomas Jones.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

The man who is ashamed of his religion ought to be.

The smallest things become great when God requires them of us.

The easiest place in this world for any man is the one God picks out for him.

The man who fears God is not afraid to walk in the dark, but he fears to walk alone.

The man who preaches the real gospel of Christ will give emphasis to it with his life.

The Son had to go the Cross that the world might see what was in the Father's heart.—Ex.

Where two or three are gathered together in the spirit of apathy, the preacher's animation is extinguished.

Did you ever know a dying man to find any comfort in thinking that there were hypocrites in the Church?—Ex.

Pessimism is easier than optimism, as tearing down is easier than building up; therefore we should be the more on our guard against it.—James Bryce.

Let not cares, riches, pleasures of this world choke the heart, which was formed to contain the love of God. Pray, and all is thine. Thine is God Himself, who teacheth thee to pray for himself. To pray is to go forth from earth, and to live in heaven.—Edward B. Pusey.

Our faith needs strengthening, and it would be an unkindness for God to give us great answers to wavering faith. If we have not faith enough to remove a mountain, we may climb it step by step, and, when we reach its summit, our spiritual muscles will be greatly strengthened, and from the height thus gained we may breathe a purer atmosphere and get a broader view.—A. C. Dixon.

It is not what the best men do, but what they are, that constitutes their truest benefaction to their fellowmen. Certainly, in our own little sphere, it is not the most active people to whom we owe the most. It is the lives like the stars, which simply pour down on us the calm light of their bright and faithful being, up to which we look, and out of which we gather the deepest calm and courage.—Phillips Brooks.

It is of momentous importance to remember that the very core of faith is motion—a movement of the will toward the holy Lord. The act of faith is the yielding of the personal life to the God who is revealed to us in Jesus Christ our Lord. And the life of faith is the constant repetition of that act of surrender until the repeated acts become an attitude, and every choice and will in life is stamped with the pleasure and fear of God.—Dr. John H. Jowett.

Love is not merely an article of faith, but a reinforcement of the sinking powers of life. Divine grace, according to the old phrase, is a real emanation. When no change has taken place in the outward circumstances, when everything seems an unbroken pall and sphere of darkness, the spirit, it knows not how, finds itself strangely nerved and succored. It is helped through the very darkest hour, and secretly made aware that the worst darkness cannot last forever.—W. Robertson Nicoll.

Frequent disasters of the soul deliver us from shallow views of religion and convince us that we need more for our security than an example. No power can be of much avail that does not act from within and reinforce us in the crises of temptation. What one longs for is a second alliance—this time with a Saviour. If there be any one in heaven or earth who has gone through the same agony and has come out a victor, who has a fellow-feeling with other men and is ready to join forces with them, then we need not abandon hope, although the past has been one uninterrupted defeat.—John Watson.

To save the soul is to make response to God, and thereby to allow His power to pass upon the spirit, and His will to fashion the life. The first offering a man must make to God is himself. His first duty, in a world where so much is amiss, is to bring himself into obedience. It is the idlest vanity, it is the blindest ignorance, for a man to think he can bless his fellowmen, redeem their lives from evil, lift up their hearts to holiness, and buttress their wills to strength, when he himself has not begun to walk the narrow way, or to be strong in the grace of Christ. Physician, heal thyself, is both wisdom and duty.—W. M. Clow.

The motto, "Serve God and he cheerful," is one which in these days we need to make especially our own. We have come to dissociate in our minds the innocent enjoyments of life with the idea of saintship and holiness. We want to do good, but we often forget that sometimes the best way of doing good is by being good ourselves, by being happy and contented ourselves, by schooling ourselves into that "cheerfulness which makes life pleasant to those around us," by exhibiting that meek and quiet spirit which in the sight of God is of great price. In this way we may, like the early Christians, serve God with gladness and singleness of heart. We may shed around us an immense amount of human happiness. We may not only console the afflicted, and comfort the sorrowful, and inspire with fresh energy the workers of life; we may also "add sunshine to daylight by making the happy happier."—J. Vaughan.

Renew Your Health At Nature's Fountain

Without the Expense and Loss of Time Necessary for a Visit to the Spring

THE CRISIS

There comes a time in the life of practically every man and woman when their digestive or eliminative organs, or both, fail to respond to drugs prepared by human skill. In fact drugs seem to do them about as much harm as good for their systems rebel against all drugs. These are the cases which physicians call "stubborn" and "chronic" for the reason that they persist in spite of drug treatment. I do not refer to incurable diseases such as cancer and consumption, but to that larger class of functional disorders which we meet every day, where the organs of digestion and elimination are impaired.

For this class of cases our best physicians and our big city specialists send their wealthy patients to the mineral springs where, in the great majority of cases they are permanently restored or decidedly benefited. But what about the poor man who has not the money or the busy man or woman who cannot spare the time to spend several weeks or possibly months at a health resort? Shall circumstances deny them the restoration to health which Nature has provided? Read my answer in the coupon at the bottom of this page.

I have the utmost confidence in the Shivar Mineral Spring Water for to it I owe my Restoration to Health and probably my Life. It has made me tens of thousands of friends in all parts of America and even in foreign countries, whose faces I have never seen. Yet I count them my friends for the Shivar Spring Water has bound them to me by lasting gratitude.

I ask you to read their letters, a few samples of which I publish below for your benefit, and if you find among them any encouragement as to your own health do not hesitate to accept my offer which has no limits or conditions except those shown on the coupon. If you could read the letters that come to me daily, numbering about ten thousand a year, and the vast majority of them similar to those printed below, you would not wonder that I make this offer displaying my absolute confidence in the restorative powers of Shivar Mineral Water.

INDIGESTION

Savannah, Georgia.
I was suffering with indigestion, stomach and liver disorders and all its train of horrifying phenomena for several months. I had lived on milk, soft eggs, shredded wheat, a very insufficient diet for an active working man, and, of course, from disease and starvation was in a very low state of nervous vitality and general debility. I ordered ten gallons of your Mineral Water which I used continuously, reordering when necessary, and in four months gained twenty-nine pounds, was strong and perfectly well, and have worked practically every day since. It acts as a general renovator of the system. I prescribe it in my practice, and it has in every instance had the desired effects. It is essential to use this water in as large quantities as possible, for its properties are so happily blended and in such proportion that they will not disturb the most delicate system. It is purely Nature's remedy.

La Grange, Ga., Nov. 25, 1914.
I feel it my duty to suffering humanity to make public announcement of the benefits I have derived from Shivar Spring Water. I have been a sufferer for the past twenty-five years from indigestion and dyspepsia. After one week's trial of Shivar Water I commenced to improve, and after drinking it for four weeks I gained fifteen pounds. I feel better and stronger than I have in twenty-five years. I strongly recommend this Water to any one with stomach trouble of any character, and truly believe it will cure ulcer of the stomach. I am writing this voluntarily and trust it will fall in the hands of many who are so unfortunate as to be afflicted with indigestion and nervous dyspepsia.

C. V. TRUITT,
President Unity Cotton Mills.

DYSPEPSIA

Baltimore, Md., April 30, 1914.
For many years I suffered with stomach trouble as a direct result of asthma. I consulted the very best specialist in this country, and spent quite a large sum of money in my endeavor to get relief. However, I had about come to the conclusion that my case was hopeless, but by accident I happened to get hold of one of your booklets, and decided to try Shivar Spring Water. After drinking the water for about three weeks I was entirely relieved, and since that time have suffered but little inconvenience from my trouble. I cheerfully recommend the use of your Water to any one that may be suffering from stomach trouble.

It is a great pleasure to tell you that your Water has been a great benefit. I may say a great blessing, to me. My wife says it has helped me more than anything else I ever tried. I have been, for thirty years, a sufferer from stomach trouble.

RHEUMATISM

Leeds, S. C.

I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of rheumatism, chronic indigestion, kidney and bladder troubles, and in nervous and sick headaches, and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the liver, kidneys and bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter.

C. A. CROSBY, M. D.

Florence, S. C.

I suffered with indigestion and kidney trouble, and a year ago was stricken with acute articular rheumatism; was helpless for months, and since using your Spring Water I am walking without any crutch and improving daily. Indigestion much relieved. I wish I could write Shivar Spring Water in the sky so that the world could become acquainted with it.

MRS. THEO. KUKER.

BILIOUSNESS

Greenville, S. C., Feb. 25, 1914.

For over two years, following a nervous breakdown, I have suffered with a liver so torpid that ordinary remedies were absolutely powerless. Under such circumstances, I came to Shivar Spring, and began drinking the Water. Upon advice however, the first night I took a laxative; the second night a milder one. Since then I have taken none at all. The effect of the water has been remarkable — its action on my liver most marked, and my health and spirits greatly improved. I am satisfied that the laxative, followed by the Water, was the proper treatment in my case. My condition is now perfect.

S. A. DERIEUX.

RENAL AND CYSTIC

Columbia, S. C.

I suffered for eight years with kidney trouble and inflammation of the bladder to the extent that I would have to get up during the night some five or six times. After using this water only a few days, I am entirely relieved and suffer no more effect of the trouble whatever.

J. P. D.

High Point, N. C., Oct. 6, 1914

My wife has had a bad kidney trouble for several years. She has been using the water only about three weeks and it has already made her a new woman. Her color is much improved her appetite is all that she could wish for, her digestion seems to be perfect. We give Shivar Springs credit for it all.

T. G. S.

GALLSTONES

Greenville, S. C.

Shivar Spring Water cured my mother of gallstones, or, I might say, it snatched her from the hospital door, as the doctors had said nothing short of an operation would do her any good. After drinking the Water she was able to get out of bed, and is today stout and healthy. I hope these few lines will be of help to some one suffering as my mother did.

W. J. STRAWN.

Williamston, N. C., Oct. 3, 1914

My doctor said I would have to be operated on for gallstones, but since I have been drinking your water I haven't had to have a doctor.

"The Little Cherubs whispered,
'What strange new soul is this
Who cometh with a robe besmirked
Unto this Place of Bliss?'
Then spake the Eldest Angel,
'The robe he wears is fair—
The groping fingers of the poor
Have held and blessed him there.'"

"The Little Cherubs whispered,
'Who comes to be our guest
With dust upon his garment's hem
And stains upon his breast?'
Then spake the Eldest Angel,
'Most lovely is the stain—
The tears of those he comforted
Who may not weep again.'"

"The Little Cherubs whispered,
'What strange new soul is he
Who cometh with a burden here
And bears it tenderly?'
Then spake the Eldest Angel,
'He bears his life's award—
The burden of men's broken hearts
To place before the Lord.'"

"The dust upon his garment's hem—
My lips shall bow to it;
The stains upon the breast of him
Are gems thrice exquisite.
Oh, little foolish Cherubs,
What truth is this ye miss?—
There comes no saint to Paradise
Who does not come like this.'"

We have a nurse who will watch over it."—"Oh, I am sure your son's feet keep warm, but I will speak to the commandant about it when he happens in."—"It is hard, Dear Girl, I know, but you must be brave about it."—"I will ask the chef. No, he won't mind. He is always being asked for recipes. The boys get them to send back to their mothers. They say they want this good cooking to go on for them when the war is over."—"A furlough? Good for you. What? Out of money? Never mind; I'll stake you. I do that often for the boys and have never been stung yet."—"Yes, Central, 2343."—"In just a minute, Madame. I'll have the house, and they will give you a very nice room. Then you will be near camp and can see your boy again in the morning."

The Challenge of Sacrifice: The world war is laying emphasis on a profound truth of human psychology that has often been overlooked by the Church of God. This truth is that men respond more readily to a great and difficult task than they do to a small and insignificant demand. man who would be his follower and indicated that he desired only those to follow Him who would do so in the spirit of real sacrifice and love: "Who-soever doth not bear his cross and come after me cannot be my disciple." Men everywhere to-day are being challenged to hard and difficult tasks, and they are undertaking these tasks more readily than they previously undertook smaller tasks. Men are talking and planning to-day about national loans and business enterprises that run into the billions of dollars, whereas before the war they would scarcely have dared to speak of tasks in terms of millions of dollars.—Exchange.

How Am I Affected By Contact With Sin?

Men still make light of sin. It is trifled with in much of the literature that teems from the press. It is the pivot on which fascinating figures move, sometimes in the pages of a novel, or in the strains of a well-known song; sometimes in the thrilling death-scene of an opera; aye, even our hospitalities are sometimes degraded by hovering on the narrow margin that separates simplicity from excess, temperance from extravagance, self-restraint from self-indulgence.

Then again, is it not true, painfully true, that men have a hundred merry names for sins which make God frown and good men weep? Men for whom the Saviour shed His precious blood—men made in the image of God, rational, responsible, immortal; yea, laden with the obligations of holy baptism—smile on scenes that, made the Son of God shed bitter tears and that nailed Him to the tree. If there is a soul among us who smiles where Christ would sigh, and jests at that which made His life one long passion, filled His heart with overwhelming agony, and His soul with sorrow and fear; if with us there is even one who has made merry over the deplorable excesses of the prodigal, the melancholy wreck of the sinful, the degrading exhibition of the inebriate; or, in a higher level, if you have trifled with the sanctities of religion, belief or Scripture, and practically despised and rejected the salvation which is yours. . . then you have no fellowship with the sufferings of the Saviour. You have not the Spirit of Christ; and "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His." Thus you are supplied with reliable evidence of your state before God.—Lefroy.

A Grateful Sergeant.

A young sergeant came into my tent one day and said, "Mr. Y. M. C. A. man, would you like to have a ukelele for your tent?"

I replied, "We certainly would; it would be a useful acquisition."

"Well," said he, "here is a $10 instrument I wish to give as a token of my appreciation of the Y. M. C. A."

Then he told the following story:

"When I was back in the States I was a rank infidel. I made fun of religion and cared nothing for the Church. One day I heard, while in the trenches, a 'Y' man give a religious address. It was earnest, sincere and simple, and it gripped me. Then I watched the man to see whether he lived his message in daily life. I expected to trip him up in something he said or did. But I was disappointed. Not only did he live his religion straight, but he proved his eager desire to serve and help the boys. I became interested myself and finally consulted this man regarding the Christian religion. The more I talked with the 'Y' man the more impressed I was of the need of Christ. At last I accepted him as my Saviour. I am now a happy man and love the Y. M. C. A. I know of many other boys who have been led to accept Christ by the 'Y' workers. From now on I am going to make religion practical. Thank God for the Christian men who are coming over to France."

This young man is one of the finest specimens of a cultured, sincere and devout Christian I have met in a long time. It does one's heart good to talk with him. He comes in often to talk with me. He always has a smile on his face.—W. O. Shank.

Prayer.

Our lives are fed by prayer—for not alone

Strong yearnings of the soul for holy things,

Or aspirations high, or musings deep
Can give us rest of soul—as to a sea,
In which we children dip our tiny pails
And bring up water, we recur to prayer;
For loving, living, longing every hour,
We give up to Thy care, Almighty
Strength,

That which our hands are all too weak to hold,

Take, then, O Lord, my doubts, my fears, myself,
My friends, my foes—if any such there be;

But also take my pleasures and my joys,

My knowledge—all my intercourse with men,

Or books, or with this wondrous world of Thine—

Yes, take them all, that I may rest in Thee.

—Adelaide Ross.

Dr. Calkins was one day explaining to a group of church officers God's financial plan of weekly giving on a tithing basis. Turning to one of his auditors, a shrewd-looking farmer, he asked if he had made the matter clear. The man replied:

"They's a ketch in it."

"Why, my brother, I intended to make it very plain," said the speaker.

"Oh, it's plain enough," replied the farmer, "but they's a ketch in it, all the same. They's deceit in it; for I can see if we adopt that plan we'll be paying out more money than we intend to give."—Missionary Visitor.

THE CLOSED CHURCHES.

Last Sunday was a joyful day to many congregations who were allowed to meet together again in public worship. Next Sunday will see many more made glad by the restoration of this sacred privilege, and in a few weeks, we trust, the ministrations of God's house will everywhere be resumed. In itself it will be a distinct cause for thankfulness.

No small part of the heavy cost to the country of this visitation of sickness has been the interdiction of public assemblies. It has been felt in business and civic and social life, and especially in the schools. It is difficult to estimate the loss to the rising generation caused by an interruption of four or five weeks in their school life. But the great aggregate of loss arising from the closing of the churches of the land for a month or more it is impossible to estimate. There is no gauge by which to measure spiritual forces. Like all the most precious things of life they do not submit themselves to mathematical computation. But every devout churchgoer has felt the deprivation and missed this source of strength and refreshment and upbuilding of the soul. God be praised that His grace is not confined to ordinary means or times and places, and in many a home and many a closet He has been found in the usual hour of public worship no less present than in the sanctuary. Still we have missed much that was gracious and helpful, and doubtless it was a part of the providential purpose of this visitation that it should be so. Like others of our choicest blessings we have not valued the service and sacraments of God in His holy place as we should. They have been neglected, or have been lightly esteemed, and sometimes we have said in our hearts, "Behold, what a weariness is it!" We are reminded of a divine warning from the mouth of one of the olden prophets: "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine on the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord." One needs to think about that before its direful meaning is realized. There are those who have inflicted this judgment upon themselves, and their souls are dried up and their strength decayed. Perhaps it was to remind us of such a spiritual danger that we were deprived for a little while of just one or two of our ordinary means of communion with God.

Some have been doubtful of the wisdom or necessity of closing the churches during the epidemic, and at least one of our most distinguished clergymen has criticised the action of the municipal authorities of his city in very indignant terms. He felt that the ethical and spiritual aspects of the situation have been ignored and repudiated and only a grossly materialistic view has prevailed, that the religious sensibilities of the community have been needlessly disregarded, and that a great moral loss has been inflicted for a very doubtful physical gain. Perhaps there were circumstances connected with the case in his community, as has occasionally happened elsewhere to our knowledge, which laid the authorities justly open to criticism. But as a rule they have felt deeply the responsibility upon them of caring for the public safety with as little disturbance of the ordinary life of the community as that would allow, and their decisions have generally been acquiesced in without complaint. Under the conditions this tribute to Caesar was not contrary to, but a part of, our tribute of obedience and submission to God, and was to be rendered as such.

Thanks be to God, it was His hand into which we were fallen and not the hand of man! His mercy has rejoiced against judgment, and the plague, we trust, is stayed. More humbly, more trustfully than ever before, let us go our way "into His gates with thanksgiving, and into His courts with praise."

DEAD ISSUES.

A correspondent sends us a copy of that militant Roman Catholic publication, the Truth Magazine, containing an article which seems to him so contrary to historical fact as generally accepted that he thinks we may deem it worthy of notice. The article in question is headed "St. Bartholomew's Day," with the sub-title, "The Massaces—Was the Church Responsible? No!" That it was intended altogether for "home consumption" is shown by the opening paragraph, which is a sample of the style and content of the article, and, indeed, of the whole magazine.

"One of the readiest weapons of Protestant controversialists in their futile attacks against the Catholic faith is the oft-reiterated but false accusation of Catholic complicity in the terrible massacres of St. Bartholomew's Day in the year 1572. It is not at all surprising that the enemies of the Church, baffled and bewildered by their fruitless searchings among the archives of history for some tangible and incontrovertible evidence in support of their attitude, have grasped at this feeble weapon as a drowning man clutches at a straw. Protestant tradition asserts that the hideous deed of blood was the outcome of a long premeditated and carefully arranged conspiracy for the extermination of Protestantism in France, and to which a couple of popes were accessories, the one before and the other after the fact, and furthermore that when the foul deed had been accomplished, Rome and all the Catholic world rejoiced as for a great triumph of truth over heresy."

Which shows how ill-versed some of us, at least, are in "Protestant traditions" as well as "weapons," as seen through Roman spectacles. Having thus laid a foundation for his article, the writer goes on to show how Catholics regard this "vile calumny," and proceeds to prove that "the Church and the Holy See were in no way responsible for or accomplices in the shameful deed." This he does by "pointing" to "indisputable diplomatic documents comparatively recently unearthed from the archives of Rome, France, Spain, Venice and Belgium, which clearly prove that political motives, alone, were responsible for the massacre." It may be noted that there is no citation from these documents, no description of their character or contents, no information as to where they are or how they may be consulted, no intimation as to how the writer became familiar with their revelations. The guilt of the massacre is fastened upon Charles IX, who was a degenerate, and his mother, Catharine de Medici, who was a pagan and a Machiavellian though professedly a Catholic. This royal lady, having become entangled in certain bargainings with the Huguenots, got out of her difficulties in the simplest manner at her disposal, namely, a complete and treacherous massacre. Many of the persecuted Protestants, however, were protected and saved by Catholic prelates and priests. To excuse the deed, King Charles made a declaration to his Parliament and sent it afterwards throughout Europe, to the effect that the harsh proceedings were necessary because of a conspiracy of the Huguenots to murder the King and his Court and overthrow the government, and thus destroy the Church, the monarchy and society. This statement was accepted, "and it is even true that the clergy of Paris were so deceived by it that they threw open their churches and held ceremonies of thanksgiving as for a national deliverance." But, concludes our ingenuous writer, "Catholics and Pope Gregory XIII were not in the least degree implicated. The Pope received a distorted version of the tragedy, which convinced him, as it did others, that the attack on the Huguenots was merely a protective measure in the interests of the Church and monarchy."

We finish the article with a distinct sense of disappointment that so competent a special pleader, with all those indisputable diplomatic documents at hand, could not make out a better case for the Holy Father and Catholics in general. As there were only two parties in France, the Catholics and the Protestants, and the Protestants were the ones that were massacred, it looks like some of the Catholics must have been involved in the matter. Also that the Pope was easily gulled, or that he was strangely derelict in not investigating further into the unseemly conduct of his faithful supporters, to say nothing of the clergy of Paris who sang solemn Te Deums in celebration of the cold-blooded murder, for whatever reason, of between twenty and thirty thousand of their fellow-citizens. At best it was a bad business, whether the authorities of the Church approved of it or were merely indifferent to it.

But all this happened nearly three and a half centuries ago—in 1572, to be exact, and the world has moved on since then and is still moving. We have reviewed this somewhat typical article from "Truth," not because we suppose our readers are particularly interested in the subject but to point a moral. Why should such old issues as this be kept alive in these days? As a matter of history, of course the facts should be recorded as fully and impartially as may be, for the lessons of history are of the utmost value to the thoughtful and wise. But as brickbats, whether used offensively or defensively, they soon become practically useless except to keep up old animosities and to serve a disputant at a pinch. Neither the student of history nor the man on the street is going to judge a living institution or organization by its acts of three centuries or one century ago, but by what it is doing and becoming now. It is of value to an institution, a Church let us say, to have a history. It gives it position and prestige, proves its vitality, and may be supposed to confer the wisdom of long experience. But largely if not chiefly it is of value in teaching by the mistakes and failures of the past what to avoid and what to improve upon. When like a decayed aristocracy it begins to look upon its history as a finished product it becomes fossilized, and the world passes it by as a thing that, just to that extent, has lost its usefulness. We instance a Church because the Churches are peculiarly given to living in their past;

Till life becomes a legend of the dead;"

conceiving of it as a thing to be maintained, imitated, reproduced as far as possible, instead of a point of departure for new and better things. There is one thing the Churches have which can never pass away—the word of God. For the rest, let them not be too careful of that which is now in the realm of history, either to defend or to conserve it. The stepping-stone of one generation may become a stumbling-block when carried into the next. The wall of defense, when its purpose has been fulfilled, becomes merely a wall of separation; and there are too many such. These are new and strenuous times, and the militant Church, like the fighting man, should not be cumbered with too much baggage brought from the rear. Neither is it a time to be fighting over old battles. "Forgetting those things that are behind" is oftentimes not only wise but essential, and it seems peculiarly so now, lest the new day come upon us and find us still groping in the twilight of yestereve.

Here and There

The sum of $50,000 has been appropriated by the Board of Education of New York City, to be used in providing lunches for children in the public schools. Dr. Henry Dwight Chapin, specialist in children's diseases, asserts that nearly a quarter of a million children in New York are under-nourished. There is no doubt but that the same condition would be equally true in other cities if investigated.

The loyalty of the Filipinos has been abundantly proven in the present war. Although exempt from the selective draft, they offered their national guard division to the United States for use in France and mobilized it at their own expense. They have given two destroyers to the United States Navy, costing $4,000,000. They have subscribed for Liberty Bonds more than $24,000,000. When it is remembered that we only paid the Spanish Government $20,000,000 for these islands, and that they have now voluntarily loaned the United States a fifth more than that sum, it will be realized what a good investment we made.

In the death of Mrs. Ella Flagg Young the Spanish influenza claimed a most brilliant victim. When she died she was chairman of the National Woman's Liberty Loan Committee. She had been active in educational work, either as teacher, college professor or administrator, from 1862 to 1915. She was Superintendent of the Public Schools of Chicago for six years, and chosen President of the National Education Association in 1910. Her career gave a great impetus to the employment of women in high administrative positions in the educational world. Today many of the Western States have women at the head of their educational systems as the result of the efficient record made by Mrs. Young. The ambitions of intellectual women throughout the country have been stimulated by her achievements.

No one week in the history of the world has probably ever seen such fatal blows dealt to autocratic governments as have been delivered in the past few days. Turkey and Austria, two of the most brutally oppressive despotic governments which ever existed, have been forced to their knees to beg for peace from the embattled democracies of the world, and have been stripped of their powers for all time.

In the passage of the Dardanelles by an allied fleet, which took place this week, that historic strip of water has been once more thrown open to the commerce of the world. It is almost certain that one of the conditions of peace will be the making of these straits open water hereafter and the prohibition of fortifications that can control them. This fleet which has now entered the Black Sea will be in position to render valuable assistance to Roumania and the Czecho-Slovaks in Russia, besides transporting allied troops to make an attack through Austria at the back door of Germany.

A plan is on foot to socialize the medical profession in England and organize it as a branch of the government service, like the army or navy.

Under this system doctors will become a State medical force, organized under the public health insurance act. A new project contemplates the employment of full time physicians by the State.

From Peking, China, comes news that a conference between the leaders of north and south China has been arranged, and that good grounds exist for the hope that differences will be settled between these two factions within a fortnight, thus re-establishing the unity of China, which has been seriously jeopardized for some time past.

A cargo of German toys has arrived in New York, and it is planned to burn them by way of expressing the feelings of the people of the United States toward the reception of German-made articles. It is believed that if New York will announce the day and hour when this bonfire is to take place that it might be made a national event of the burning in effigy of the Kaiser at the same time.

The Literary Digest and a number of other important publications were very much delayed in reaching their subscribers last week on account of a strike of about five thousand pressmen in New York. The differences between the employers and employees have been adjusted.

The first of the new type of submarine patrol vessels, "Eagle No. 1," has been put in commission at Detroit and will be sent East at once by way of the Great Lakes and canals. These boats are being manufactured by the Ford plant and will now be turned out rapidly. Their manufacture was for the purpose of hunting and destroying German submarines, but it looks now as though they will have to be put to more peaceful purposes, because submarines seem to be making their way back to base as fast as possible.

At a time like this, when our health authorities tell us it is dangerous to go to church or do almost anything else where you come in contact with other fellow-beings, it is well to bear in mind that classic verse:

"Be careful what you do, germs fly about in herds,
Use antiseptic drinking cups,
And sterilize your words."

Now that the ferocity of the Hun is being curbed, the little republic of Switzerland is beginning to draw a long breath of relief and comes forward with the request that the Rhine should be made an international stream. For four long years Switzerland has stood ready to play the part of a second Belgium if the Germans should attempt to violate her territory, and her request should have due consideration at the hands of the peacemakers.

Book Notices

(All books reviewed at any time in this column may be ordered at the publisher's price given, plus postage 15 cents, from the book department of the Southern Churchman.)

A Lieutenant of Cavalry in Lee's Army.
By the Rev. G. W. Beale. The Gorham Press. Boston. 1918. Pp. 231. $1.25.

Few books of this sort remain to be written because they are few who are left to write them. Fortunately, however, enough has been recorded of these personal experiences and observations to illumine the story which shall yet be told of the great American war and to cast in bold relief upon the pages of history one of the most heroic figures of all time, that of the Confederate soldier. The unpretentious volume before us gives the records of one of these. He tells of the actions in which he took part, of the qualities of the great cavalry commanders under whom he served, the chivalry and brave deeds of his comrades. His personal mention of the latter, especially those who fell in battle, will add to the value of his work among many families of Eastern Virginia. A plain and unadorned story of a soldier's life in the field when wars were fought above ground, face to face with the foe, and with arms instead of machinery and chemicals.

My Life With Young Men. Fifty Years in the Young Men's Christian Association. By Richard C. Morse, Consulting Secretary of the International Committee, Y. M. C. A. Association press. New York. 1918. Pp. 547. $3.50.

The author of this autobiography was for fifty years the great leader of the Y. M. C. A. in America and in its almost world-wide expansion. He represents all that was best in that great organization which, in its strength and in its weakness, its breadth and its narrowness, has been so characteristic a product of the religious life of this country. The book may be read for the story of a fine character and a successful worker whose experiences are well told. It may also be read to learn how much the Christian Church in this country has lost of religious earnestness and energy which it could inspire, but could not utilize and make its own. The history of the Y. M. C. A. is one of great achievement, but also of misdirected effort, of an undertaking to do the Church's work outside of the Church and without her sanction and guidance. It may well be studied thoughtfully and sympathetically if the organized Church would know its own weakness and read a needed lesson from its failures.

The Christian Man, the Church and the War. By Robert E. Speer. The Macmillan Company. New York. 1918. Pp. 105. 60 cents.

The first of the three chapters on "The Christian Man and the War" is a little out of date now. But if any scruples remain anywhere as to the justification of our part in the present war they ought to be removed by this candid and satisfying presentation of the case. The second chapter, on "The Church and the War," discusses wisely matters which are vital at this moment, while the third and last, on "The World Problem and Christianity," broaches those principles upon which all Christian forces ought to be informed and united. Dr. Speer's eminence as a Christian writer is well known. This little book is stamped with the sincerity, the spirituality and the practical commonsense of its author. It presents in simple form just the great practical and fundamental Christian duties which the Christian element in the world today must practice and enforce if the fruits of victory are to be conserved and the nations are to reap the true reward of their sacrifices. To those who wish to understand the vital problems of today and tomorrow we commend this little volume very heartily.

BISHOP FRANCIS KEY BROOKE.

By the Rev. A. B. Nicholas.

There have been so many fine tributes given to our departed Bishop that there seems little need of my poor words. Yet as we worked together two years in Sandusky, Ohio, and twenty-three years in Oklahoma, a quarter of a century in all, it seems fitting that I should offer my tribute. We make no lament like that of David over a misguided son, or Tennyson's over Arthur Hallam, but praise to God for a life worn out in work for the blessed Christ. He was named after the author of "The Star Spangled Banner." He had one brother in the Union Army, Colonel Hunter Brooke, and one in the Confederate Army under Stonewall Jackson, the Rev. Pendleton Brooke, whom I met in Missouri. His father was an eloquent and leading minister of the church in Southern Ohio, who moved to Gambier, Knox County, Ohio, the seat of Kenyon College. The Bishop was born there and graduated from the college, and there on Friday, October 25th, all that was mortal of him was laid to rest close to Rosse Chapel. He came as Missionary Bishop of the entire Territory in 1893 at the time of the Cherokee opening. I came to work with him two years later, in 1895. We took turns in preaching in all sorts of places over the unbroken prairie, in barns and side hills, or in some plain little church where the pioneer or Indian worshipped. Then after long dusty or rainy rides we would return to the plain little cathedral in Guthrie. Thus we worked on together for several years. The Bishop was always a pleasant worker, with a fund of humor to lighten a weary hour, and yet full of consecration to the Master. Oklahoma City becoming the capital, he followed the people there, and I stayed to hold on to the work in Guthrie. Trinity Church was always very dear to him as the first cathedral parish and full of the associations of the early days. He could hardly walk up Washington Avenue without a tear-dimmed eye. In Trinity Church also the west chancel window was in memory of his son, John Brooke, who, soon after graduating from Kenyon College, gave his noble life in San Francisco Bay, trying to save two young students from drowning. God has blessed the labor of Bishop, clergy and people. Oklahoma has now two missionary districts, one of which was under Bishop Brooke and the eastern under Bishop Thurston, whom Presiding Bishop Tuttle has just asked to take charge of both. The cathedral in Oklahoma City has developed finely. The Council of Advice sent Dean F. J. Bate to represent the Missionary District of Oklahoma at the funeral at Gambier. Archdeacon Sturges, who, after laboring in Florida, Georgia and Cuba, has retired to close his days here with me, was also a graduate with us at Kenyon. Bishop Brooke would often come and join us, in his happy way, in reminiscences of the college days. As I am jotting down these rambling thoughts, I can see him in the chair in my study, planning what he would like to have done for the work in old Trinity. May God help us to follow with him in the work for the blessed Christ, and may God bless his dear ones that remain!

"THE BLOOD OF JESUS CHRIST, HIS SON, CLEANSETH US FROM ALL SIN."

The Rev. W. H. Neilson, D. D.

Who fully understands the meaning of these precious words which have been a comfort to so many souls under the burden of sorrow and sin? The blood cleanseth from sin. Here we have spiritual truth illustrated by material metaphor. Blood cannot really cleanse from sin. In the refinement of sugar it is sometimes used to remove the impurities which have attached themselves to the crude article, which impurities may illustrate sin. But we do not know that this figure was in the mind of the sacred writer when he penned the words of the text. In no ordinary sense, can material blood be said to purify from spiritual defilement. The Hebrews were forbidden to taste of the blood of the sacrifice because, as the law testifies, "the blood is the life"—it symbolizes the life. It is the life-fluid conveying the nutriment which sustains the life and is propelled by the heart throughout the body for the maintenance of its tissues. The blood, therefore, occupies an important place in the human organism. It is not to be treated lightly. "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed"—such is the Divine prediction. In the preparation of the Israelitish meal, the blood was drained from the flesh that was to be eaten, poured out as in the offering of a sacrifice. That, in fact, made the sacrifice—the "sacrificing" or "making holy" of the libation poured out to God. Thus the whole life of the Hebrew was sacrificial. Every bit of meat which passed between his lips had been offered to God. The offering was on his part voluntary. Also, when the victims seemed to offer little resistance to the knife, the sacrifice was supposed by the ancients to have greater efficacy—it was more nearly voluntary: "The rams of Nebaioth," says the prophet figuring the ready submission to God's will, "went up willingly upon thine altar." The surrender of the life must be voluntary, and it is upon this that the value of the illustration rests. The self-surrender of the Cross is the act which insures our salvation. Self-surrender, self-sacrifice, is therefore the basis of the Christian hope and of the Christian life. The whole life of the Christian, as was that of the Hebrew, is sacrificial, only in the case of the Christian, it is really so, while in the case of the Hebrew it was ceremonially or metaphorically so. What he eats symbolizes the gift of God for his redemption—all that he does symbolizes the surrender of self for the glory of God and in recognition of the supreme act of divine self-sacrifice. "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son." "He loved us and gave Himself for us." "He made Him to be a sin-offering for us that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." These and innumerable other passages elaborate the statement of the text, and bring out in glorious relief the sublime picture of the basis and reality of the Christian life. The life apart from the act of self-surrender in both the Son of God and the individual soul is of no value in the sight of the Great Father. When we complain of self-sacrifice we rebel against that which forms the very essence and tissue of the Christian life. When we try to escape self-denial we are trying to avoid that which makes us partakers with Christ and inheritors of the blessing which he purchased for us. The Bible is full of illustrations of self-denial as the mode of entrance into the Christian life and into the hope of the everlasting future. The Atonement is, therefore, the glorification of selflessness, and of that selflessness we must all be partakers if we are to share the society of the Ideal Man through all eternity.

THE WAR WORK CAMPAIGN.

November 11-18.

The sum asked for in the War Work Drive will remain at $170,500,000. A far greater amount is needed. Whatever the amount contributed it will be divided pro rata among the seven organizations interested....

Let it be a Thanksgiving for Victory, and reflect somewhat the sentiment of gratitude felt by this nation for what our men have done in the great war!

Demobilization Perils.

Some people wonder whether the $170,500,000 will all be needed if peace should come shortly. Dr. Mott's answer is that much more will be needed in any event, and that if the war were to end in a week it would take from one to two or more years to bring our boys back to this country. And this period of demobilization, he points out, would be the most perilous of all to the morals of the men. Relieved from the tension of the trenches, with less rigid drill and more leisure, the temptations would be far stronger than now, and the need proportionately greater to provide the athletic, educational, entertaining and social means that would keep the men busy with wholesome and good things and out of the alluring evils. Never would demands upon the Y. M. C. A. and other agencies be so great, or the need of social and religious and restraining influences be so urgent as in this period of relaxation.

The social welfare work means not only work to keep the American soldiers fit for the fight and at the top of health and efficiency, but also to bring them back home without shame or stain, ready for the highest type and service of American citizenship.

The millions will all be needed, never fear for that. And no matter how many more may be needed, no amount is too great for this ministry to our army and navy and the soldiers of the allies—a ministry of helpfulness and unselfishness and ready self-sacrifice such as the world has never seen before. And the glory of it is that the support on the part of the American people has been voluntary—such an outpouring of money from altruistic and patriotic motives as has no parallel in history.

On with the drive! Let us go over the top. Make it two hundred millions, so as to leave a margin for emergencies!

Young Woman's Christian Association. Their Work Must Not Be Overlooked.

For every fighter there is a woman war worker. Our army of women engaged in war industries in the second line of defense is equal to our army of soldiers.

Industrial war service centers are being established by the Y. W. C. A. at the request of the government in munition centers. The government watched the hostess house plan become successful in our camps and liked the type. A girls' hostess house in munition centers with its cafeteria and big living room has now become the social center for the girl and her friends.

The task of providing recreation and community life in the new towns in which munition plants are situated has also been given the Y. W. C. A. These towns are small and offer practically no diversion. There were no telephones, no movies, no books, no newspapers, no play of any sort until the Y. W. C. A. secretary organized a program of recreation, hikes, gymnasium classes, picnics, games and beach parties.

In large cities where girls are making ammunition, information desks, directories, employment bureaus, rest period recreation and the like are maintained for them. The Association is also co-operating with employers through a bureau of industrial supervisors.

Girls in munition centers must be happy so that they will not want to shift from plant to plant and the output thereby fall off. For winning the war, the production of the industrial army must be kept continually at the highest point.

Experience in France and England has shown that just such activities as these now being organized have an enormous effect on the labor turnover and the morale of the workers. We must look to the welfare of our women war workers and keep them as happy and efficient as our fighters.

The Young Women's Christian Association is the one woman's organization of the group, and the one organization which looks after the morale of women exclusively.

The Young Women's Christian Association is asking for fifteen million dollars in the United War Campaign beginning November 11th.

War Library Service.

The first thing that a wounded soldier wants is a drink of water. The next thing he wants, nine times in ten, is a book. That the Americans are a race of readers has been proved in the military hospitals abroad, as well as in the base hospitals that have sprung up here at home. Nurses and doctors report that all sick and wounded soldiers demand reading matter, some as soon as they enter the hospital, and others as soon as they know that they can get it for the asking.

What kind of books do they read in the hospital? That depends on the individual, says Miss Miriam E. Carey, field representative of the hospital service of the American Library Association. "To put a man to bed does not change him fundamentally; he is the same man in most respects that he was before he took off his uniform and donned pajamas and a bath-robe. If he is an educated man with a taste for books he will want something to read as soon as he reaches the hospital, and in some cases he will anticipate his feelings after his operation and will provide himself with a book in advance."

There is at least one case on record in a certain base hospital where a young lieutenant insisted on taking a book with him into the operating room. He had just reached a thrilling chapter in a detective story, and he was afraid that someone else would get the book before he was out of the ether. When consciousness began to stir in him again his hand went groping over the counterpane. The nurse was a wise and sympathetic woman. "Here it is, lieutenant," she said. "Be good, now, and we'll let you read a little tomorrow."

"A sick officer," says Miss Carey, "is usually a very unhappy man. What he wants at first is entertainment, distraction. He wants a detective story that will fairly raise his hair. He sends word to the librarian to that effect. He may be a man who enjoyed the higher classics, but just at this point he needs the 'Hound of the Baskervilles.'"

It is the same with the enlisted men. What they want first is something to make them forget the pain and discomfort of their aching bodies. A man lying all day looking at his bandaged leg elevated at an angle of sixty-five degrees, his foot attached to a trolley wire and loaded with sandbags, wants nothing more difficult to assimilate than Sherlock Holmes or the works of O. Henry. Later on he will call for something more serious. Most soldiers want to read books on the war. A very large number want to study, and technical books are in lively demand in hospitals.

"A man's state of mind has much to do with his reading," reports Miss Carey. "He may be disappointed, he may be anxious about his family. He may be afraid they are going to foreclose the mortgage. He may be merely homesick." What would you like to read to forget homesickness? If you have such a book send it to the American Library Association. If you haven't the book give its price when the big welfare drive starts on November 11th. Three million five hundred thousand dollars of the $170,500,000 to be raised goes to the War Library Service of the Library Association.

One hundred and forty-nine hospitals and Red Cross houses have already been equipped with libraries, and nowhere have the books been more eagerly read. A man in hospital will read more than he ever did before in his life. He will get the reading habit if he did not have it when he was well. No matter where he begins, he will usually end by reading real literature. The librarian makes it her business to introduce good books into the wards. She comes in at regular intervals wheeling her well loaded book wagon, stopping at each bedside and letting the men browse and select at will. She talks books with sick men, and gets from them the kind of reading they prefer. The next time she visits the wards she has exactly what each one asked for. That is why money as well as books is asked for. Money is necessary in order to give the books that are needed when they are wanted.

"Every hospital," says Miss Carey, "needs books in simple English, for in our army there are many illiterate and uneducated men who cannot read the ordinary adult literature. The books that were given in the last drive did not include many so-called boys' books. These books are very much needed in hospital libraries to meet the needs of the uneducated.

"Books in foreign languages are needed greatly. There is nothing more pathetic than a sick soldier who cannot read English, and our army has some who can scarcely speak it. Books are called for in French, Italian, Spanish, Russian and Greek. Text-books are wanted, including primers and readers, for even in the hospital there are occasionally men who will want to learn to read."

THE NATIONAL STUDENT COUNCIL OF THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The Rev. Paul Micou, B. D.

This Council was organized at a conference of college workers called by the General Board of Religious Education at Howe School, Howe, Ind., May 21-24, 1918. The problem which confronted the conference was to create some form of national student work which would not interfere with the local organizations of Episcopal students already existing; which would unite the student work of the General Board of Religious Education, the Board of Missions and the Joint Commission on Social Service, and which would give the local workers some share in the management of the student work. The National Student Council accomplishes all of these purposes: It unites the general agencies of the Church by having two representatives of each on the Council, one of whom is also a member of the Executive Committee. The local workers are represented on the Council by a student, a professor and a minister in a college town from each province elected by the Provincial Synods. There is no interference with any effective student Episcopal organization. These organizations become "units" of the Council by agreeing to carry out a "minimum program," which is as follows:

(1) Worship: The unit shall make provision for attendance at a church service once a week, which if possible shall be the Holy Communion, and shall also make provision for a monthly Corporate Communion.

(2) Religious Education: The unit shall make provision for religious education under Church auspices at least during Advent and Lent.

(3) Church Extension: The unit shall undertake to extend the Church both in the college and throughout the world by personal prayer, work and contributions.

(4) Service: The unit shall provide opportunities for personal service in the Church and in the community.

(5) Meetings: At least four meetings of the unit shall be held each year.

This program sets a goal before the students for their Church work. It is capable of adaptation to any situation and can be carried out in harmony with religious organizations which already exist in the college.

The National Student Council acts as a board of strategy in the student work of the Church. This is shown by the fact that at its first meeting, September 10-12, at Gambier, Ohio, it issued a letter to all engaged in Church student work which thoroughly reviewed the situation caused by the militarization of the colleges and gave suggestions as to the best methods of work. The Council, or its Executive Committee, is thus able to advise with regard to any situation which may arise. Another important function of the Council is the representation of the Church before such bodies as the Student Departments of the National Board of Y. W. C. A.'s and of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A.'s

There is unquestionably a great future before the National Student Council, for in it we see the first approach to real unity of action on the part of the boards of our Church in dealing with the student problem.

BETTER NEGRO SCHOOLS.

The State Department of Education has just issued a notable bulletin on negro education prepared by Mr. Favrot, State agent for rural colored schools in Louisiana. Mr. Favrot quotes from Dr. Dabney, the distinguished Tennessee educator, to show the economic results of education. According to Dr. Dabney, Massachusetts gives her citizens seven years' schooling, and her yearly per capita production is $260; the United States, with 4.4 years' schooling, produces $170 per capita per year; Tennessee, with three years' schooling, produces $116 per year.

Taking $100 as the yearly production of the uneducated negro, the bulletin gives a careful estimate of financial loss to the State through sickness and death preventable by sanitary improvement, of nearly $16,000,000 per year. This does not include the sick losses of whites traceable to health conditions among negroes. The State also bears its share of soil-devastation in the South, where 100,000,000 acres are cultivated by negro farmers, tenants and laborers, most of whom have never been taught the rudiments of successful agriculture.

"We see the need," says Mr. Favrot, "we can stand the cost, and we know how to do the job. Do it in the interest of a more prosperous State, better health, or public safety; or do it because our sense of justice or fairness prompts us to it. Or do it, in the comprehensive plan of our President, 'to make the world safe for democracy.'"

COMMUNICATIONS FROM THE CHURCH WAR COMMISSION.

Editor Southern Churchman:

I am enclosing orders from the War Department and Navy Department relative to civilian chaplains. Each order explains itself. It will be noticed in the case of the former that it now seems possible for certain civilian chaplains to be appointed as assistants of commissioned chaplains and to be retained in the camps in this capacity. The interpretation of both orders will undoubtedly depend in great measure upon the local commandant and the local senior chaplain. These orders have only recently come to the attention of the Executive Committee. The War Department order takes precedence of the order of July 24th, by which the privileges of civilian chaplains were withdrawn.

At a recent meeting of the Executive Committee a message from Bishop Perry was read in which Chaplain Brent and he asked the War Commission to underwrite $50,000 for the purchase of motor cars overseas to be used by chaplains. Chaplain Brent and Bishop Perry suggested that the full financial responsibility should be at once undertaken by the War Commission of the Episcopal Church, with the hope that the General War-Time Commission of the Churches would apportion to each of the larger communions its share of this total amount, inasmuch as the money would be used to supply chaplains without interdenominational distinction. The Executive Committee immediately informed the General War-Time Commission that it was ready to underwrite $50,000 for this purchase. The General War-Time Commission of the Churches accepted with deep gratitude the proposition, and in consequence Bishop Perry was cabled that the War Commission of the Episcopal Church was willing to underwrite $50,000.

A committee has been appointed by the General War-Time Commission of the Churches to apportion the proper share of this expense to each one of the larger communions. It is needless to say that the War Commission of the Episcopal Church was glad to be able to make this immediate response to Chaplain Brent and Bishop Perry, and also to assist in the work of the chaplains of the Christian Church without denominational distinction.

I am enclosing a letter written by Bishop Lawrence to the clergy. It will explain itself.

The campaign for funds with which to finance the War Commission for another year will take place about February 1st. Within a very few weeks the clergy and the people of the Church at large will receive ample information in regard to what the War Commission has been doing, and also in regard to its future needs. It is needless to say that whether peace is declared in the near future or not, the work among enlisted men will continue for a long time to come, and will be of the greatest moral and religious importance. It is with a deep consciousness of the even larger opportunity to serve the country that the War Commission will appeal again to the Church for funds.

HENRY B. WASHBURN,
Executive Secretary.

14 Wall Street, New York,
October 31, 1918.

The orders referred to are as follows:

War Department, Washington,
October 11, 1918.

Following the receipt of many letters, some commending but many protesting, the War Department's instructions dated July 24, 1918, referring to the services of camp pastors and voluntary chaplains, a committee representing the General War-Time Commission of the Churches met representatives of the War Department at the office of F. P. Keppel, Third Assistant Secretary, on October 3d.

The following is a statement of conclusions resulting from that conference, which have been approved by eight of the nine gentlemen present:

Attention is called to Sections No. 4 and No. 5, War Department's general memorandum A. G. 68044, subject, "Services of Clergymen as Camp Pastors and Voluntary Chaplains," which permits the following plan for directing hereafter the religious work among our soldiers.

A. The importance of training our chaplains for training overseas must be emphasized.

B. The help of clergymen to whom the churches of America have looked for inspiration and leadership is appreciated and an arrangement is desired by which such men, barred perhaps by advanced age or personal responsibilities from entering the army as chaplains, may continue to help at the training camps.

C. The War Department desires the best efforts of all the churches, Protestant, Catholic and Jewish, to influence experienced and capable men, who are eligible, to apply at once for commissions as chaplains.

D. The names of such men as those classified by paragraph "B" may be submitted by the churches to the Executive Committee of the General War-Time Commission of the Churches, of similar committees a certified list may be furnished for the use of the War Department.

E. When each of these men has been approved by the War Department the attention of all chaplains will be called to these certified lists and they will be permitted to invite, with the approval of the commanding officer, such representative men to visit the camp for the purpose of helping the chaplains with their work among enlisted men and officers.

F. All clergymen invited to camp as guests of the chaplain under this order shall report to the chaplain in charge of such services and shall work in co-operation with, and under the direction of, said chaplain.

G. The term of service of any clergyman under this order in any camp or post shall be determined by the chaplain in charge with the approval of the War Department.

H. The War Department looks with favor upon efforts of the various churches, located in cities or communities adjacent to camps, to shape their services with special reference to the needs of the soldiers on leave, and urges all chaplains to call the attention of their men to such services when provided.

I. An important result, very much desired and expected under the plan proposed, will be the assurance that the visiting clergymen will keep the "folks back home" informed of conditions in the camps.

Navy Department,
Bureau of Navigation,
Washington, D. C.
To Commandant Third Naval District:

Subject, Activities of ministers of the gospel other than members of the Chaplain Corps of the Navy in connection with navy yards and training stations.

1. The bureau desires that all civilian clergymen who may be permitted to minister to the enlisted men of the service at various navy yards and stations be under the supervision of the regularly commissioned officer of the Chaplain Corps on duty at the yard or station in question. This supervision will, of course, be under the direction of the commandant or commanding officer, as the case may be.

2. None such civilians are "chaplains" and they are not authorized to employ the term. They are merely outside workers admitted to a naval station to assist in carrying on the greatly increased religious and social work incident to the rapid expansion of the personnel of the navy.

LEIGH C. PALMER,
Rear Admiral, U. S. Navy, Chief of Bureau.

Letter From Bishop Lawrence. Coming Campaign for Funds.

The War Commission of the Episcopal Church,
14 Wall Street, New York.
October 31, 1918.

My Dear Brother:

May I call your attention to a very important matter? The United Campaign for the welfare of the soldiers and sailors begins November 11th. It includes, as you know, among its seven objects the Y. M. C. A., the National Catholic War Council and the Jewish Welfare Board. We should urge our people as Christian citizens and patriots to give this campaign hearty and generous support, and such support should be unequivocal and strong.

At the same time it is due to the people of our Church to be made aware of the fact that their own Church is doing a large and strong work for the spiritual as well as the physical and social welfare of the soldiers and sailors. This work is supplementary to that of the Y. M. C. A. and other organizations and cannot be done by them.

For instance, during the past year we have, with the approval of the commandants, put into the camps seventy picked clergymen who have done most helpful work for our men. We equip our chaplains when they are commissioned, and we supply them continually with the means to do their best work; through the St. Andrew's Brotherhood we are in friendly touch with tens of thousands of the men and boys; we are strengthening the forces of the parishes near the great camps, and in many other lines of work we are doing service which has won the grateful recognition of commandants, officers and men. Last February the War Commission asked the Church for $500,000 and the Church gave $600,000. A detailed report of its expenditures will be given to the Church in January.

The increase of the army and navy, the development of many new forms of work, such as the creation of great munition centres and the mercantile marine, will demand one million dollars next year. About the first of February the great contribution for the one million dollars will be taken.

May I ask you to state these facts to your people in your own way on Sunday morning, November 3d, or on the 10th at the latest? Or, if you prefer, you may read this letter to them.

The people have gladly supported the war work of their own Church this year—we want to give them every chance to do so next year.

I remain,
Yours faithfully,
WILLIAM LAWRENCE,
Chairman.

Letter From an Army Chaplain.

"I am convinced that I am now doing the most important work I have ever attempted in the Christian ministry. Services are informal and held in the open air, but very well attended. I must have spoken to 250 men last Sunday. Then the boys come to you with all sorts of problems and troubles, and what is more, are generally absolutely frank. I have heard some great old tales and tragedies, I assure you.

"And then the French! Nobody can realize how fine and splendid they are until he has actually talked with them. There are many emigres (refugees) from the occupied parts of France right here in this vicinity, and their gratitude which they expressed most frankly and openly to us American soldiers has been touching in the extreme. You can't down a people with this spirit.

"I am getting the boys to send their money home and have already forwarded many thousands francs. Maybe in other areas than this, money will be needed, but as for now, the boys are much better off without it.

"Please clip the papers for interesting items and send me for the boys funny pictures. They enjoy them immensely."

Church Intelligence

The Octave of Prayer for Unity.

The House of Bishops of the Church of England in Canada passed some time ago the following minute:

"That this House recommends the Bishops of the Church in the Dominion of Canada to recognize and observe with due solemnity as a period of prayer upon the subject of the Unity of Christians the days January 18th to 25th inclusive, being the days recommended by the General Commission on Faith and Order."

A sub-committee of the General Conference of the Methodist Church in Canada has reported to that conference, recommending its endorsement of the proposed Octave of Prayer.

Quite a number of our own Bishops have promised to take the matter up with their people.

Week of Prayer for Young Men

The officers of the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association have issued a circular calling for the special observance of the annual Week of Prayer for Young Men, November 10-16, inclusive. Dr. Mott calls special attention to the peculiar timeliness of this season, synchronizing with the great War Work Campaign, and in view of the multitude of our young men in circumstances of danger and temptation, calling for the highest qualities of Christian manhood and heroism.

Names of Men at Camp Wheeler Wanted.

The Thirty-first Division having left this camp for overseas service, a new division is now being formed to be known as the Ninety-ninth. Men are being received from various parts to make up this unit. Will rectors, relatives and friends have the kindness to watch carefully the departure of men for this camp and send me their names, giving regiment and company. I will gladly look them up and try to be of some service.

Horace R. Chase,

Local Secretary Brotherhood St. Andrew, care of the Y. M. C. A., Camp Wheeler, Ga.

Temperance.

A large number of our Bishops have united in authorizing the following letter in behalf of the principles and work of the Church Temperance Society:

"The traffic in beverage alcohol must never again so grip men and nations as it did before the war. Our own land, blessed above others in this, as in many respects, bids fair to be the first prime nation to end, by its own collective moral and economic will, all legal complicity in the business of creating and gratifying appetite for that seductive and destructive drug. And yet a danger menaces—the danger of a task not wholly done, the incomplete subjugation of a gigantic evil.

"Two things, therefore, appear imperative in this hour. The government has weighed the liquor traffic in the balance of war-time efficiency and finds it wanting. It must be put away. But who of those who follow Christ, and believe in the upward march of men and nations through Him, can be content ever to see this evil, once purged away by the stresses and idealisms of war, returned to plague the land and fatten on human ills? It is unthinkable. The door by which this national evil is shut out should be securely and forever barred.

"The second imperative is one which fits even more vitally and necessarily into the activities of the Church. Sustained education in abstinence is essential to ultimately cure that portion of the nation's body which will continue to cry for alcohol. The truth alone can make us ultimately free. That truth, in support of abstinence, will have to be pressed henceforth by means and to degrees as yet undreamed of. To what more fruitful endeavor, subsidiary to the Gospel, can the continuing support of the members of the Church be given?

"Fortunately, we, as a Church, are blessed with a society ably directed to the securing of these two imperatives. The Church Temperance Society is freely credited by organizations without the Church with having taken no mean part in the present favorable legislative and educational situation respecting the beverage alcohol traffic. It stands for the completion of the long task, both educatively and legislatively. Will you not, on the Sunday next before Advent, the day appointed by the Church for special endeavors toward a sober America, present the claims of the society to the consideration of your people and their pecuniary support of it? Will you not also remind them clearly of whatever opportunities they have as citizens in the near future to further the cause of sobriety as voters or as constituents of legislators who are soon to be called to face the question in its political aspects, and urge them to let their representatives in State and national halls of legislation know the sentiments of Christian men on this subject?"

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. R. A. Gibson, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Coadjutor.

This Prayer of Thanksgiving is authorized for use in the Diocese of Virginia by Bishop Gibson:

We praise Thee, O God, for the mercies Thou hast vouchsafed to us in the passing days.

For the deliverance of thousands of innocent victims from the hand of the oppressor, for the prospect of a speedy, complete and righteous decision of the war, and for the mitigation of the pestilence which has scourged us, we bless and magnify Thy Holy Name.

Help us to know our weakness and Thy strength. Help us to put our confidence in Thee and to rest upon Thy love. Give us of Thy Spirit to prompt our prayers and direct our thanksgivings. Hear us, for Thy mercies are great, and draw us unto Thee by the lifting up of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

At the annual meeting of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education, the Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, D. D., was elected treasurer in place of Mr. W. W. Gillett, who has recently moved to the Diocese of Southern Virginia.

The apportionments of the Board for the year 1918 are due from the parish, and those who have not paid will kindly forward to the Rev. W. H. Burkhardt, 1010 Park Avenue, Richmond.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. R. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thompson, D. D., Suffragan.

Buena Vista: Reports come from the town of Buena Vista, describing the heroic efforts during the very serious conditions incident to the epidemic of influenza. The State Board of Health sent doctors and nurses and a Red Cross Hospital outfit, which enabled the community to take care of forty patients at a time; there was also valuable assistance rendered by the town people. The chief worker was Deaconess Gibson, who is situated at that point, working under the Rev. Norman E. Taylor. She had charge of the hospital at night, doing her work so well that all who were in touch with it speak of her in the highest terms.

The Rev. S. U. Mitman, Ph. D., our Field Secretary of the Province of Washington for the Board of Religious Education, has had his schedule for October and November almost entirely upset by the prevalence of influenza in the country. Dr. Mitman has engaged to conduct a series of lectures on "Teacher Training" for the Roanoke Sunday-school Institute, November 29 and 30. He may be available for other communities, should his services be desired, addressing him at South Bethlehem, Pa.

By the will of the late Miss Mary Benson, of Brooklyn, N. Y., a Churchwoman, who died on October 10, the sum of $10,000.00 was left to the St. Paul Normal and Industrial School, of Lawrenceville, Va., a colored institution, founded by Archdeacon James S. Russell, D. D.

Mrs. J. Cleveland Hall, wife of the Rev. J. Cleveland Hall, D. D., rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Danville, died at her home in Danville on October 30th.

To the Members of the Woman's Auxilliary.

My Dear Co-Workers: We are glad to be able to say that we now hope to hold (D. V.) our postponed annual meeting of the Auxilliary in Christ Church, Roanoke, Va., November 21, 22 and 23, 1918.

We sincerely trust that nothing will occur to prevent our gathering at this time, for it will be the last opportunity of having with us "Our Own Missionary," Dr. Harry Taylor, who has charge of St. James Hospital, Anking, China, before his return to his work in January next.

It is hoped that every Branch will, if possible, be represented at this meeting.

Loulie Taylor Letcher,
Diocesan President.

Central Convocation of this Diocese will not hold its regular fall meeting this year. It was decided after conference between the Bishop, the Dean of Convocation, the minister in charge of the Church at Clover, and the chairman of the Program Committee, that it would be unwise to attempt a meeting on account of the recent epidemic. While all danger seems to be past, it would be difficult for many of the members to leave their parishes at this time. The ordination of the Rev. J. A. Figg, which was to have taken place during Convocation, will be arranged for some time during the month of November.

Radford Parish: The activity of Grace Church, Radford, the Rev. C. E. A. Marshall, rector, has been quite satisfactory during the last year and a half. A new organ has been bought and paid for, a new roof put upon the church building and a new carpet put down. A national and a service flag have been presented to the church by members of the congregation. Upon the service flag are fifteen stars, one of which stands for a young lady, a Red Cross nurse, now serving her country "somewhere in France." Every star stands for a volunteer. The work in the Sunday-school has also been progressing, the object has been to try to have more of the children's interest center around the school. To accomplish this several things have been done. First a club was formed, which met on Saturday evening at the parish room. Some of the members of the school debated, some recited, one was assigned current topics. All was conducted by parliamentary rules. The children were interested and were really instructed. Naturally, like children, they got tired of this and wanted a change. Then the teachers hit upon the plan of having a social entertainment, when games of all kinds were introduced. During Lent one of the teachers met at the parish room children who cared to come, and read stories to them. During the summer the rector, Mr. Marshall, took the Sunday-school to the river twice a week and taught them swimming. By trying first one thing and then another, a great deal of the child's interest and life is thus centered around the school. Seven members of the school have been baptized recently. In every case the parents of the baptized children had not belonged to the Episcopal Church and the children had been brought to baptism through the influence of the Sunday-school. In the last month an "Every Member Canvass" has been made, and it is hoped the parish will be able to pay all apportionments for the ensuing year. Recently a mission has been started at Long's Shop, a near-by village, where several Episcopalians have been found. Since the influenza all church work has been stopped, and the rector has given all his time to the Emergency Hospital, doing whatever came to hand, sometimes as nurse, sometimes as orderly and at other times having prayers in the sick room, and when necessary reading the burial services over the dead.

St. Hilda's Hall.

St. Hilda's began its fourth session with an overflowing school full of promise. Its growth has been remarkable and its usefulness established.

The year was begun for all schools with the epidemic of gripple, and for ten days there was anxiety and emergency nursing, but no serious illness. In two weeks all were well and the school did not lose a day of its session.

As on previous years, St. Hilda's Hall celebrated November first, Founder's Day, by simple, but, dignified ceremonies. Many of the townspeople assembled to see the presentation of an indoor pageant, based on the life of St. Hilda. The various acts of the play, adhering to historical accounts given by Bede, were written entirely by pupils of the school.

On the conclusion of the pageant, a short but appropriate address and prayer were made by Rev. Mr. Alfriend. Miss Duval then spoke briefly, and read the St. Hilda poem and the school charter. Mary Boone Peyton attached the link for this year to the chain of fifteen previous links, which typify the years during which the building has been an educational institution.

The ceremonies were concluded by the signing of the charter—by which act faculty and pupils solemnly pledge themselves to practice and uphold the best standards of Christianity and of womanhood.

Death of Mrs. Dame.

Mrs. William M. Dame, wife of the Rev. Dr. William M. Dame, rector of Memorial Church, Baltimore, died suddenly Sunday, November 3, at her home in that city. Besides her husband she is survived by three sons, the Rev. William Page Dame, associate rector with his father, and Wilmer A. and Randolph, all of Baltimore, and one daughter, Mrs. Walter Myers, of Richmond, Va. Mrs. Dame was the daughter of Colonel David Funsten, of the Confederate army, while her mother was a sister of the late Captain David Meade, of Beuvenue, Ciarke County, Va.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop.

In Spartanburg the influenza situation has been serious. Many of the nurses had been called for other places and much difficulty was experienced in obtaining help of any kind, but through the promptness of our health officials and the hearty co-operation of the public a more serious result has been averted. The Church of the Advent, through the efficient rector, the Rev. W. H. K. Pendleton, has done good work. The quarantine prevented all public gatherings, but many members of the Guild and Daughters of the King volunteered for work as nurses, as motor car transportation service, or in the making and distributing of soup, custard, etc., which was dispensed from the tri-color tea-room to the base hospital and to the sick. Many of those who could not give their time contributed money or fresh linen.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D., Bishop.

The prevailing epidemic of influenza has been very severe in the State of Pennsylvania, especially in parts of the Diocese of Harrisburg. The fall meeting of the Archdeacons of Harrisburg and Williamsport have been indefinitely postponed on account of it. The Archdeaconry of Harrisburg was to meet in St. Augustine's Church, Harrisburg, and the Archdeaconry of Williamsport in St. John's, Bellefonte. The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese was to meet in Christ Church, Williamsport. It also has been annulled. No dates have thus far been made for these meetings. All churches have been closed to public services. In some instances, however, the clergy have gone into the church and read the services, having previously requested their people to do the same thing in their homes at the regular hours of service.

D., rector emeritus of St. John's Church, Cohoes. The tablets were the gift of the Ladies' Aid Society, with which both women were connected for more than a generation. Death of Judge Charles Andrews.

The Hon. Charles Andrews, prominent Churchman and Chancellor of the Diocese of Central New York, died at his home in Syracuse, N. Y., on Tuesday, October 22, in the ninety-second year of his age.

Judge Andrews had sat in every General Convention since 1898, and for a number of years had been a member of the important committee on constitutional amendments. He had a large part also in framing the canonical legislation relating to courts of appeal.

SPOKANE.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

In the Service: The Rev. Herbert I. Oberholtzer, rector of Grace Church, Ellensburg, has gone to France in the work of the Y. M. C. A. The Very

Rev. G. H. Severance, of Oroville, is leaving shortly for the Chaplains' Training School at Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, Ky. Dean Severance has done yeoman service in the Okanogan country, a work for which he is unusually well fitted. His going will be quite a serious loss to the churches in that county, but every effort will be made to keep the work going as satisfactorily as the circumstances permit.

Spanish Influenza Epidemic: The churches have been closed in this State, as in most other States in the country. The Very Rev. Gilbert W. Laidlaw, rector of Pullman, reports that both his church and parish hall have been turned into a hospital, for every available building is needed, there being a large number of men in training at the University. The Very Rev. F. J. Mynard, rector at North Yakima, has his parish hall as a hospital, and the probability is that such is the case in many other parts of the district.

Deanery Meetings: Bishop and Mrs. Herman Page attended deanery meetings at Grainger, Pullman and North Yakima, the Bishop speaking especially in reference to Sunday school work and Mrs. Page in reference to the Advent Call. The Bishop also attended the special meeting of Missionary Bishops held at Cheyenne, Wyo.

St. Paul's School, Walla Walla: Bishop and Mrs. Page paid a visit to the school and were gratified to find the work making most satisfactory progress, the number of pupils being the capacity of the school. The Rev. Bertram E. Warren, rector of St. Paul's, is fast winning his way into the affections of the people.

To Know Christ, Work for Him,

The receiving camp was half empty, so was the Y. M. C. A. The chaplain's week-night congregation there consisted largely of empty benches about thirty earnest men joining in the service. A dozen more were standing in the passage way, not ready to come but within sight and hearing of the chaplain. There was some noise and confusion from that direction, but the chaplain asked the secretary not to risk dispersing the group by asking for silence.

A few days later a seaman said: "Chaplain, that sermon you preached certainly did 'get' me."

"What was the part that 'got' you?" "It was what you said about working for God."

"Oh! Was it when I said that just as you can learn the character of a man and how much power and wisdom and sympathy he has by working for him, so you will know Christ by working for Him?"

"Yes. I have not come to church for years. I did not come to your service. I was one of them fellows standing in the passage, but that thing about working for Him 'got' me."

"It gets all if we try it. It will 'get' the United States if we remember that what we are working for in this war is to establish between nation and nation Christ's standard of keeping promises, of showing justice and mercy to the weak. Think of what He wants you to do for Him and keep doing it. Then you will certainly understand the Gospel story of His life. You will feel more like talking to Him in prayer, you will begin to realize His wonderful love for you and the rest of the world."—Selected.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

THE CLOSED CHURCH.

The recent closing of our church buildings for public worship during the epidemic has been a hardship upon many earnest, devout people who miss the regular Sunday devotions rendered in the accustomed manner.

Nevertheless this occurrence should serve to bring to our minds the fact that for the first three hundred years of its life, the Church had no public buildings whatever, and that during this period it displayed its greatest spiritual power.

When we turn our thoughts to the sermon which we are accustomed to connect so closely with the pulpit and the interior of a church, we are again reminded that the three greatest sermons of which we have record, that of the Saviour on the Mount, of St. Peter on Sunday of Pentecost and of St. Paul on Mar's Hill, were all delivered in the open air. Of course, our beautiful churches, with the inspiration of the "common supplications," is an important, if not, indeed, an essential part of our religious life, but the promptness with which our parish houses were turned into soup kitchens, and the liberality and efficiency with which our Church congregations ministered to the wants of their communities gave abundant proof that Christianity has not become entirely dependent upon any one part of our religious life, and that it is still inspired by the love and devotion which carried our Saviour from house to house, and village to village, dispensing healing power and kindly encouraging words in times of sorrow and despair.

OVER THERE AND OVER HERE.

The Survey of November 2nd contains a new department, entitled America Overseas, which has a number of intensely interesting articles.

We shall quote this week from one of them.

The reason that we feel that a page which bears the name of Christianity and the community should be keeping tract of the doings of our boys in France is because to-day "the community" includes the world, and the boys of to-day "over there" will be the leaders of to-morrow over here. When we see what they are doing and what is being done for them it should be an inspiration to us at home to put forth new efforts literally to make America "a land of the free and the home of the brave," so that those boys shall not be disappointed when they return to the villages and neighborhoods from which they have gone by finding that we have not kept up with their growth of mind and breadth of vision.

The Survey tells us that:

"If only a small part of the plans of the Army Educational Commission for transporting a large slice of America's public school system to western Europe, to teach American soldiers what they would have learned if they had not gone abroad, and much more beside, is ultimately carried out, the achievement will be of unimaginable value. These plans actually stagger the mind. From the North Sea to the Swiss border, in England, in Italy—wherever American soldiers are or may be—this school system is to be erected. The chairman of the commission, John Erskine, professor of English at Columbia University, has just returned from France, where he was able to tell accurately on how large a scale the plans can be carried out. He wants two thousand teachers and administrators—wants them immediately.

"He is arranging for the purchase of eight million dollars' worth of textbooks, in special editions, to be sold to soldiers at cost. The government will give a priority on white paper to the commission, so that these books may be rushed through the press. He is arranging for correspondence courses as a supplement to the class-room work. The size of these administrative tasks gives some indication of the size of the educational plans themselves.

The bulk of the new education will be carried on in France. To show the parallel that will be carried out between the school system to be erected there and the one at home, France is being divided into eight administrative regions, which the commission is thinking of as states. Each region is to be divided into smaller districts, which are being thought of as counties. State and county superintendents are wanted from this country to administer the work in France; indeed, the whole two thousand men being sought by Professor Erskine will be used chiefly in administrative jobs. Teachers will come from the college graduates in the army, and some, doubtless, from the high schools in this country.

"The Y. M. C. A. in this country and the American Library Association are jointly supplying the money for this enterprise. Of the estimated budget of $15,000,000, the Y. M. C. A. is to furnish $12,000,000, the American Library Association the remainder. Classes will for the most part be located in Y. M. C. A. huts, though other buildings will be used where necessary.

"If it be objected that the American soldier abroad is overworked and ought to be allowed to spend his few leisure hours reading entertaining stories and doing what he wants, the answer comes from the soldier himself. Life for the soldier is not a constant succession of dashes over the top. Possibly four and certainly three out of every five of our men have not fought and will not fight. They are permanently engaged in vital service back of the lines, in construction work, in transportation, in that whole array of tasks known as the "service of supplies"—tasks necessary to keep the minority of actual fighters ready and eager for battle. A story is told of a regiment at Brest which hung out a service flag in honor of one of its members who was sent two hundred miles nearer the front than the regiment had yet been.

"It is for the period when fighting shall have ceased, however, that the most thorough plans are being laid. In addition to the academic courses, which will be strengthened and extended, intensive industrial and vocational instruction will be offered. It is the belief of the commission that hundreds of thousands of young men were enlisted or drafted before they had learned trades. For these men the future presents serious problems. If the plans of the commission are fully carried out no soldier, it is hoped, will return to America without having been offered the opportunity to learn a trade. It is estimated that 30 or 40 per cent of American soldiers in Europe will be glad to accept this instruction. The facilities for giving it will be literally abundant. Modern war creates its own industrial workshops on a huge scale. Western Europe is filled with repair shops, construction camps and plants for building all manner of machinery which, when the war ceases, will be relieved of pressing demands. These can be made to afford, it is believed, unparalleled facilities for vocational instruction.

"But that is not all. In France and Belgium the last sounds of the cannon will be quickly followed by those of the hammer and the anvil. When fighting has actually ceased, American, English and French engineers will take the lead in reconstructing these countries, in rebuilding bridges, railways, churches, whole cities, so that during much of the period of demobilization western Europe is likely to become a huge laboratory for vocational instruction. The task of making this count in the education of American soldiers is one that the commission has set itself to solve.

"Attendance by soldiers upon all these classes will be voluntary, except possibly for compulsory instruction in English for illiterates (the first draft caught many of these) and for soldiers of foreign birth who cannot speak English.

"The Army Educational Commission consists of four prominent educators. Professor Erskine is chairman; Frank E. Spaulding, superintendent of schools of Cleveland and the highest paid superintendent in the country, is the member in charge of the field staff and of the organization of general education below college grade; Kenyon L. Butterfield, president of Massachusetts Agricultural College, is the member in charge of vocational, commercial, trade and general technical education; and Algernon Coleman, professor of romance languages in the University of Chicago, is executive secretary. Professor George D. Strayer, president of the National Education Association and professor of educational administration at Teachers' College, Columbia University, is the home director of the commission. The offices of the commission are in the Y. M. C. A. building at 347 Madison Avenue, New York City. General Pershing appointed the commission after the names had been approved by an informal group of educators and the Y. M. C. A."

Twenty-fourth Sunday After Trinity:

The history of the Maccabean period clusters around four names: Mattathias and his three sons; Judas surnamed Maccabeus; Jonathan and Simon; and it is to this last that the lesson for Sunday morning brings us. His military achievements are connected with three strongholds of the enemy; Gezer, Bethzur and the citadel that overlooked the sanctuary; all of which he conquered. Most important of all was the recovery of Jerusalem, and the day was long cherished (23d of Iyar—April-May), whom "Simon entered it with waving of palm-branches, with harps and cymbals, with hymns and odes." Stanley comments: "If Judas was the David of the Asmonean race, and Jonathan its Joab, Simon was its Solomon, the restorer of peace and liberty. From his accession a new era was dated, the first year of independence, when the nation ceased to pay the tribute which from the Persian kings downward they had paid to each successive conquering dynasty. Henceforward, the Jewish contracts were dated 'In the first year of Simon, the Great High Priest, and General, and Leader of the Jews.'" The second lesson (2 Cor. 4) deals with suffering as ministering to that eternal life which was manifested in the dying and resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ. To perceive the appropriateness of this correlation, we have but to consider the symbolism of Jerusalem and to transport ourselves in imagination back to the troublous times of those Jewish persecutions and think what it would have meant to those heroes of the faith if they could have had the revelation contained in the Apostle Paul's message.

There is, too, a very direct connection with the Epistle and Gospel for the day, with their combined teaching on "the hope which is laid up for us in heaven in the truth of the Gospel" and our Lord's showing Himself as Lord of life and death in raising the daughter of Jairus from the dead. The Old Testament alternate also fits in with this line of thought, partly by its declaration (if the translation be allowed) that "God hath set eternity" in man's heart and also by the contrast of its agnosticism: "Who knoweth the spirit of man whether it goeth upward and the spirit of the beast whether it goeth downward to the earth?"

The second evening lesson is part of a plan (employed also by the Prayer Book Lectionary) of using the first Epistle of St. John during these latter Sundays of the year; but there is also a direct bearing on the special teaching of the day. Eternal life, here and hereafter, is St. John's theme. Note the connection with practical righteousness, with believing on our Lord Jesus Christ, and with the indwelling Spirit, the climax of all revelation and Divine impartation. For a fitting Old Testament lesson we have selected Ezekiel's wonderful sermon on God's people as His flock, to whom He promises the coming of the Shepherd and on whom is urged what in our day we call "social justice." St. John, indeed, stresses the duty of loving one another (which, by the way, goes so far beyond the summary of human duty that closes Ecclesiastes, "Fear God and keep His commandments"), but we are quite content oftentimes to glory in that as a sentiment or limit it to the feeling which should bind Christian to Christian, and it is well for us to read Ezekiel (and the other Old Testament Prophets of Justice) as he urges wise and just leadership on human leaders and rebukes men for that "inhumanity of man to man" which "has made countless thousands mourn."

2. How was He occupied the next night? Mk. 14:3; Jno. 12:2-8.
3. What happened to Judas; and what did he? Luk. 22:3-6.
4. Where did Jesus go on the first day of this week? Jno. 12:12.
5. What did He do on the way? Matt. 21:1-4.
6. How did He ride into His city? Matt. 21:5-7.
7. What honors did the multitude pay? Luk. 19:31-8.
8. What other name do we sometimes give to the "Sunday next before Easter"?
9. Does this King rule in your heart? Psa. 149:2.

Note: Following St. John's account, the arrival and supper are placed in this lesson as the events of Friday and Saturday (our time) near Jerusalem. Jesus would hardly travel from Jericho to Bethany, fifteen miles, on the Sabbath. While Matthew and Mark give a different note of time, they also seem to insert their account parenthetically. Here it stands in a natural order. As the Jewish Sabbath ended at sunset, twenty-four hours, this feast was held for Jesus on the evening of the first day of the week (our Saturday night).

O Lord, we beseech Thee, absolve Thy people from their offenses; that through Thy bountiful goodness we may all be delivered from the bands of those sins, which by our frailty we have committed. Grant this, O heavenly Father, for Jesus Christ's sake, our blessed Lord and Saviour. Amen.

The Prayer Habit: The prayer habit is like any other good habit; it grows by use. Christ admonishes us "to enter into our closets and shut the door, and pray to the Father in secret, who will reward us openly." We must get away from the din of the world, from our daily occupations (even if it be but a few minutes) for a personal talk with Jesus. The trysting place can be found everywhere. But be sure that the door is shut, leaving cares and tasks behind for an uplifting interview with Him who is the Source of our spiritual power.—Evangelical Messenger.

"We Are Here."

"We are up against things perfectly diabolical, utterly repulsive, fundamentally unchristian; and we have got to meet them without losing our manhood and self-respect, and religion and Christianity. We have got to play the game for all we are worth. We have got to help the men over there by our prayers and sympathy and inspiration, and make them feel we are with them in this big fight over there. When General Pershing made his memorable visit to the grave of Lafayette, you remember that he said only three words, 'Lafayette, nous voici!' 'Lafayette, we are here!' America was there to pay the debt to Lafayette and France, and to further the cause of civilization and righteousness in the world. This feeling you men must have as you stand before a still greater Leader, a still more illustrious Person in history—you who wear the cross and follow the cross, and stand before Him to pay the debt we owe in life or in death. And the Church stands, ashamed, yes, but unafraid; repentant, but confident. So does the Church stand before Christ and say, 'Christ, we are here!'"—Bishop McCormick to the Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

The Worship of God.

This generation, noble as it is, is so taken up with many things that it cannot look up to something higher than its own doings. It is clothed magnificently, it is strong, intelligent, good; but it is not given to the worship of God. That is a universal need of human nature. The man who does not worship is dissatisfied with himself. Man is a worshipping and praying being. We have no more right to slight this than any other important matter. If we do we shall suffer the inevitable consequences—dissatisfaction with ourselves—a certain feeling of incompleteness of life—a craving of something we do not have.—Rev. R. H. Kline.

All Saints' Day.

Miss F. H. Marr.

There is no heart but hath its saint to-day.

Its saint to name, to love and think upon;

Given by the God that taketh not away,
One of heaven's host—and yet its very own.

Some went so long ago, their features seem

Like dull and faded portraits—old and worn;

Some left us in the flushing tide of life,
And some went with the year just passed and gone.

A mighty throng—no man can number them—

From every people, tongue and kindred, borne

In every hour, from time's remotest bound,

Oh, in such throng, how can we find our own?

They all are there, and bright and glorious.

They that have gathered light in heaven for years;

And they that, full of new-found strength and joy,

Look, wondering, upon our grief and tears.

And we shall find and know them, as we find

Whate'er we truly love and seek—e'en while

We lift our aching, yearning hearts to them,

Their happy faces o'er us bend and smile.

And we enfold them in our hearts, until Another year shall bring their day again,

One year the less for hearts to wait and long,

And one year nearer to our joy and gain.

(These lines, republished by request, were contributed to the Southern Churchman many years ago by the author, who has but recently passed to her rest.—Ed. S. C.)

The Habit of Cheerfulness.

All my life, until about three years ago, I was the victim of the most distressing periods of despondency, which became more frequent as I grew older and the buoyancy of youth departed. I wanted to be happy, but I seemed to close the door against happiness and persisted in looking on the dark side. Finally I got to the point where I rather enjoyed being miserable and telling people about it. You may imagine I had few friends. I worried about the slightest pain, perhaps it was a cancer; I worried about the future, in which I imagined myself a pauper; I worried about my clothes, because they were not up-to-date. I was a confirmed worrier. I worried until I had two puckers between my eyes and a down droop to my mouth. And then I worried because I was becoming wrinkled.

One summer, while on a vacation, I met at the boarding house a frail little woman who seemed to fairly radiate sunshine. She was not well, had to live most of the time in the open to live at all, but she did more to scatter cheer and encouragement than a dozen well women. We became friends, and one day I said to her: "Do tell me how you keep so cheerful. I wish I could be as happy as you." "You can," she instantly answered. "But I can't," I contradicted. "I have such a lot to worry about and I get such horrid blue spells. I feel miserable most of the time." "Oh, but so did I," she replied, "especially at first when they told me that my life would have to be a constant struggle against disease. I utterly gave up. Life didn't seem worth while to me then. One day I happened to pick up the 'Life of Stevenson' and the wonderful heroism of that man struck me full in the face. Here he was with the sword of Death hovering over him all the time, yet he was able to be a joy to everybody about him. It was an inspiration to me, I can tell you. His life was like mine, and what was I doing? Making everybody miserable around me. I determined then and there to change. I would be cheerful, optimistic; I wouldn't let despondency get the better of me. Oh, I tell you, it was a struggle, but I learned the lesson bit by bit. Whenever a gloomy, discouraged thought would come to me I picked up a book and forced my mind in another channel. Sometimes it would be the Bible, sometimes a poem giving me a picture to dwell upon, or a short story; but always it was of a cheerful nature. Sometimes when the blue devils assailed me I put on my hat and went out for a walk. I visited some one who was worse off than I was. If the weather was stormy I went into the kitchen and made a cake, or dressed up in my prettiest and best frock. Also I have a hobby which I ride when I am not able to be active. I cut out colored pictures and paste them in a cambric book for the kiddies in the hospital. There is nothing like a hobby to help you ward off an attack of despondency. I used to indulge in self pity, but I gave that up. I realized that I had a toilsome way to travel, but that when I grieved I altered nothing and made others unhappy. So I have tried to live my life eagerly, encourage friendship by offering it a smiling face, enjoy the beauty around me and make as much music within myself as possible. Gradually I formed the habit of cheerful, optimistic thinking."

I thought much on what my friend said and began practicing it myself. That was three years ago, and from a morose, unhappy, always tired woman I am today buoyant, cheerful and in much better health. It is natural that I should have some moments of depression, but they don't conquer me. I am enjoying life to its fullest extent. I sincerely hope that all who read this will try to rid themselves of the demons of despondency, for by so doing a new life will flower for them; they will do more efficient work and be of greater help to others.—Christian Work.

Surgical Dressings.

Interminable folds of gauze
For those whom we shall never see,
Remember when your fingers pause,
That every drop of blood to stain
This whiteness, falls for you and me.
Part of the price that keeps us free
To serve our own, that keeps us clean
From shame that other women know.
Oh, saviors, we have never seen,
Forgive us that we are so slow;
God—if that blood should cry in vain
And we have let our moment go. . .

"The Baby Who Never Had Smiled."

They called him the Baby Who Never Had Smiled. The lady doctor found him in one of the factory dispensaries to which her Red Cross automobile climbed twice a week, in a smoky manufacturing village near the American front in France, so near that the fire from the guns flashed on the sky at night and on still days when the fighting was heavy the boom boom itself could be plainly heard.

At noon the women from the factory brought in the babies for the lady doctors to see—and for some babies she gave medicine and for others advice and still others she took in her car back to the big barracks, once a military school, now marked with huge red crosses in the slate of their roofs to show strolling German aviators that they were a hospital.

"But your baby does not look very well," she said gently in correct American French to one woman who brought forward a year-old mite.

"No, madame," said the woman shyly. "He has never been well. First his eyes have been sore—then he has a rash—and I must be nearly always in the factory and cannot take much care of him. He is always sick—and he is not like my other children—madame, he never has smiled!"

So the lady doctor took him to the hospital and had him bathed and put to sleep in a crib in one of the long whitewashed rooms of the barracks. He spent weeks there, growing a little less pale each day and looking wisely at the nurses who brought him his food and gave him his bath. His two dozen compatriots in the ward weren't a very happy looking lot—most of them, too, had come from the little villages of the frontier where war bore heavily on the mother and children whom a poor father had had to leave behind—but as their cheeks grew plumper and pinker they learned to gurgle with joy at the sight of an approaching milk-bottle and to catch the nurse's finger gleefully.

"Never your mind," she would say, shaking that same finger at him, "we'll make a real baby out of you yet in spite of yourself." But he would only look at her like a wise little old man.

Other babies in the ward had names and when the night nurse came on she would say:

"Has Georgette been good today and eaten all her meals properly?" or "I think Guillaume can go back to his mother next week, don't you?" But though he had a card at the head of his bed with a name on it, no one ever used it. The other doctors would say, "How about that baby of yours that never has smiled?" "Has he laughed yet?" And the nurse would answer, "Not yet, but just you wait till he gets eight ounces fatter and see if he doesn't."

Parents come to visit on Sunday, and almost every week his mother went through the complicated formalities of even a short journey in the war zone and came toiling up the hill to the hospital. She rejoiced in the added ounces, in the vigorous fashion in which he could kick, in approaching teeth and other technical details. She was a tired little woman in black, but her face would light up as she sat for hours beside his crib, prattling to him about his father in the army, his uncle who had fallen at Verdun (just over yonder, she would show the nurse, pointing across the hills out the window), and about his older brothers and sisters at home. But one day a glorified vision of the mother flew toward the nurse when she came to announce that visiting time was over—there were tears of happiness in her eyes—and she pointed incoherently to the crib where the Baby Who Never Had Smiled was belying his name with a broad infantile chuckle that showed unexpected dimples in his plump cheeks and puckered his mouth invitingly.

"See," said the mother, "only see! You of the American Red Cross have made my baby smile!"—Red Cross Bulletin.

Teaching Religion by Example.

Many parents are anxious about the religious life of their children—as they should be, for religion is one of the most important assets that a child can possess. But it is not an asset that can be handed down from generation to generation. It must be "experienced" by the individual for himself. A child may talk about the religion of its parents, but it will not end there unless the child has come into possession of the precious thing for itself.

Several years ago, when President Wilson was the head of Princeton University, he delivered an address upon the relation of young people to the Church, and made this remark about the influences that often determine the entrance of children upon the religious life:

"Religion is communicable, I verily believe, aside from the sacred operations of the Holy Spirit, only by example. You have only to ask yourself what is the effect of a profession of religion on the part of a man who does not live a religious life. You know that the effect is not only not to communicate religion, but to delay indefinitely its influence. It is certainly true that we are not to judge religion by those who profess it, but do not live it. But it is also true that if those who profess it are the only ones we live with, and they fail to live it, it cannot be communicated except by some mysterious grace of the Holy Spirit Himself. So that no amount of didactic teaching in a home whose life is not Christian will ever get into the consciousness and life of the children. If you wish your children to be Christians, you must really take the trouble to be Christians yourselves. Those are the only terms upon which the home will work the gracious miracle."

Here is a wise word and it is commended to all those who desire to have their children enter into the Christian life: "If you wish your children to be Christians, you must really take the trouble to be Christians yourselves." That's fair enough. And the test of real Christianity comes often in the home rather than in the church or in the community, and there is no one in the home who is quicker to discern the quality of one's Christian life than the child of that home. It is hardly fair to say to the child, "You go and become a Christian." It is better to say, "Come, let us try to be Christians together."—Christian Advocate.

For the Southern Churchman. FAMILIAR HYMNS.

XXI. One Sweetly Solemn Thought.

The author of this tender hymn was an American and a woman—Phoebe Cary, one of the well-known "Cary sisters." Both she and her older sister, Alice, held a high position in American letters.

Born in the Middle West, in the first quarter of the last century, Phoebe Cary came to New York to live when she was about thirty. There she became an influential leader of the literary society of the day. But this change of circumstances did not affect her real nature; she never lost the retiring gentleness that was one of the hall-marks of her character. Perhaps the memory of her earlier years of hardship and struggle gave her even an added sweetness. "I have cried in the streets," she wrote once, "because I was poor." One of her biographers has fashioned for her a powerful epitaph: "She had a loving and a trustful soul."

Her heart-searching hymn, "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," has a far-reaching appeal. It is said that she did not set a high intellectual value on her poem. And perhaps she was right. The lines are not great as literature, but they are potent with that better greatness, the glad faith of a confident heart.

Her account of the origin of the hymn was given in a letter to a dear friend. It is as follows:

"I enclose the hymn for you. It was written eighteen years ago in your own house. I composed it in the little back third-story bed-room one Sunday morning after coming home from church; and it makes me very happy to think that any word I could say has done any good in the world."

The simple lines penned in the third-story bed-room have gone far and wide over the earth. They have comforted the dying and tenderly warned the living. The wonderful thought that the first verse suddenly and briefly voices has struck home straightly to many a heart. It is truly a hymn of the Christian soul:

One sweetly solemn thought

Comes to me o'er and o'er;

I am nearer my home today

Than I ever have been before;

Nearer the great white throne,

Nearer the crystal sea,

Nearer my Father's house

Where the "many mansions" be;

Nearer the bound of life

Where we lay our burdens down;

Nearer leaving the cross,

Nearer gaining the crown.

But lying darkly between,

Winding down through the night,

Is the deep and unknown stream

To be crossed ere we reach the light.

Jesus, perfect my trust,

Strengthen the hand of my faith:

Let me feel thee near when I stand

On the edge of the shore of death;

Feel thee near when my feet

Are slipping over the brink;

For it may be I'm nearer home,

Nearer now than I think.

"Just Me."

A missionary of the American Sunday School Union tells the following story illustrating what a boy can do. He said:

"I had organized a Sunday school in the fall, in one of the outlying districts of my field, and the effort gave promise of much usefulness, the locality being a needy one, although only a little way out of the city.

"One stormy Sunday, in winter, I wended my way to the locality through quite a fall of snow. When I came in sight of the school-house I could see the white smoke curling up from the chimney, and felt sure that there was a warm welcome awaiting me. As I drew near the bell was being rung; the hour for the session had arrived.

"Entering the school-house, I found the gathering made up of one lad, about fourteen years old, and myself. I greeted my young friend cordially, and asked, 'Was that the last bell for Sunday school?'

"'Yes, sir,' was his polite response to my question.

"'How has the Sunday school been getting along?' I inquired, by way of keeping up the conversation.

"'Oh,' said he, 'it was doing first rate till the bad weather came; but since then it hasn't been doing so well.'

"'We chatted pleasantly for some time, enjoying the warm fire he had built. No one else appearing, I said to my young friend, 'Do you think there will be any one else here today?'

"'No,' he said; 'it's a pretty bad day, and they don't come out very well when it is bad weather.'

"'How many were here last Sunday?' I asked, recalling the fact that the weather of the several previous Sundays had also been bad.

"'Just me,' was his laconic reply.

"'Well, that's not very encouraging, is it?' I suggested.

"'No,' was the reply; 'but I thought if I came and built a fire, and rang the bell, somebody else might come.'

"'And you stayed here all alone, did you?'

"'Yes, sir, till the hour was up; then I locked up the house and went home.'

"'How far from here do you live?' I asked.

"'About a mile across there,' he said, indicating a locality across the fields, and through a patch of woods over on another road.

"'How many were here two weeks ago?' I asked.

"'Just me,' was his laconic reply.

"'And this is the third Sunday in succession you have come here, built a fire, rung the bell, and waited for an hour for some one to come?'

"'Yes, sir.'

"'Well, how long are you going to keep this up?'

"'Till they tell me to quit,' was his reply, and he seemed to realize the importance of his position and how great was the responsibility laid upon him.

"'Well, you are the stuff that successful Sunday school works are made out of,' I said, patting him approvingly on the shoulder.

"'I don't want to see the Sunday school go down, and it shan't if I can help it,' was his reply.

"'You are all right, my boy,' I said. 'You just keep right on doing your duty, whether any one else does or not, and you will have your reward. Have you a Bible all your own?' I asked.

"'No,' he said, 'but I mean to have one some day.'

"'All right, here is one that shall be yours,' and I gave him a good Bible I had with me, and wrote his name in it, accompanying the gift with a few words of advice.

"The next Sunday 'Just Me' went as usual, built his fire, and rang the bell. Some of the people and the children came out and the Sunday school was saved.

"I have my eyes on that boy, and some day I am of the opinion that there will be another chapter written in his life's history, and it will tell of other and greater responsibilities, and their faithful fulfillment, because 'He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much.'"

"When the book is opened, and the roll is called in heaven, 'Just Me,' as I have chosen to call him, will be there, I am certain, and will have many trophies to lay at the Master's feet."

Hope.

The river, foul with mire and waste,
Cannot its onward course retrace,
Again to pass and leave untouched
What hath its current fair bemirched;
But, stained with Past, must run its race.

The life awry with sin and shame
Cannot turn backward and reclaim
The early innocence and joy
That brightened and adorned the boy;
But bears for aye a tainted fame.

Yet breadth and pause, attained in time,
Relieve the river of its grime
And fold it in the spotless sea.
So grace and growth, for you and me,
Lead on to life and fate sublime.

WAR ECONOMY CORNER.

Utilize Heat Over the Kitchen Stove.

By Ellen I. Kelley.

There is heated air constantly rising from the top of the cook-stove, and this heated air is just what is needed for drying vegetables and fruits. If there is a shelf back of the stove, paper may be placed, and products to be dried spread over it. A tray with sides two inches high and bottom of galvanized wire netting may be suspended over the stove, wire or cords brought together from the four corners making a convenient means of suspension. Wire window screening may be used for the bottom, but it is not as durable as the galvanized netting. A tray may be made entirely of galvanized wire netting turned up at the sides and ends two inches. A series of these, each base raised about four inches above the base below, may be fastened together by strips of wood or wire and the whole suspended. Write at once for a free canning and drying manual which the National War Garden Commission, Washington, will send you for two cents to cover postage. It contains many illustrative drawings of directions given.

A portable oven also makes a good top stove drier. It can be easily turned to distribute the heat, and the shelves can be shifted during the drying. The Commission will be glad to answer any questions written on one side of the paper and sent in a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Mending China.

Broken china may be mended in the following way: Mix a teaspoonful of alum and a tablespoonful of water and place it in a hot oven until it is quite transparent. Wash the broken pieces in hot water and, while warm, coat the broken edges thinly and quickly, as it sticks instantly. Your china thus mended will bear hot water and ordinary usage.

Keep Smiling.

If I knew the box where the smiles are kept,

No matter how large the key
Or strong the bolt, I would try so hard—
'Twould open, I know, for me.

Then over the land and sea broadcast
I'd scatter smiles to play,
That the children's faces might hold them fast
For many and many a day.

If I knew a box that was large enough
To hold all the frowns I meet,
I would try to gather them every one
From nursery, school and street.

Then, folding and holding, I'd pack them in,
And turn the monster key;
I'd hire a giant to drop the box
To the depths of the deep, deep sea!

The Road Up the Hill.

"You are to carry a message for the duke to his brother, the king, who lives at the top of the hill," said the knight in charge of the little pages, to Gervaine.

"I don't want to climb that hill. It is as high as a mountain," said little Gervaine.

"But the duke has given his orders, and you must obey," said the knight, handing the letter with its huge red seal to Gervaine.

So Gervaine begged a basket of luncheon of the castle cook and pulled his cape tightly about his shoulders, for it was a cold day. Then he went out the castle gate and started in the direction of the king's palace, whose turrets shone so brightly in the sunshine at the top of the high hill. Indeed, it was a high hill. Tall trees like great giants stood on each side of the road, and in the path were boulders that looked like crouching trolls. The pebbles were hard beneath Gervaine's feet, and at every step the road grew steeper. "I shall never, never reach the top," he complained. "My feet are sore already, and my back aches." But just then he saw a little striped chipmunk running along in the path ahead of him. The chipmunk had a little wild plum in his paws; and because he was afraid that Gervaine was the kind of little boy who would chase him and try to hurt him, he made great haste and dropped his wild plum. It rolled to the side of the road, and he went on without it.

"Wait a minute, Master Chipmunk. Here is your plum. O, please do not run so fast," called Gervaine.

But the faster Gervaine ran and the more loudly he called, the faster did the chipmunk run. Over the hard stones, past brambles and briars, on and on they went. At last the chipmunk's little legs were tired, and he crawled into a hole at the foot of a tree, looking out at Gervaine with two wee black eyes.

"You wild, shy little thing," laughed Gervaine. "I couldn't hurt you if I wished, because I am the king's page and can hurt no dumb beast. See, here is your plum." He laid it down a safe distance from the tree and watched as the chipmunk came cautiously out and picked it up. Then Gervaine looked up. He was one-quarter of the long way up the hill. Just beyond a bend in the road, where there was a flat place and a herd-boy pastured his goats, Gervaine heard a cry. The flock was gone, but caught in the bushes was a little kid. It had lost its way; it could not find its mother.

Gervaine took the frightened little creature in his arms and covered it over with his coat, for it was growing late in the day, and the woods were chilled with frost.

"Don't cry," said Gervaine. "Perhaps your mother is just a little way ahead and waiting for you. I know she is, for here are the footprints of the flock in the ground."

It was as pleasant as the game of follow-my-leader that Gervaine and the other little pages played in the castle court-yard to follow the footprints of the flock. Soon Gervaine overtook them. There at the end straggled the mother goat, longing for her little one. Gervaine set down the happy kid.

O, Gervaine was now half-way up the hill!

The goat herder was a little boy of Gervaine's age.

"Will you walk a way with me?" he asked. "I can show you where the gentian grows; but we will not pick it, for then it would not bloom so prettily next year."

So Gervaine walked beside the goat herder, and they sat down to rest beside the beautiful blue gentian; and Gervaine gave almost all his luncheon to the little herd-boy, who had not eaten since morning. He had been picking up fagots for his mother's fire, and the bundle was very heavy.

"I will carry the fagots for you," Gervaine said, slinging them across his back. He carried them as far as the little brown hut where the herd-boy lived and had a drink of warm, sweet goat's milk. Then he started on alone.

He was three-quarters of the way up the hill!

"I am afraid of the dark! I don't dare go home," he heard a voice say.

Gervaine started and listened. It was a little girl, her long, brown braids caught back with gold bands, and her embroidered silk gown torn by the bushes and dragged in the dirt.

"Who are you?" asked Gervaine.

"I am Rosamond, who lives at the top of the hill," the child sobbed. "I followed a butterfly out of the garden when no one saw me. It flew up to the sky, and now I cannot find my way back."

"Come with me," said Gervaine, taking her hand and hurrying on. "I am not afraid. See, the evening star is up, and there are lights just ahead of us."

O, they had reached the top of the hill!

There was great excitement at the palace gate. A shout arose as the two, Gervaine and Rosamond, entered.

"Here is the little lost Rosamond, our Princess Rosamond."

The king himself came out and smiled at Gervaine as he read the letter. "One of my most faithful pages whom I send to you to be your squire," it read.

"You brought my little strayed daughter safely home. Was it a long climb up the hill, my lad?" asked the king.

"No, your majesty; it was very short," answered Gervaine.—Pilgrim Press.

Cats.

There's the snow-white cat, the pearl-gray cat,

The brindle and the brown,

The cat with stripes around himself,

The cat striped up and down,

The plaid cat and the buff cat,

The tan, the tortoise-shell,

The bluish sort, the reddish sort—

More tints than I can tell.

But the finest of the whole fine lot

(There's no disputing that)

Is the jet-black chap with one white spot—

And that's our kind of cat.

The tiny cat is cunning,

The long, lean cat is fleet,

The nimble one is made for fun,

The fluff-ball one is sweet,

The Persian pussy's splendid,

The Maltese pussy, too,

But the special kind I have in mind

Is best of all the crew.

He's not too quick and frisky,

Nor is he slow and fat.

He's soft and warm and fits my arm,

And he's our kind of cat!

Helping to Win the War.

"What is the reason that Ruth and Jack never complain about their food nowadays?" said Mr. Nelson as he served the plates with corn bread and potatoes and fish. "There was a time when neither of the twins would touch fish, and corn bread they only nibbled at once in a while; but now everything is changed."

"Miss Peters says that we are helping to win the war when we eat corn bread," said the thirteen-year-old twins promptly. "That's the reason."

"And a very good reason," said Mr. Nelson heartily. Mr. Nelson had been away from home on a business trip for some weeks, and he was just getting acquainted again with his family, as he expressed it; so he was amazed at the turn affairs had taken at the table. "Every bit of flour and beef and fat we can save will help bring peace back to earth. So many people want to do something big to help win the war that they forget all about the little things."

"That's the way I used to feel," said Jack; "but Miss Peters showed us what would be saved if every boy and girl in the United States would lend a hand and do without sugar and beef and white flour. It's only a little thing for one, but a big thing when all pull together."

"And that's exactly the way with an army," said Mrs. Nelson. "One soldier marching alone to the battle wouldn't count very much; but a vast army marching is a wonderful sight as well as a mighty force to win."

"I wonder if the school children of the whole land are united in saving food," said Mr. Nelson. "I declare, I'm all behind the times, being away so long."

"Miss Peters says that the teachers hear that the school children are as patriotic as the grown folks," said Ruth. "She says that we are a part of one big conservation army."

"Well, if that is the case, no one need worry about the outcome of the war," said Mr. Nelson. "And when the war is won, the school children will be so trained in habits of thrift that they will be worth a thousand times more to their country than they ever could have been without this training, and that is perhaps a greater service to render than even the saving in food now." —Hilda Richmond, in Herald and Presbyter.

For a Whole Week.

"I'll never, never, never speak to Patty again!" cried Betty, dashing into the sitting room. "She is just as mean—"

"That will do, Betty," said mamma, who was sitting at her desk writing. "I am tired of the constant quarrels you are having with poor Patty lately, all the time. You say you will never speak to her again. Never is a long time, but I forbid you now to speak to her for a week."

Betty gasped. It was one thing to dash away from Patty in a rage and declare she would never speak to her again, and go back and play with her when she felt cooler, but to have it put into words, "A whole week." "You don't mean that, mamma," she said slowly. "Why, I couldn't get along a week without Patty."

"You will have to," answered mamma. "You may try it for one whole week. One week is not nearly so long as never."

"But what will she think," asked Betty. "Why, we always walk to school together, and play, and—why, she will think I am mad with her."

"Aren't you?" asked mamma.

"Not now," said Betty, honestly. "Only just for a minute, and it was my fault. Please, mamma, just this once, and I never will be cross with her again. Truly I won't."

Mamma shook her head. "I said one week," she answered. "I will telephone Patty's mamma, so she will understand. Now run out and play."

Run out and play! Betty scorned the idea. How could one play all by oneself when there had always been a little neighbor to play with. She slowly made her way out into the garden that ran by the fence between her house and Patty's. Patty was sitting on her steps dressing dolls, but she wasn't looking as happy as usual, and she did not look up and wave to Betty as she always did.

Betty turned away and walked to the farthest corner of the yard. She just couldn't stand it a week. Why, it hadn't been fifteen minutes now, and it seemed ages.

Suddenly she rushed into the house. "Oh, mamma," she cried, "Uncle Jack is coming to take Patty and me to ride in his auto. What shall we do?"

"I said you and Patty could not speak. I did not say you might not both go to ride, but you mustn't speak. I will tell Uncle Jack how it is, so he will understand."

How funny it seemed to be sitting on the seat beside Patty, and not able to speak to her. Betty gave a little giggle, but—it wasn't funny, after all. What was the good of seeing things as they flew by if you couldn't talk them over, and she was sure she saw a tear stealing down Patty's cheek. It wasn't half a day yet. How long every minute seemed!

Next morning two little girls in fresh gingham dresses and big hair bows walked soberly to school together, but not speaking. After all Betty was beginning to find it some comfort to walk with Patty. She was glad mamma had not said anything but not to speak.

Five days dragged by. Betty had a bright idea. Mamma said not to speak to Patty. If one spoke to Bertha and Bertha spoke to Patty that would not be speaking. There was one thing she wanted so much to say; it seemed as if she must choke if she did not say it. She would ask mamma as soon as she went home.

So the next morning poor little Patty, suffering for both herself and her friend, heard Bertha say, "Betty says she is sorry, Patty, and she will never be cross with you again."

"Tell her," said Patty, brightening a little, "not to mind too much. There are only two more days, and then we will have such nice times together."

The next morning Patty found a big red apple in her desk at school. She had seen that apple in Betty's pocket as they walked together, so she knew where it came from; and that afternoon Betty knew where the stick of peppermint candy she found in her desk was bought.

At last the two long days dragged by and were over, and on the morning of the third day two little girls dashed from the doors of their houses without waiting for breakfast.

"I'm sorry," cried Betty.

"So am I," cried Patty.

"I'll never, never, never get mad with you again," sobbed Betty. And she never did.—Zion's Herald.

By Betty Page Dabney, Aged Seven and a Half.

It is quiet on the lawn,
When the birds begin their singing,
Sounds like heavenly music ringing—
Just to tell us that the day

The Woods.

In the cool green wood
Where the tall trees stood,
I love to wander down and up,
And pick up each brown acorn cup.
Nearby there is a stream that's singing
Which sounds like silver bells were ringing.

Yet still I know God's with us all.

The Mining of Gum.

The gum mining industry in New Zealand is second only to the mining of gold, and indeed many of the "finds" are worth little less than their weight in gold. The gum so eagerly sought is the resin of the kauri tree, a gigantic king of the forest which sometimes reaches a height of one hundred and eighty feet. New Zealand is full of these magnificent timber trees, and in the soil where they have been growing undisturbed for centuries the gum is found in pieces ranging up to one hundred pounds. There are more than eight hundred thousand acres of such land, it is estimated. Most of the material, of course, is used in the arts in making fine varnishes and lacquers, and so great is the heat required to melt the "fossilized" specimens that it is impossible to use steam kettles, and specially constructed hearths have to be built, in which the almost flinty specimens are gradually turned into thick, oily liquid by the direct application of great fires under forced draft. There are, however, specimens of the finest quality, large and translucent, which are highly prized by collectors. For commercial purposes the best grade of the gum sells for $1,500 a ton, but collectors have paid as high as $125 for a single specimen as large as a man's fist. The Auckland Museum has a collection valued at $10,000. Nearly $3,000,000 worth is mined in a year.

Uncle Phil's Story.

"Tell us a story, Uncle Phil," said Rob and Archie, running to him.

"What about?" said Uncle Phil, as Rob climbed on his right knee and Archie on his left.

"Oh, about something that happened to you," said Rob.

"Something when you were a little boy," said Archie.

"Once when I was a little boy," said Uncle Phil, "I asked my mother to let Roy and myself go out to play by the river."

"Was Roy your brother?" asked Rob.

"No, but he was very fond of playing with me. My mother said yes; so we went and had a great deal of sport. After a while I took a shingle for a boat and sailed it along the bank. At last it began to get into deep water, where I couldn't reach it with a stick. Then I told Roy to go and bring it to me. He almost always did what I told him, but this time he did not.

"Then I was angry. I picked up a stone and threw it at him as hard as I could."

"Oh, Uncle Phil," cried Archie.

"Just then Roy turned his head and it struck him."

"Oh, Uncle Phil," cried Rob.

"Yes. He gave a little cry and lay down on the ground.

"I did not go to him, but waded into the water for my boat.

"But it was deeper than I thought. Before I knew it I was in a strong current. I screamed as it carried me down the stream, but no men were near to help me.

"But as I went down under the deep waters, something took hold of me and dragged me towards shore. It was Roy. He saved my life."

"Good fellow. Was he your cousin?" asked Rob.

"No," replied Uncle Phil.

"What did you say to him?" asked Archie.

"I put my arms around the dear fellow's neck and cried and asked him to forgive me."

"What did he say?" asked Rob.

"He said, 'Bow, wow, wow.'"

"Why, who was Roy, anyway?" asked Archie, in great astonishment.

"He was my dog," said Uncle Phil, "the best dog I ever saw. I have never been unkind to a dog or to any other animal since, and I hope you will never be."—Ex.

Riddlemaree, blue and white,

Who can read this riddlemaree?

Answer to last week's riddle: The stars.

With the Smile.

Smiling can be done without the face being seen. "It is our constant aim," says the Bell Telephone Company, "to promote the 'voice with the smile.'" The public knows how effectively this great service corporation has trained its army of operators to use "the voice with the smile." Business letters can often be written "with the smile," and usually they ought to be; such letters create good will and sell goods. We who are Christians ought not to be behind the most capable business people in using "the voice with the smile," and in bringing a genuine radiance into all our work and relationships. The Christian can have supernatural power in this all the time, by simply yielding to and believing in Him who sheds abroad the love of God in our hearts. The smiling life is the winning life; and habitual winning is the Christian's first business.

As we remember Christ, then, let us be thankful. Let us believe we have those great things He gives—the pardon of our sin, strength to live a helpful life, hope of all good beyond; and let us think gratefully of Him who has thus filled and glorified our life for us. No Christian life can be healthy in which thankfulness is not a constant disposition. It gives a tone to the whole character. The thankful man is a happy man, and happiness is strength. Spiritual vigor, the vigor which implies a superfluity of strength to help those who need it, has always a background of joy and thankfulness. A thankful spirit is the regular accompaniment of that true humility which makes a man most acceptable and most useful to his fellow-men, and it is the outcome of our recognition of what God has done for us in Christ. You have lost much in life, enough to sadden you all your days—yes, that is true, but think of what you have in Christ.—Marcus Dods.

Doth the Christian's strength lie in God, not in himself? This may forever keep the Christian humble, when most enlarged in duty, most assisted in his Christian course. Remember, Christian, when thou hast thy best suit on, who made it, who paid for it. Thy grace, thy comfort, is neither the work of thy own hands, nor the price of thy own desert; be not for shame proud of another's cost.—W. Gurnall.

What Is Nuxated Iron?

Physician Explains—Says Public Ought to Know What They Are Taking—Practical Advice on What To Do To Build Up Your Strength, Power and Endurance and Increase the Red Blood Corpuscles.

The fact that Nuxated Iron is today being used by over three million people annually and that so many physicians are prescribing it as a tonic, strength and blood builder in weak, nervous, run-down conditions has led to an investigation of its merits by designated physicians and others whose reports should be of great importance to the public generally. Among these is the statement made by Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and Westchester County Hospital, who says: "When one patient after another began asking my opinion of Nuxated Iron, I resolved to go thoroughly into the subject and find out for myself whether or not it possessed the real value claimed by its manufacturers and attested to by so many prominent people. This is exactly what I believe every honest, conscientious physician should do before prescribing or lending his endorsement to any product whatsoever. If an article is worthless we practitioners ought to be the first to know of it and if it is efficacious we are in duty bound to recommend it for the welfare of our patients. A study of the composition of the Nuxated Iron formula so impressed me with the therapeutic efficacy of the product that I immediately tested it in a number of obstinate cases. So quickly did it increase the strength, energy and endurance of the patients to whom it was administered that I became firmly convinced of its remarkable value as a tonic and blood builder. I have since taken it myself with excellent results. There are thousands of delicate, nervous, run-down folks who need just such a preparation as this but do not know what to take. Therefore I have urgently suggested the widespread publication of the sworn statement of the composition of its formula so that the public may know what they are taking. This complete formula is now to be found in newspapers throughout the country. It is composed principally of organic iron in the form of iron peptonate of a special specific standard and glycerophosphates which is one of the most costly tonic ingredients known. To the credit of the manufacturers it may be said that they use the most expensive form of iron peptonate, whereas by employing other makes they could have put the same quantity of actual iron in the tablets at less than one-fourth the cost and by using metallic iron they could have reduced the cost to less than one-twelfth, but by thus cheapening the product they would undoubtedly have impaired its therapeutic efficacy. In my opinion a careful examination of this formula by any physician or pharmacist should convince him that Nuxated Iron is to be placed among the very highest class and most strictly ethical preparations known to medical science. It exceeds anything I have ever used for building up the system and increasing the red blood corpuscles thereby enriching and fortifying the blood against the ravages of disease."

Brooke: On Tuesday, October 22, FRANCIS KEY BROOKE, Bishop of Oklahoma, in the sixty-sixth year of his age, at the home of his eldest daughter, Mrs. Edward H. Lee, 1353 North State Street, Chicago. He was buried at his birthplace, Gambier, Ohio, on Friday, October 25.

A true and valiant soldier of Jesus Christ, in the "front trenches" on the frontier, for years he fought a good fight, was brave in the face of great disappointments and hardships, and has reclaimed no small part of "No Man's Land" for Christ, his Captain.

Henderson: Entered into life eternal on July 11, 1918, BETTIE MARTIN HENDERSON, widow of Richard B. Henderson, who passed away on August 21, 1917. Mrs. Henderson was raised in Richmond, being the daughter of Nathaniel Macon and Susan Gilmour Martin.

Leave we now Thy servant sleeping."

Skinker: Fell in the service of his country at the battle of the Argonne, September 26-29, 1918, ALEXANDER RIVES SKINKER, captain in 138th United States Infantry, beloved husband of Caroline Rulon-Miller Skinker, and son of Thomas Keith and Bertha Rives Skinker, 6464 Ellenwood Avenue, St. Louis, Mo.

Vaughan: HENRY MAURY VAUGHAN, second son of the late Dr. Joseph H. and Fannie Bolling, died October 24th of acute Bright's disease, followed by influenza. A widow and five children mourn their loss. Henry was in his early twenties when our parents died within fifteen months of each other, leaving four young children. Never did a young man more faithfully assume the responsibility of their brothers and sisters, giving his whole life for years to their support. I recall our mother's words: "Henry had never caused her a moment's uneasiness." A valiant, courageous character as I ever knew was this brother. Absolute integrity with high sense of honor marked all Henry's dealings.

Sister,

VIRGINIA MAY GOOLRICK.

VIRGINIA MAY GOOLRICK, eldest daughter of W. B. and Celia N. Goolrick, passed away in Fredericksburg, Va., on the third of October, 1918, in her forty-second year. Miss Goolrick had been connected with the Fredericksburg State Normal School since its beginning in 1911 as head of the department of history, and was one of its truest friends and most loyal supporters. In her death not only the Normal School loses one of its ablest teachers, but the community and City of Fredericksburg one who always served them with the unfailing devotion and enthusiasm of her gifted mind and charming personality.

"I heard a voice from Heaven saying, Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord: even so saith the Spirit; for they do rest from their labors."

EDWARD LE BARON GOODWIN,

Lieutenant, M. R. C., U. S. A.

Died, October 10, 1918; Aged 32 Years.

He would have asked no better part;
His brave, young feet have reached the goal.
This scientist with the poet's heart,
Physician with the soldier soul.

His feet pursued the poet's dream
In visions brighter than the deed;
His eyes still flashed the molten gleam
Till life was molded to his creed.

His life was like a singing sword
That turned all ways to right the wrong;
Broken to work his Master's word,
And flashing earthward with a song.

He fought that stricken men might rise;
That hearts might beat and lips have breath.
Dead on the battlefield he lies,
Face forward to his foe, Death.

A star, a golden star shall mark
His name throughout all after years.
We, stumbling onward through the dark,
Yet know his life too bright for tears.

God make complete in some fair land
His life that here has reached the goal;
True poet with the healing hand,
Dear healer with the soldier soul.

More Truth Than Poetry.

On the wall of a Southern real estate office hangs this bit of what is plainly more truth than poetry:

"It is not the thing you do or say;
It is all in the way you do or say it.
What would the egg amount to, pray,
If the hen got up on the perch to lay it?"

FLOWERS FOR ALL OCCASIONS

The Sight That Does Them Good.

What the presence of American women means in a canteen over there cannot be told. Miss Gladys MacArthur writes:

"One evening Miss Wright and I visited an artillery camp where the boys had not seen an American woman since they landed in France three months before. People who have not been through the experience cannot realize what that means to the boys or what it means to them to have an opportunity to talk to an American woman for a few minutes. One of the roughest men in the camp came in and saw me. He made a dash for my corner and was so enthusiastic and pleased to see me that I reckoned I never would get away from him. After I had gone he went to the secretary and said, 'Mr. Weed, you know I have the finest little wife in the world back home, and to see those American girls—well! Will you please come outside and pray with me for a little while?'"

Analysis and Indictment of Bolshevism.

It is possible to differentiate three elements in Maximalism, now turned into Russian Bolshevism:

1. The Bolshevism of the Intellectuals, as represented by fanatical doctrinaires, the greater number of whom have appeared on the scene since the revolution, coming from alien countries, some of them, like Lenin, with the backing of the German authorities and totally ignorant of Russian affairs.

2. Popular Bolshevism, adopted by the soldiers and peasants, which recalls the many instances of rebellion and peasant uprising so long a bloody stain on Russian history. These peasants and soldiers are ever ready to take advantage of circumstances to stop working and plunder the estates. The unheard-of excesses which they have lately committed at the incitement of the doctrinaire Bolsheviks have so completely disorganized or destroyed the army, industry, commerce and agriculture, that nothing is left intact of all that constituted the strength and resources of the country.

3. The Bolshevism of the Profiteers, represented by sordid individuals who endeavor to exploit the revolution, and immediately to draw therefrom the greatest possible personal benefits.

This general exemplification, and especially the facts upon which it is based, prove that Bolshevism cannot even be taken into consideration as a social theory. Like the hurricane it is but an agent of destruction. It has succeeded in destroying the economic and financial forces of Russia, which were the result of many centuries of upbuilding. It has brought misery and famine upon the industrial and peasant classes who were lured by the promise of social reforms not a single one of which have they seen fulfilled. Bolshevism has established in Russia an anarcho-communistic regime of absolutism, whose watchword, "Take all you can get," has destroyed the work of generations. Certainly many decades must pass before the crumbled edifice can be re-erected.—From "To Cut Russia from Germany," by Andre Cheradame, in "Asia" magazine for October.

Consecrated Money.

Three essential conditions must be met to consecrate money to God.

It must be given with a purpose. It must be anointed by the spirit of charity. Church finances are often sordid because they are unhallowed by pious motive. Why do you give money for the support of the Church? If you give for the sake of Christ's dear love, for the sake of the Kingdom of God, the gift is holy.

The gift must have priority. Offerings to God must be from the first fruits and the best. They must be anointed by the spirit of self-denial. When do you give money to the Church? If giving to Christ is only a secondary thing, the gift is inadequate. Church finances are often shameful, because they are gathered by begging. If you give with the sense of owing all to Christ, the offering will come first.

The gift must be proportionate to our income. We must make the offering on our knees. Church finances are usually insufficient, because the conscience is asleep. The gift must be anointed by the spirit of justice. How much do you give for the work of Christ's Kingdom? Your answer must be given after prayer, after considering how bountifully God has blessed you.—Trinity Messenger.

Wasted Goods.

The parable of the "Unjust Steward" is, in many respects, similar to the parable of the Talents. In both parables the lord and master entrusted his servants with his goods, or property, expecting that the persons to whom they were entrusted would wisely and faithfully use them to their master's advantage or profit.

In the parable of the "Unjust Steward" the sin that is explained and condemned is the very common sin of neglect and carelessness, rather than that of wilful wrongdoing. The steward did not steal his master's goods, he could not be accused of dishonesty, he was merely neglectful and careless, he did not attend diligently to his master's affairs, and the consequence was his master suffered loss, and so he was accused, and justly accused, of wastefulness. Carelessness and neglect of duty resulted in loss to his master just as much as if the steward had wilfully stolen or destroyed his master's goods.

Our Master's goods, or the talents with which we have all been entrusted, are usually taken to represent the physical, intellectual and other temporal gifts which God has been pleased to bestow upon us—our health, our ability, our time, our money, our influence, etc.—and which are to be so used as to be profitable to our Master. Our talents must be so invested or employed that when we are obliged to give an account the Master may receive His own with usury.

The "Master's goods" or a portion of the Master's goods with which we have all been entrusted might justly be taken to represent the opportunities and the means that God has provided for His people, His stewards or servants, not only of manifesting their interest in their Master's affairs, but also of honoring and glorifying their Lord and Master, to whom every servant will, ere long, be required to render an account.

Accordingly we put the stamp, "The Master's Goods," upon two very common things, "The Lord's Holy Day" and "The Means of Grace provided for us in God's Church." And truly these good gifts of God are "God's Goods" in the very highest sense.

The question then for every steward, for every servant of God, for every man and for every woman who shall one day be called upon to give an account of his or her stewardship, is, What am I doing with my Master's goods? To what purpose am I devoting His holy day? How am I using His means of grace, the services of His Church? Many, alas, too many, do not appear to realize their duty and their responsibility concerning these special goods of God. The Lord's day and the services of His house seem to have no real claim upon their thoughts or their time; and yet are they not the Master's goods? Are they not goods for which we must all render an account?

The Lord's day and the means of grace are indeed goods, that the Master hath committed to our trust and keeping for a twofold purpose.

By appreciating and using these goods we, in the first place, honor and glorify the Master, we manifest our interest in, and care for the things of God, whilst in the second place, we nourish and refresh and strengthen our own spiritual life and character. By carefully observing the Lord's day and by faithfully using the means of grace, "God's Goods" are used both to God's advantage, to the strengthening and enlarging of His Kingdom, the Church, and also to our own spiritual welfare.—Rev. G. S. Anderson, in Canadian Churchman.

A Prayer.

Let me be a little kinder,
Let me be a little blinder
To the faults of those about me,
Let me praise a little more;
Let me be when I am weary
Just a little bit more cheery—
Let me serve a little better
Those that I am striving for.

Let me be a little braver
When temptation bids me waver,
Let me strive a little harder
To be all that I should be;
Let me be a little meeker
With the brother who is weaker,
Let me think more of my neighbor
And a little less of me.

Let me be a little sweeter—
Make my life a bit completer,
By doing what I should do,
Every minute of the day.
Let me toil without complaining,
Not a humble task disdain;
Let me face the summons calmly
When death beckons me away.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

As soon as gold was discovered somebody invented brass.—Ex.

The man who walks by faith is in no hurry for God to explain Himself.

The man who minds his own business will always have something to do.—Ex.

If you are not afraid of a little sin, you will soon be in the power of a big one.

When you can't get the closet door shut, try oiling the hinges with the oil of praise.

It takes grace to keep still while somebody else is getting credit for work that you are doing.

When the Holy Spirit leads it is step by step, but the flesh always wants to do things on the run and jump.—Ex.

"If you mean to act nobly, and seek to know the best things which God hath put within the reach of men, you must fix your mind on that end, and not what will happen to you because of it."—George Eliot.

Jesus is worthy to receive riches. Give Him the best, the most, that which you prize and are tempted to hoard. The charm of such giving is anonymity. Let it be done as a personal transaction between Him and you.—F. B. Meyer.

"Man's life is his fair name and not his length of years;
Man's death is his ill-fame and not the day that nears.
Then life to thy fair name, by deeds of goodness give,
So in this world two lives, O mortal thou shalt live."

The supreme tragedy of human life is that man thinks so much less of himself than God thinks of him; that man is tempted to satisfy himself with the dust when God has made him for Deity; that man lives upon the level of the earth when God's thought of him is in the height.—G. C. Morgan.

I heard a bird at break of day
Sing from the autumn trees
A song so mystical and calm,
So full of certainties,
No man, I think, could listen long
Except upon his knees.
Yet this was but a simple bird,
Alone, among dead trees.
—Selected.

The need of the citizen in Christ's kingdom is receptivity. "It is your Father's pleasure to give." He would, therefore, have us possess capacity to receive. He would give us a kingdom even before the King shall appear in His glory to set up His kingdom on earth. "Blessed are the poor in spirit: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." They, of course, belong to the kingdom, but better than that, the kingdom belongs to them. Its authority, its prestige, its glory are theirs.—A. C. Dixon.

To pray in Christ's name is simply to rest our hope of acceptance, of pardon, of regeneration, of divine help here, and of heaven hereafter, upon the great atonement which Christ has made. Christ's intercession for us is not a beseeching Christ kneeling at the feet of a sovereign Deity, persuading and inducing Him. It is His presence in heaven as the ascended Son of Man, He "appears as a lamb slain," "appears in the presence of God for us."—H. Allan.

A French painter fitted up a cab for a studio, and went all about Paris making sketches of things he saw. He then transferred to canvas his sketches of scenes and incidents in the city's hidden ways, but put Christ everywhere among them. When the people saw the pictures, and themselves as they were, they were ashamed and startled at the frivolous life with Christ in the midst. Would it shame or startle you, oh Christian, if some painter transferred to canvas your relationships to others in your home, church or community life? Jesus is in the midst of it all. What kind of picture does He see?—Selected.

Among the crowns that await the redeemed hereafter I can well believe that the brightest will belong not to great martyrs and philanthropists and heroes who made a noise in the world, but to those who, all unknown to the very companions by their side, impelled by their conscience and their love of God, fought hard and long with secret sins and evil tendencies which no one knew but God and themselves, fought and fell, rose and fought again, and fought until they won. Of such a one I can understand the Saviour saying, as He crowns him with the victor's crown. "That man's enemy was the worst of all enemies, himself, and he conquered him at last."—J. McGregor.

The Conversation Book.

I 'ave a conversation book; I brought it out from 'ome,
It tells the French for knife an' fork an' likewise brush an' comb;
It learns you 'ow to ast the time, the names of all the stars,
An' 'ow to order hoysters an' 'ow to buy cigars.

But there ain't no shops to shop in, there ain't no grand hotels,
When you spend your days in dugouts doin' 'olesale trade in shells;
It's nice to know the proper talk for theatres an' such—
But when it comes to talkin', why, it doesn't 'elp you much.

There's all them friendly kin o' things you'd naturally say
When you meet a fellow casual-like an' pass the time o' day—
Them little things as breaks the ice an' kind o' clears the air,
Which, when you turn the phrase book up, why, them things isn't there!

I met a chap the other day a'roostin' in a trench,
'E didn't know a word of ours nor me a word o' French;
An' 'ow it was we managed, well, I cannot understand,
But I never used the phrase book, though I 'ad it in my 'and.

I winked at 'im to start with; 'e grinned from ear to ear;
An' 'e says "Tipperary" an' I says "Sooveneer";
'E 'ad my only Woodbine, I 'ad 'is thin cigar,
Which set the ball a'rollin', an' so—well, there you are!

I showed 'im next my wife an' kids, 'e up an' showed me 'is,
Them little funny Frenchy kids with 'air all in a frizz;
"Annette," 'e says, "Louise," 'e says, an' 'is tears begun to fall;
We was comrades when we parted, but we'd 'ardly spoke at all.

'E'd 'ave kissed me if I'd let 'im, we 'ad never met before.
An' I've never seen the beggar since, for that's the way of war;
An', though we scarcely spoke a word, I wonder just the same
If I'll ever see them kids of 'is . . .
I never ast 'is name.

—From "Punch."

A Communion Service at Quantico.

The time was 3:30 in the morning; for some time short, sharp commands could be heard outside; men were hurrying to and fro and the last finishing touches had been put on the packing of the sea bags. Shortly the last good-byes would be said. One of the buildings, however, presented another scene. It was that of the Y. M. C. A. hut, and there at that early morning hour more than five hundred men could be seen and heard, for they were singing that old familiar hymn, "Just As I Am Without One Plea." On the stage an altar had been constructed, and there the post chaplain, Rev. E. B. Niver, was celebrating the Holy Communion. One can never forget the scene when more than two hundred of the men went forward to receive the Holy Communion. It was the last touch of the old home life and in a few hours they would all be on the ocean. To every man came a new meaning in those wonderful and comforting words: "Preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life." Then came the final hymn, "God Be With You Till We Meet Again"—the benediction—a few more hurried good-byes, and the building was empty. Down the concrete road could be heard the sound of marching men—the service was over.—St. Andrew's Cross.

Paying the Price.

Any liberty worth the having is paid for by a tremendous effort. Evil is so strongly entrenched that it never surrenders its hold without a desperate fight. No one passes into any spiritual heritage without the smell of battle upon him. It is passion in effort and purpose that counts in the final victory. The realization of the finest virtues in a Christian have the odor of battle-smoke. Man is not born again into a life of ease—to a sort of a pleasure excursion, but to a relentless contest in which strength is gained from the very tempests through which he passes. Battles for righteousness nerve the Christian warrior, for the heroic element comes to the front. True freedom is the price of blood—the vicarious achievements in the soul. Satan holds his subjects with a determined grip, and deliverance from his cruel power invites a hard and sometimes a long-drawn tussle. The hardest battles ever fought have been fought in the domain of the soul, invisible to human eyes, but tenderly observed by the Friend of sinners. The real victories are likewise invisible. When the soul pays the price of its freedom from the power and dominion of sin, it is the beginning of almost numberless victories through life. To be made pure in heart is a very desirable experience, but the price of its realization must be paid, and if paid it shall be done, and the darkest hour is just before the break of day—the day of full deliverance.

The same truth obtains in the life of the nation. No social evil yields without a persistent struggle. How hard national sins die! Every honorable and beneficial law on our statute books which involved widened freedom of thought and of achievement has been won by a vicarious conflict. Enlarged freedom comes not in national dreams, but through convulsions of thought, through heated contests, through constant vigil and relentless determination and relentless warfare. The men who have fought for our national liberties carry about them the marks of the heated conflict, and these marks are the emblems of their glory. Freedom will ever be the perquisite of blood.—The Evangelical Messenger.

The Supercilious Churchman.

The man who brags of the superiority of his Church is very vulgar and very annoying. Perhaps the most offensive of this class is the Churchman who parades the Church's lineage. As if lineage was of any importance except for the inward qualities thus transmitted, and as if these qualities needed self-advertising!

But there is, to our way of thinking, a still greater, though more subtle offense, to be laid to the charge of persons of a rather more refined type whose mental attitude and manner of discussion imply, without definite claim, a superiority which proffers intercourse with those of other creeds only as a kind of condescension.

We are quite aware that we are giving precious little description of the manner to which we refer. No adequate description can be given. Its essence is to baffle description. But we rise to remark that in our judgment this special talent of tacit assumption is one of the most serious hindrances to the appreciation of the sweet reasonableness which is the true temper of this Mother Church. And if we, towards whom the polite contempt is not directed, are disgusted, what must be the trial imposed on the charity of those who are its intended objects.—Texas Churchman.

When he wants to write a letter
(And you know that he had better)
To his mother, or his father, or The Girl.

Or he's feeling sort of lonely
And the thing he craves is only
An oasis in the racket and the whirl;
Or he yearns for conversation
Or the glad exhilaration

Of a movie with a comic custard pie.
He will hurry helter-skelter
To the Y. M. C. A. shelter,
Hereinafter to be spoken of as "Y."

It's a cozy little cot
When it's chilly or it's hot,
For a fellow needs a spot
Where it's dry.

'Tis a happy little hut
Where they do not pose or strut,
And the door is never shut
At the "Y."

No, they don't care what his creed is;
They're concerned with what his need is

And to help him in whatever way they can;
And no matter what his rating,
There's a welcome always waiting
For a soldier and a brother and a man.

There are lots of books and papers,
There are talks and shows and capers,
And a pleasant voice to cheer him
if he's shy;

And they're glad to see him smoking,
And they love to have him joking
In the hut or tent or dugout known as "Y."

When he wants a friendly face
At the front or at the base,
It's a handy sort of place
To be nigh.

'Tis a free-and-easy shanty,
Homey, pleasant-like and canty,
And the greeting isn't scanty
At the "Y."

So, that nothing need be lacking,
Lend the Hut your earnest backing—
Let the boy who bears the battle have his club!

Give more often than you care to;
Draw the biggest check you dare to,
For the entry will look well upon the stub.

Help to cheer the youthful fighter;
Help to make his lot the brighter;
You can spare a little extra if you try,

That the lonely, sad or weary
Shall have comfort, warm and cheery,
In the winsome little wigwam known
as "Y."

It's a heavenly retreat
For the lad on weary feet
(Where we possibly shall meet By and By).

'Tis a happy little hut
Where they do not pose or strut,
And the door is never shut
At the "Y."

Throughout the Scriptures the works of man are made the test of his salvation. He is not to be justified by them, but he is to be judged by them, and this is a difficulty that often recurs to the mind. How is a man to be judged by his works if he is not to be justified by them? The answer is, because they are taken as the test of his faith, the proof of his sincerity.—R. J. McGhee.

Ritual.

Ritual to be good must have a reason for which the outward act is an expression. Thus the minister faces the people when he speaks for God to them and faces with them when he speaks for them to God. The people sit when Holy Scripture is being read to them for their instruction except at the reading of the Holy Gospel, when they stand as a mark of honor to Christ, whose word it is.

Simple as is the ritual of baptism, it is in every point significant, as Bishop Barry points out in his Teachers' Prayer Book. (a) The taking of the child into the arms of the priest denotes its being taken from its parents into the arms of Christ's mercy, to be made one with Him; (b) the giving of the personal name to the child shows that he is now regarded as having a separate individuality in the Covenant of God; (c) the immersion, or the pouring on of water, signifies the washing away of natural corruption in the blood of Christ; (d) the baptism "into" (not "in") the name of the Holy Trinity signifies the entering into communion with the Godhead, through unity with Christ, our Mediator, by which (see Catechism) the child becomes "a member of Christ," "the child of God," "and sanctified by the Holy Ghost."—The Church News.

Faith transforms a way of thinking into a mode of living. Faith transforms a range of dogmas into an assembly of virtues. Faith changes creed into character and transforms theory into life. But we have not yet carried the matter deep enough if we are to come into communion with ultimate reality. I must again declare that we are dealing with the most vital distinctions, and it depends on how we regard these distinctions as to whether our Christian life is to be like a weedy waste, or like a harvest field which is sweet and musical with the waving corn. Let me put the difference in another way which will bring us still nearer to our goal. Belief is engaged with truth; faith is concerned with life. Belief is the acceptance of propositions; faith is the acceptance of Christ. But, mark you, faith is not movement divorced from mind. Faith does not make the judgment blind. In faith the mind and the will are both awake. Indeed, faith begins in the courtship of the mind and the will, and then the wedded pair move together to the acceptance of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. But what is meant by accepting the Lord Jesus Christ? Now we are getting into the holy place, and we are nearing the sublime goal of our quest. What is that movement of the soul which implies the acceptance of Christ? Let me try to say just what I think Christian faith really is, and I will express it in a sentence, every word of which has been carefully weighed. I am speaking of personal faith in Christ, and of course I know that personal faith in Christ will operate in all sorts of social and corporate issues; but I am speaking now of the primary, individual relationship to Christ in which all these larger issues have their birth. Those larger issues are the consequent rivers, but this is the original spring. Well, then, I say that so far as I know it, faith in Christ is the personal acceptance of the Lord Jesus Christ as the revealer of God the Father, and as the Saviour and Renewer and Governor of my life.—Dr. J. H. Jowett.

Maybe the Author Was in Camp, Too.

Almost everybody has heard the story of the drafted millionaire who found his superior officer to be the man who had formerly buttoned up his shoes in the morning.

That familiar incident is only exceeded by one of the sergeants who went into a camp library maintained by the American Library Association and asked for a late book on shipbuilding. The Association takes great pains that all books of a technical nature which might be useful to soldiers and sailors, are kept on the shelves. So the librarian in charge reached confidently for a brand new book on shipbuilding and handed it to the sergeant. "Shucks," grunted the sergeant; "I did the drawings for that book!"

The following is taken from a recent address to women by the Bishop of Birmingham: "I was asked to speak words of consolation to you, but I have not taken that line. I have tried to make you feel that your letting your sons go is part of your share in this great trial. I want you to glory in your sacrifice—I want you to so live during this great time, that history shall say of Britain during this war that its womanhood was an inspiration to the men who went out to fight, and that, though the sword pierced through her own soul, she, like the greatest woman of history, could 'stand by the Cross,' and know that there are times when even the painful death of the best-beloved may mean the salvation of the world."

All goodness is loving obedience to the will of God. God and self are the two polar opposites, one or other of which must be the center of our lives. All varieties of character and conduct come down to these two great varieties at last. Either we are seeking to please God, and then we are good, or else we are living for self, in a more or less gross and direct fashion, and then we are bad. In such life, however white and glittering it may look, there is a core of corruption. To live to self, whether it be to our own judgment, or our own taste, or our own passions, or our own lusts, is sin, and it is death. To live to God is goodness and life; and to live to God is the only way by which we cease to live to self. We must die in order to live.—A. Maclaren.

PREPAREDNESS FOR THE CHURCH

Never in the history of the country has the Church's responsibility in upholding the ideals of the nation been so great. In rendering its share of the essential work, its buildings should provide for maximum efficiency in every department. Consult the leading specialists in all branches of church improvement, construction, alteration, etc.

Designs will be prepared indicating how contemplated changes, etc., can be effected. Local labor will be availed of when desired for the constructive work, the artistic and elaborate enrichment being executed under the supervision of our New York artists.

Send for photographs of church interiors showing changes and improvements that have been accomplished, with memorial gifts included as a part of the scheme.

THE FRUITS OF VICTORY.

What a great thing, what a wonderful thing it is to be alive in these fateful, glorious days! To see momentous history in the making hour by hour; to be eye-witnesses, as it were, of a great culmination for which the earth has been preparing, often in sore travail, for generations and for centuries! Events are moving far too rapidly for us to apprehend their full significance; we stand too close to see them in their true perspective; but from whatever point we view them, or whatever salient feature seizes upon our attention for the moment, it is but to impress its special demand for wonder and adoration.

Would we see a manifestation of God's interposition in behalf of His people, looking to Him in prayer and faith, on the largest scale perhaps ever enacted on the field of human history? We have but to recall the events of the past four months. Who would have dared to suggest at midsummer that the early snows of winter would fall upon shrouded guns and deserted trenches throughout embattled Europe? Who dreamt on that July day, when a small body of American marines barely blunted the extreme point of the spear thrust almost to the heart of France, that within so few weeks those worn and broken armies of the Allies would have received the surrender of all their insolent foes? Was it that we overestimated the strength of Germany, or underestimated the effect of the coming of America's untrained battalions, that we said in confidence of the righteousness of our cause, "Given two years now, or three at most, and, please God, we will conquer?" Not more certainly in Old Testament times was the hand of God made visible in the discomfiture of His enemies than in the irresistible onward march of the Allied forces on every field, without a repulse and with hardly a pause.

Would we see the deepest and most universal throb of gladness and rejoicing that has ever thrilled the heart of the civilized world? It is that which has encircled the earth in the past few days, rising from the hearts of burdened statesmen and wearied soldier and troubled civilian and suffering exile and, most of all, of anxious, patient women. Imagine, if one can, who has felt it least, what it has meant of relief and satisfaction and pure, thankful joy to some of these, and multiply that by millions upon millions, from the Yukon to the Euphrates, from New Zealand to New Mexico, but especially in the stricken lands of Europe. Only the great heart of heaven can know and sympathize with it all.

We see the gift of liberty purchased for and to be bestowed upon a host of peoples who have been held in bondage of mind and soul. Even we who boast that we were born free do not realize what freedom means—to possess unshackled the possibilities of our manhood and womanhood. What wonder that those whose spirits have been cramped and mutilated through all their generations by the dominance of arrogant and tyrannical wills should fail to understand it, some of them; should make hurtful and mistaken use of it, some of them; should doubt its coming in the destruction of their accustomed political servitude at the hands of their conquerors, some of them. But they will grow up unto it in time, and future generations, rejoicing in their common heritage, will bless this hour of their liberty's birth.

We see today such a triumph of idealism over materialism, of faith and justice and honesty of purpose over brutality and physical force, as the highest thought of the world has dreamed of, and despaired of, through struggling ages. That has been the marvel, the glory, of this war. Men can never worship again that false god who is ever on the side of the heaviest artillery. The "will to power" has crumbled before the will to right.

We see organized cruelty and brutality forever damned on this planet. We see a new political philosophy accepted and practiced by the controlling nations of the earth. The old machinations of secrecy and subtlety and deception are discredited by honest statesmanship with all their fruitage of jealousy and strife. We see the claims of human brotherhood accepted on the largest scale, and the law of sacrifice recognized as the rule of duty and the measure of worth. And soon we shall see the powers of the world in league to preserve its peace.

The lines below were written in almost the darkest hour of the conflict. Today their benison is ours!

"Ye who have faith to look with fearless eyes
Beyond the tragedy of a world at strife,
And know that out of death and night shall rise
The dawn of ampler life.

"Rejoice, whatever anguish rend the heart,
That God has given you a priceless dowry,
To live in these great times and have your part
In freedom's crowning hour.

"That ye may tell your sons who see the light
High in the heaven, their heritage to take—
I saw the power of darkness put to flight,
I saw the morning break."

But what of this brave singer; and what of the many, many thousands who, like him, with high courage and undaunted faith, laid down their lives that this day might dawn upon us? Shall we say that they have not seen it? Shall we imagine that it is hid from their eyes—this glory that they died to win? Nay, rather let us be assured that with clearer vision and a wiser understanding than ours they receive this their reward and rejoice with us in the triumph of their King and our's. So with undimmed eye will we look up to Him whose is the victory, and be thankful.

ANOTHER IMPERATIVE MEASURE OF WAR RELIEF.

Assuming that when these lines are read every one of our readers will have made his or her generous contribution to the War Work funds, and that the treasuries of the seven societies will be filled for the present, we may congratulate ourselves on another great national "drive" completed. Others will come in time. An appeal for large additional funds for Armenian and Syrian Relief may be expected in January. Our Church War Commission will ask for a million dollars about the first of February; and there will be further Liberty Loans and War Work Campaigns, doubtless, before the boys are all at home and the bills are paid. But for a moment we will have a breathing

Thanksgiving After Victory

If the Lord had not been on our side now may we say: If the Lord Himself had not been on our side, when men rose up against us;

They had swallowed us up quick: when they were so wrathfully displeased at us.

Yea, the waters had drowned us, and the stream had gone over our soul: the deep waters of the proud had gone over our soul.

But praised be the Lord: Who hath not given us over as a prey unto them.

The Lord hath wrought: a mighty salvation for us.

We got not this by our own sword, neither was it our own arm that saved us: but Thy right hand, and Thine arm, and the light of Thy countenance, because Thou hadst a favour unto us.

The Lord hath appeared for us: the Lord hath covered our heads, and made us to stand in the day of battle.

The Lord hath appeared for us: the Lord hath overthrown our enemies, and dashed in pieces those that rose up against us.

Therefore not unto us, O Lord, not unto us: but unto Thy Name be given the glory.

The Lord hath done great things for us: the Lord hath done great things for us, for which we rejoice.

Our help standeth in the Name of the Lord: Who hath made heaven and earth.

Blessed be the Name of the Lord: from this time forth for evermore.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son: and to the Holy Ghost:

As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.

O ALMIGHTY GOD, the Sovereign Commander of all the world, in Whose hand is power and might, which none is able to withstand; we bless and magnify Thy great and glorious Name for this happy victory, the whole glory whereof we do ascribe to Thee, Who art the only giver of victory. And, we beseech Thee give us grace to improve this great mercy to Thy glory, the advancement of Thy gospel, the honor of our country, and, as much as in us lieth, to the good of all mankind. And, we beseech Thee, give us such a sense of this great mercy as may engage us to a true thankfulness, such as may appear in our lives by an humble, holy, and obedient walking before Thee all our days; through Jesus Christ our Lord, to Whom, with Thee and the Holy Spirit, as for all Thy mercies, so in particular for this Victory and Deliverance, be all glory and honor, world without end. Amen.

Book of Common Prayer, pages 311-12.

space, and if we have done our best for all appeals that have been made we can enjoy the good news which every tick of the wires is bringing from our victorious armies and Allies with a clear conscience and with very thankful hearts.

It gives to us Churchmen an opportunity to look into the affairs of our own household. Doubtless in many quarters there is need that the Church treasures be replenished, that no deficits be allowed to accumulate to hinder the work of the parish or diocese or the Church at large in the present or to plague it in the future.

We have obvious need to direct our attention as the year draws near its close to the great missionary work of the Church, and to be informed as to the condition of its treasury. There has been little said about it recently, but those who have examined the reports of Mr. King, which have been published from time to time in the Southern Churchman, must be aware that the Board of Missions is in need of large contributions to meet the exigencies occasioned by the war. Certainly this was to be expected under the conditions through which we have passed in the last two years and should occasion no surprise.

The Board, we know, realizing all the circumstances, has been conducting its great work with the utmost economy that justice and prudence would allow. They could not fail their missionaries bravely sticking to their posts; well established work could not be abandoned nor institutions fail of support. They would have been blameworthy had they not, in full faith in the Church's purpose and willingness, kept the work up to as full measure of efficiency as possible. It cannot be laid to their charge that they are facing a very serious deficit.

Whose fault is it then? Well, the fault of the whole Church to a degree, though we cannot charge the Church with intentional or exceptional dereliction. Last year was a year of unusual calls upon the people and of great preoccupation. It closed with a deficit of $143,000 in the missionary treasury—not a very difficult proposition to handle in ordinary times; but the times were not ordinary, and this year threatens to see it more than doubled. The explanation is not far to seek. More than 75,000 Churchmen are known to be in the military service of the country. How many more are serving in other capacities, away from their homes and business and church, no one knows. Many of our congregations have been fairly shot to pieces by the war, with homes temporarily broken up and vacant pews attesting the families that are absent; while elsewhere congregations have had their expenses increased and their hospitality strained to the utmost to care for a great population of transients that have poured in upon them. Hundreds of our clergy are serving with the army in various capacities, doing work that we would not at any price see left undone, but leaving somewhere just so many parishes vacant and more or less disorganized. The good women, too, of the Woman's Auxiliary—they are now the leaders in Red Cross work, Y. W. C. A. work, community welfare work, volunteer nursing and such like. Trust them to be in the forefront in answer to every patriotic or humanitarian call. No, the people cannot be charged with indifference when in these two years of stress and change and extraordinary demands they have fallen short less than 10 per cent. of their usual offerings. But that 10 per cent. makes a large aggregate of nearly $300,000 on the treasurer's books.

But this is not the worst of it. The increase in Chinese exchange due to the war has exactly doubled, we are told, the expenses of our work in China where our largest foreign interests lie. Add to this the increased costs in every direction which the war has brought about; freight and passenger rates, rents and insurance, hospital supplies, food and fuel, the whole list of things which contribute to that familiar nightmare—the high cost of living, as applied to so great an institution of such varied activities. So to the deficit which we may safely say has been produced by the war must be added increased costs to an even greater amount incident to the same general cause.

This is a matter which should engage the attention of our liberal and broad-minded laymen. It is one of the incidental war expenses which has fallen, not on the country at large, but on our own Christian household, and it ought to be handled as many another like charge has been handled by them, quietly and unobtrusively, as part of the price we are paying for the extension of the kingdom of God which our eyes are witnessing today and for imparting to our fellowmen the blessings of that "liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free." In this day of our great thankfulness to Almighty God and of the riches of our liberality to those causes connected with our warfare with flesh and blood, let us not be unmindful of that other and closely allied warfare against the entrenched powers of evil and of darkness to which we are committed as soldiers of Christ, and upon which the permanent value of the victory God has given us so largely depends in a world to be knit together as never before in common interests and a common aim.

Supplies All Splints.

The American Red Cross has taken over the job of supplying all splints to the American Expeditionary Forces. The demand for these particular articles is increasing at a great rate due to the increasing activity of American troops on the battle front.

To meet this demand the Red Cross has established a splint manufacturing plant of its own in a large French town, not far from the battle front.

Here and There

Vilbjalur Stefansson, Arctic explorer, could hardly have selected a worse time to return to New York after more than a year's hardships in the neighborhood of the North Pole, where raw wolf meat formed a large part of his regular diet, according to a statement made by him. His arrival has been more or less smothered in German and Austrian peace notes, armistice terms and accounts of rapid enemy retreats. Nevertheless, he has done the best he could to hold the center of the stage, and is reported to have said in part: "There was a region of some 1,000,000 square miles unexplored when we went up there. We cleared up about one-quarter of it. Much of it proved to be ocean. We discovered five new islands and one island, hitherto supposed to exist, we erased."

In the South we would call 250,000 square miles, which Mr. Stefansson says he "cleared up," "a right smart little patch of new ground." But to a man who erases islands it may not amount to much.

Ministers of Washington, Philadelphia and Richmond have made protests to the municipal authorities for closing the churches during the influenza epidemic, some of them alleging that such action was a violation of the clause of the Constitution, assuring religious freedom. This matter will be put to the test in California, where the Christian Science Church proceeded with its services as usual, in spite of the closing order, allowing several of its members to be arrested, and then going into court to contest the validity of the closing ordinance. They declare they will carry the matter to the Supreme Court of the United States if necessary.

The following item was handed us for the "Here and There" column by a clergyman of the Diocese of Southern Virginia:

"Requests have been made by the government that sugar, wheat, coal and numerous other things be conserved during the war. It remained for the Standing Committee of Southern Virginia to discover a brand new idea in conservation. In the Diocesan Journal just issued appears this item in the report of the Standing Committee: 'Consent given to conservation of Bishops Thomson, Moore, Sage, Mikell, Remington.' No doubt such a measure would be looked upon with favor by our right reverend brethren."—J. L. G.

The world today is moving so rapidly that it is like a great stage upon which leading actors make their entrance and exits in bewildering rapidity. Nicholas Romanoff, Ferdinand of Bulgaria, formerly known as the "Fox of the Balkans," Constantine of Greece, and now William Hohenzollern, have all made their exits, and new figures are rapidly appearing on the stage to take the place of these rulers. Premier Venizelos of Greece is the dominant figure in that country; Dr. Thomas G. Masaryk, a former professor of Prague University, has been elected President of the new republic of Bohemia; Carl Liebnicht has been taken from prison and is likely to be the head of the new republic of Germany, while in Russia leaders come and go so fast that it is hardly safe for a weekly paper to publish the name of any man as a leader there, lest he be cast into oblivion before its pages come to the readers' notice.

A French newspaper, L'Heure, publishes the following interesting item:

"It is reported in the American Army that a white 'dove of peace' one clear morning last week flew over the front for more than an hour without drawing fire from either side. The truth of the story is verified. Two colonels and a major declare they saw the bird. It was an airplane, completely white, of a type unknown on the western front, carrying no sign of any sort, sweeping very low.

"It passed over the American trenches, then over the German and afterwards flew off to the northward and disappeared."

This incident brings to mind two others of a somewhat similar, though not so startling nature. In the month of August, when President Wilson was visiting at a country place outside of New York, while he was sitting on the lawn on Sunday afternoon a flock of white doves flew over and circled around him and settled on the grass before him. Last month a white dove flew into the Stock Exchange of Chicago, and after fluttering around for a few moments perched high up near the ceiling above the heads of the brokers. Press reports of this occurrence stated that many of the members of the Exchange were so touched by the appearance of the bird that they were moved to tears. Such things remind us that no matter how fast the world may be moving today, it is not getting out of reach of that Blessed Book, which tells us of the first Dove of Peace.

Can it be a mere coincidence that a cessation of hostilities should find the British Army at Mons, where they first met the German hosts in 1914, after the Kaiser had told his troops that first of all they were to destroy "the contemptible little British Army"; that the French should have reached Sedan, where nearly a half a century before they had been forced to surrender to the Germans; and that the armistice should have been signed upon the birthday of the King of Italy? And to us in America it begins to look as though our Thanksgiving Day would become an international occasion, just as the Fourth of July has already reached beyond our own borders, for it is quite probable that the final peace treaty will be about ready to be signed by that day.

Great plans are being made for November 24th in Richmond, Va., where a meeting under the auspices of the Laymen's Missionary Movement is being planned, and Dr. E. M. Poteat, for fifteen years a college president and teacher of young men, will be one of the speakers. Dr. Samuel M. Zeemer, who has lived many of the best years of his life in Arabia and Egypt, will also be present and speak upon the subject of conditions in the near East. Men who are in reach of Richmond should not fail to avail themselves of this opportunity for hearing such leaders in this great movement that is Christianizing the world.

A vacuum cotton picker is now being used with great success in the Imperial Valley of California. It has five rubber tubes eighteen feet long, at the ends of which are large nozzles. The air from these tubes is extracted by a suction pump so that they have the drawing power of the vacuum cleaner highly multiplied. By means of this invention cotton can be picked with much less waste and in one-fifth the time necessary by the present hand process.

A law passed by the Legislature of Virginia at its session in 1918 gave the State Board of Health power to declare the use of the common cup at the Communion table an illegal act, should the Board deem such action necessary in the interest of the public health. Since the outbreak of the Spanish influenza the Board has felt that it was necessary to prohibit the use of the common cup even upon these sacred occasions, and has so ruled. It is thought by many that this law and the action of the Board of Health may be in violation of that clause in the Constitution of the United States which provides for religious liberty, and it is more than likely that some of our clergymen feel so strongly on this subject that they will violate the order of the State Board of Health in order to make a test case that can be decided by the courts.

Our relations with Japan are likely to become more cordial if dollars can strengthen the ties between the two countries. Figures just made public show that our exports have increased in the past six months by $30,500,000, and that our imports increased $97,000,000, so that the trade with our eastern neighbor is more than $125,000,000 greater than it has been.

HOLY TRINITY CHURCH, PARIS.

Letter From Bishop Israel.

Mr. Editor: I am glad to see that the Rev. Dr. Watson is interesting the American public in Holy Trinity Church, Paris, France. Only those who have come into personal contact with religious conditions in France can realize the opportunities for the present and future influence of the American Episcopal Church. I have laid the whole matter before "The Commission on the American Churches in Europe" and was happy to see, by Mr. Steson's letter, that the interest was awakening.

Already we have lost two important opportunities from the lack of the means applied for. One of these has been seen and seized upon by a union of American Protestant religious bodies.

Many have a vision larger than any one organization—a vision which seems to be taking form in the minds of many of the more thoughtful French. Letters and writings of all kinds, accompanied in some cases by actions, show that old boundaries and restrictions of thought and action are disappearing not only socially, but ecclesiastically. Whether this shall be for better or for worse depends upon our leaders in State and Church. If our vision be not a mere dream, Holy Trinity, Paris, may stand as the centre from which shall radiate lines of thought and action, ecclesiastically at least, which may guide men to a point of contact to the benefit of the race for all future generations. I trust you will lend the influence of your voice and pen in seconding this great object for which Dr. Watson is laboring, and assist Holy Trinity worthily to represent the American Church in this great centre, in the realization of the Unity of Christendom.

THE EPIDEMIC.

Pastoral of the Bishop of Sacramento.

Mr. Editor: In line with your excellent editorial of October 26th is the following, just issued:

Pastoral Letter.

To the Faithful in Christ Jesus Throughout the Diocese of Sacramento:

Beloved: It has pleased God to permit a period of universal distress and bereavement to come upon us. Without attributing to our Heavenly Father the origin of this fatal epidemic, for which our own ignorance or neglect is doubtless responsible, yet we may be sure He is working out by means of it a solemn and beneficent purpose.

Day by day as the death roll is printed we pass our eye in apprehension down the long columns, not knowing what familiar names may meet us there. Some of you have been taken to the brink of the grave, and been drawn slowly back again.

In the suffering and death which are everywhere you should read the summons of the Most High. Immersed in the affairs of life, un mindful of spiritual and eternal things the awful hand of God has been laid upon us. Men go about their daily work as if they had no master but themselves. Men cling to the frail thing called life, not realizing that its preciousness is due solely to the fact that it comes from God and returns to God. These bitter weeks, dripping with the tears of the bereaved, black with the storm clouds of pain, and torn with the upheaval of earthly plans, are meant to remind us of the transitory nature of this life, and to bring us in penitence to the feet of God. The funerals passing through our streets are to remind us of our end. The fevers and maladies which have ravaged us are to bid us prepare for the eternal future.

Take the warning home to yourselves. If you have been spared it is that you may become better men and women. Alas for you if some years hence, when death approaches again, it finds you no more fit than before; if having gone once midway into the cold waters next time finds you trembling on the brink, to begin all over again with the same dread and mortal fears.

Look well at your present life and judge to what extent it is built upon the sands. View the home, the soft luxuries, the material comforts about you, then ask, what shall I do when I pass into a world where beauty is spiritual and all adornments the charms and virtues of the soul? Stand in the office, shop, busy center of trade, looking about you at revolving wheels and ledgers crammed with figures, then reflect, how can I live without this business which so fills my soul? Can I be happy in a world where there are no markets, no newspapers, where the industry is the heavenly activity of the soul and the only occupation to carry out the will of God? As you contemplate your savings and bank balances, think how soon must all this gold fall from your unconscious fingers, and you shall enter upon a life where the only wealth is spiritual treasure laid up by a life of holiness and love.

Sit loosely to all earthly thing. Hide your life with Christ in God. Open your eyes to the reality of the spiritual world which encompasses you. You enter into it by holy baptism. You live in it by the heavenly food of the Eucharist. Angelic beings surround you. Supernatural helps uplift you. Go often into the church and in the shadow of its walls think on these things. At altar, font, chancel rail and pulpit stand the white-robed priests of God calling you to the celestial banquet while yet there is time. Turn to God, who is speaking to you in deep tones of love. He would unite you more perfectly to His beloved Son, that you may thereby be drawn closer to the Father's heart, beyond the dissolving present into the life that abides.

Our public services being suspended at present, I advise (1) that church buildings be open and in constant use for private prayer; (2) that clergy and a few devout souls maintain daily offices and frequent Eucharists, that the Church's corporate worship be unbroken and unceasing supplications be offered to God; (3) that family prayer be generally revived, especially on Sundays, the father leading the home group; (4) that systematic offerings be laid aside each Sunday as usual, and in addition a special gift to be offered as part of a thank offering on the first Sunday on which the churches are again open.

Commending you affectionately to the blessing of our Heavenly Father, I am,

Sincerely your Bishop,

WM. HALL MORELAND.

Sacramento, Cal., Nov. 3, 1918.

A Startling Truth.

What a difference it would make if men everywhere would hold firmly to ascertained truth and apply the same to their daily acts! The human race, as now conducted, spends much of its time learning, relearning and then disregarding what has been learned—a vicious circle which leads nowhere and that slowly. Of all our neglected resources none can compare in mass and insignificance with the accumulation of unusual knowledge that science and shrewdness have stacked up about us. When once we have put it all to work, kaisers, politicians and wars will vanish into nothingness like cockroaches before the spring house-cleaning.

Believe, O soul, thou art placed in this mysterious and glorious universe, that God formed thee from His spirit for no mean purpose, but for a destiny nobler than thy highest aspirations have pointed to. Believe in the best thoughts and whisperings that visit thou heart. If thou dost catch at times some gleams of the divineness of charity, of the glory of sacrifice, of the grandeur of faith, of the sky-piercing power of prayer, like mountain peaks jutting through fogs, or slopes afar off in the horizon light, believe in them with more enthusiasm than in the stupid dust of the beaten roads. . . . Believe in them, for they are the mountain principles and altars of life.—Starr King.

THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE HOLY COMMUNION.

Intinction Or Extinction, Which?

By Rev. Randolph H. McKim, D. D.

The advocates of Intinction as a method of the administration of the Lord's Supper urge as a reason for their proposal that (in spite of much scientific opinion to the contrary) there "appears to be a remote possibility for infection in the use of the common cup at communion." And then they urge that even if it were absolutely safe, the Church must change her immemorial custom, and set aside Jesus Christ's injunction, in obedience to "a growing sentiment in opposition to the use of a common cup anywhere." Accordingly, it is proposed to remodel the institution of the Lord's Supper, to mutilate the words in which Jesus instituted it, each priest according to his own taste, to omit one of the sacramental acts, to erase from our service the words so dear to the ears of Christians for two milleniums, "The blood of our Lord Jesus Christ which was shed for thee, preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life. Drink this in remembrance that Christ's blood was shed for thee, and be thankful"; or, if the words are read, to deprive them of all significance by omitting the act of drinking the wine at communion.

In the days of persecution Christian people dared to celebrate the Lord's Supper at the risk of death or imprisonment. In our day, it appears, Christians are believed to be so timid that they fear to receive the communion because there may be "a remote possibility of infection in the use of the common cup." I can only say that after fifty-four years in the ministry, I have a better opinion of the faith and the courage of Christian people of my acquaintance. May I suggest to the advocates of Intinction a more radical and successful method of treating the difficulties that confront them? Let them take their courage in both hands and eliminate entirely the administration of the elements in the Holy Communion and boldly avow that spiritual communion is all sufficient. This will immensely simplify the problem. All the thorny questions about the use of individual cups, or the scientific cleansing of the cups, or of tongs to handle the intincted wafer, or how to remodel the words of Christ, will simply vanish. Then, too, the ultimate problem whether "the rim and not the wine itself is the only possible source of infection" will not have to be faced, and as to "the saving of time in the administration" which is put forward as one of the advantages of Intinction, this method will not simply "cut the time in half," but cut it wholly out.

I venture to submit some rubrics which might be adopted, according as Intinction or Extinction shall be agreed upon by our new Modernists. Each priest may, of course, adopt rubrics for his own parish. If he may at will rectify the words of Christ, he may make his own rubrical changes. The greater includes the less.

In favor of the latter alternative it may be pointed out that the advocates of Intinction are obliged to admit that their method does not give as sure protection, for they say that perhaps "the wine itself is the possible source of infection," and perhaps "the hand of the priest" may be a medium of infection.

In the one case the following is suggested:

Rubric.

Since there is a remote possibility of infection in the use of the common cup, as has been the custom in the Christian Church for nineteen hundred years, it is hereby declared that the priest may omit the administration of the bread and the wine in the Holy Communion, and instruct the people that it is sufficient to make a spiritual communion, each in his heart, bidding them believe, that in so doing they do eat and drink the body and blood of our Saviour Christ profitably to their soul's health, although they do not receive the Sacrament with the mouth.

In the other case these are submitted:

Rubric.

In parishes where the Holy Communion is administered by Intinction, if any man fears the possibility of infection by reason of the hand of the priest conveying it to the communicant, let him be assured that he may profitably commune without receiving the elements even by Intinction.

Rubric.

Let not any Christian conscience be troubled, because Christ's words of institution are not followed in the administration of the Holy Communion, or because one of the Sacramental acts is omitted, but let it be considered that Jesus was quite ignorant of the danger of infection by the use of the common cup—it was a part of the Kenosis—and hence in setting aside his method of administration of the Lord's Supper we are only using that brighter light of science which shines in our day.

While the Church awaits the decision of these new reformers as to which of the above methods shall be recommended, perhaps the advocates of this momentous and startling change will tell us whether there is any known instance, scientifically established, of infection conveyed by the common Communion cup? They have appealed to science. To science let them go.

AN EPISCOPALIAN AT SUMMER CONFERENCES.

By the Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, D. D., Wycliffe College, Toronto.

It occurs to me that perhaps a brief account of a few summer conferences in the United States, from the standpoint of an Episcopalian, may be of interest to some of your readers. I attended in all eight conferences which gave me a number of varied experiences.

At Stony Brook, on Long Island, my headquarters for the summer, I found myself among Presbyterians, and was deeply interested to observe the developments there. The conferences covered the months of July and August, commencing with three weeks of Bible Study. Each year, for the last few years, has seen some addition to the work, and now there is good prospect of a settled and thoroughly valuable institution. Many of the leading Presbyterians in America attend and speak, and whether the subject of the conference be prophecy, or work amongst the young, or work connected with such an organization as the National Bible Institute of New York, there is always much that is interesting and helpful. The place has become quite a summer resort, with bungalows and cottages dotted about everywhere. At a distance of only a little more than fifty miles from New York there seems no reason why Stony Brook should not become an extensive and important enterprise on behalf of the teaching of Scripture truth.

From Stony Brook I journeyed to Eagle's Mere, where a conference was held under the auspices of the Moody Bible Institute. The place is one of the most attractive and delightful summer resorts, and it is not surprising that it is in great demand for conferences. Two of the four fine hotels are in the hands of Quakers, and the arrangements are in every way admirable. The conference has been in the hands of the Moody Institute for the last two years, and its growth indicates that there is room for such a gathering with its emphasis on Bible study. There was a good number of ministers present, and I was permitted to take part in the conference with them by the discussion of several of the moral problems raised by the war.

At Princeton, N. J., for several years past a conference has been held, entitled the Victorious Life Conference, the buildings and grounds of the Princeton Theological Seminary being kindly loaned for the purpose of this gathering. It is like the well-known English convention of Keswick, though on a much smaller scale, and is occupied almost entirely with the one thought of the spiritual life of the individual and the community. I met some Episcopalians there who, like myself, greatly enjoyed the spiritual atmosphere and the true fellowship of people of various churches.

Montrose, Pa., is now getting widely known for its Bible Conference, led by Dr. Torrey, and it stands out from most summer conferences by its emphasis on solid Bible teaching. Dr. Torrey believes in continuity, and for this reason endeavors to limit the conference to a few speakers who give courses of lectures or addresses throughout the week. Each year that I have been there I have had the pleasure of preaching at the Episcopal Church of Montrose.

My next experience was at Lake Orion, about forty miles from Detroit, where there is held a somewhat small conference, managed by a committee of Detroit clergymen and laymen. As a summer resort Lake Orion is decidedly attractive, though at present the conference is only small.

Then came a visit to New Wilmington, not far from New Castle, Pa., where one of the colleges connected with the United Presbyterian Church is situated, Westminster College. This college is intended largely for young people and has a decidedly missionary flavor. It fell to my lot to take the young people for their Bible hour, and it was a most enjoyable time. My experience of this conference for the last three or four years has been truly inspiring, for I have seldom had the opportunity of speaking to people who have responded more heartily to the messages.

Winona Lake, Ind., is too well known to need any description. The ten days of the Bible Conference closed the season there. The number of speakers is, perhaps, too large, and on this account there is a decided lack of sequence in the teaching. But the place is one of boundless opportunities, and the ministers' meetings in particular are most impressive for their large numbers and also for their evident interest.

My last conference was at Cedar Lake, Ind., about forty miles south from Chicago. It seems that about two years ago the Monon Railroad offered a large tract of land on the banks of the lake to the Moody Church, of Chicago, in the hope that the place might be "cleaned up" after a somewhat doubtful, not to say more than doubtful, reputation. On certain conditions the church was to have a lease of the property at the end of three years, and, according to all appearances, the conditions will be so amply fulfilled that in July next the lease will be forthcoming. The place is now covered with temporary buildings of various kinds, and there is every prospect of a permanent work there in the near future. Some of the buildings used by the Moody Church were formerly devoted to very different purposes, and I was told that among the former experiences of the place was the fact that it was used as a training ground by a well-known pugilist, who shall be nameless. The conference which I attended was a reproduction of the one held at Princeton, and was under the same auspices, the idea being that the message of the Victorious Life should be presented in the Middle West in this way.

As I look back over my summer, the fourth consecutive summer of these experiences, I am impressed with the magnificent opportunity afforded by such gatherings. The combination of summer vacation and Bible study is at once enjoyable and useful, and there can be no doubt of the hearty appreciation of the conferences by large numbers of Christian people. If I may be allowed to say so, I think they ought to be far more widely used than at present, by members of the Protestant Episcopal Church, who would find no harm done to their position by such co-operation and fellowship. I am not conscious of being any the less an Episcopalian than before, and I greatly enjoyed the fellowship with Christian brethren of other churches. I like to see things as they appear to other followers of Christ, while it may be of some service to let these see how things look to a convinced Episcopalian. Quite a number of people were surprised to find me, an Episcopalian, at such interdenominational gatherings, and in two or three instances I was actually regarded as a rara avis. But I never fail to recall, and several times I mentioned, the interesting statement of a well-known Churchman who, when he was asked in England by the Royal Commission, whether he was an Anglican, replied, "Yes, definitely, but not exclusively." This, I believe, is the true attitude of all Episcopalians, and certainly I have never found anything in it to weaken by attachment to our own communion. What is of still more importance is that attendance at these summer conferences, and taking part in them, helps forward the cause of true reunion, enabling us all to say with the Apostle, "Grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity."

THE UNIVERSITY IN KRAKI.

This Will Be Great. Make It
$250,000,000!

"The practical and significant question is, Shall our men and boys come back to us weaker or stronger men? The period of demobilization should be made one of growth in knowledge and working efficiency and of strengthening of character and life purposes. The Young Men's Christian Association and other organizations are planning not only to enlarge their recreational program during this period, but to launch a great educational campaign. In popular language it may be described as 'The University in Khaki.' We have appointed an Educational Commission overseas, composed of a group of the leading educators of America. They have asked us to select and send over about two thousand professors and teachers of American colleges and schools to help in launching educational work for the coming winter, and also to be on hand for the period of demobilization, whenever it comes. We have entered into negotiations with the British and French universities to help us in this vast educational undertaking. One may judge of the great dimensions of the enterprise from the fact that it will require at least $8,000,000 for text-books and books of reference for the coming winter alone. It ought to be added that no provision is made for this educational program in the budget of $170,500,000, and therefore in itself is a further reason why we must have a large over-subscription."—John R. School for Chaplains Graduates Its Largest Class.

The School for Chaplains at Camp Taylor, Louisville, on November 7th graduated upwards of two hundred and fifty commissioned chaplains, its largest class.

The graduation address was delivered by Dr. C. S. Macfarland, who had just returned from service as Commissioner of the Federal Council of Churches to France. He urged that the ending of conflict not only did not lessen the need of chaplains, but made them all the more needful in both quantity and quality. The process of demobilization, with the attendant problems of leisure for the soldiers, their removal from the front to the temptations of the cities and especially to the ports of embarkation in France, together with the natural reaction from discipline and the tendency to release themselves from restraint, all make the problems of the chaplain and the importance of his work infinitely greater.

About half the graduates are ordered overseas and the other half to camps here.

The school, under Commandant Major A. A. Pruden and an efficient faculty, has undoubtedly become a permanent department of the army.

Clergymen's Retiring Fund Society.

The annual meeting of the directors was held November 8th at the Church Missions House, the Bishop of Long Island in the chair. The Treasurer's report showed receipts of $33,581.06, of which $7,000 had been added to the permanent fund, and $24,262.60 divided among two hundred and ninety-three annuitants. The Financial Secretary's report included a brief sketch of the relations of the Clergymen's Retiring Fund Society to the past efforts of the Church to provide for her old clergy, and particularly of the probable effects of the establishment of the Church Pension Fund upon the future of the Clergymen's Retiring Fund Society. Its outlook for continued usefulness was shown to lie in three directions: (1) In providing as liberally as we may for all our prospective and present annuitants, so many of which latter class have been bitterly disappointed in finding that no provision has been made for them in the scheme of the Church Pension Fund under its present rules. (2) In accepting as many new members as may care to avail themselves of the privilege of an annuity beginning at sixty years of age. (3) In emphasizing that even though a clergyman be looking forward to a pension at sixty-eight from the Church Pension Fund, it is well worth his while to secure an annuity at sixty from this society for the eight years before that pension can become due and payable, to which annuity he will be entitled as a matter of right, with no restrictions of any kind, and will amount to not less than twice as much as the whole sum he has contributed as dues, and which for the remainder of his life will come to him over and above whatever he may be receiving from the Church Pension Fund. The report of the Financial Secretary was ordered to be printed in full in the Annual Report of the society, shortly to be published. The capital fund now amounts to $429,214.38, its annuitants number 306, and $26,170.75 is awaiting distribution among them in amounts varying from $15 to $472.50, which is 25 per cent. of each man's contribution to the treasury.

Rt. Rev. R. A. Gibson, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Advent Call.

The Advent Call is the war work of the Woman's Auxiliary. It is a call to special prayer and study of the Bible in this critical period of the world's history.

This call will be carried by chosen messengers to all the women of the Church in the first week in Advent.

The messengers will be selected from the women of each congregation, endorsed by their rectors, and after special instruction will be commissioned by the Bishop.

Instruction will be given all the Richmond messengers at Holy Trinity Parish House on Friday, November 29, beginning at 4 P. M. Other women of the Church will be welcome to attend this class, which will be conducted by the Rev. W. E. Cox.

All the women of the Church are asked to make a special effort to be present at the Holy Communion on Advent Sunday, December 1, as a preparation for the Advent Call which goes out that week.

Special prayers are being distributed for daily use from now to the end of the first week in Advent.

The service at which the messengers will receive their commissions from the Bishop will be held in St. Paul's Church Monday, December 2, at 10 A. M.

From that service they will go out upon their visits. And while these visits are being made, other women (intercessors) will be praying in the Church, so that there will be continual intercession for God's blessing on the work and His strength for those who are sent.

A Birthday Proposition.

The twenty-second of November is the birthday of our beloved Bishop-Coadjutor, the Right Rev. William Cabell Brown. Would it not be appropriate and gratifying if the people of his Diocese gave him on that day a birthday offering for the work of the Church in Brazil, so near to his heart, which he relinquished at our call after twenty years of labor in laying deep its foundations? A penny for each year of his consecrated life from each of his friends would be but a small token of their loyal affection, but a large gift in the aggregate for the mission to which his continued interest is pledged. And doubtless he will forgive us this time if we overguess his age, and reckoning "by heart-beats, not the figures on a dial" should judge him to be almost a hundred.

(Mrs.) Mary Brockenbrough Nevitt, Swetnam, Fairfax Co., Virginia.

Kingston Parish:—The people of Kingston Parish, together with other friends, met at the rectory at Mathews Courthouse on the afternoon of October 31 and presented their much-loved rector, the Rev. B. N. de Foe Wagner, with a very handsome solid silver private communion service. At the same time a purse was also presented to Mrs. Wagner. These presents were parting gifts, as Mr. Wagner leaves for a wider field of labor this week, he having accepted the rectorship of Christ Church, Richmond.

The best wishes of the community accompany this godly and talented man, who has won the love of his people to an unusual degree. The spiritual uplift he has given them, the reverence he has inculcated, will long be remembered. The beautifying of the churches, too, will ever stand as a memorial to him.

Mr. Wagner entered upon his new duties in Richmond on Sunday, November 10.

First Lieutenant Edmund H. Prince, who died on the battlefield of France on September 27, was a member of the senior class of the Theological Seminary in Virginia, and so far as known is the first of the Seminary students to lose his life on the battlefield. At the outbreak of the war he entered the officers' training camp at Fort Myer, and had been in France since last May.

A service in memory of Lieutenant Prince was held recently in the Seminary chapel, and an address was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Berryman Green, dean of the Seminary. Attending were members of the faculty and students.

The Episcopal Churches of Richmond were thrown open Monday night to those who felt the need of rendering their thanks to God for the great mercies which He has given us by the restoration of peace. Old St. John's Church arranged for a service by 11 o'clock Monday morning. St. Paul's, St. James', St. Thomas', Ginter Park, and the Church of the Holy Comforter had services. On Monday night, Bishop Brown being the speaker at St. James', and the Rev. R. Cary Montague at Holy Comforter.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. R. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thompson, D. D., Suffragan.

Save the Chancel of Good Shepherd, Lynchburg.

At the Diocesan Council, at Lynchburg, on May 29 last, I promised to put forth every possible effort to raise an additional $750, on the promise of the Rev. Claudius F. Smith, rector of Grace Memorial Church, Lynchburg, to raise the remaining $1,000 by December 10, to save this beautiful and very valuable colored church property from being sold under the hammer.

We have been warned that this will be our last opportunity to save this property to the colored people.

Over and above cash and pledges in my hands, I still lack $400 of the money I promised to raise for this object. The time is short and prompt action alone will save this property. I dislike to have to make personal appeals for any object other than St. Paul's School, and I hope my friends will appreciate my position as Archdeacon of the Church Work among the colored people and respond liberally to this appeal at once.

Please accept my thanks in advance for the kindness.

JAMES S. RUSSELL,
Archdeacon, Lawrenceville, Va.

I sincerely trust that the friends of the Church will aid Archdeacon Russell in his efforts to raise the sum of $400 necessary to save the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lynchburg, Va., from being sold.

The work in Lynchburg has, I believe, a better promise than heretofore, and the Church once free from debt will do a good and needed work among the colored people.

May God put it into the hearts of our people to help this work.

BEVERLY D. TUCKER,
Bishop of Southern Virginia.

The funeral services of Mrs. J. Cleveland Hall, wife of the rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Danville, whose death was noticed last week, took place from the rectory Friday morning, November 1. The services were conducted by the Right Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., assisted by the Rev. Dr. Jos. B. Dunn, the Rev. Chiswell Dabney, the Rev. Arthur L. Kenyon and the Rev. Dr. Latham, of the Methodist Church. Interment was made in Green Hill cemetery.

The Danville papers bear eloquent testimony to the esteem and affection in which Mrs. Hall was held in that city, where she has been a faithful helper to her husband during his rectorship of twenty-three years. Her happy and loving disposition endeared her to a wide circle of friends that extended far outside the limits of the congregation.

Christ Church, Pulaski.—Sunday, November 3, the first anniversary of the rector, the Rev. Thomas F. Ople, was celebrated. The rector reported for the year fifteen baptisms, ten confirmations, one new mission started and a new pipe organ installed, in addition to other improvements.

This was the first time the Church had been open for four Sundays on account of the epidemic of influenza, which cost Pulaski about seventy-five deaths. During the epidemic Mr. Ople was in charge of a community soup kitchen, which engaged the attention of from ten to thirty people for two weeks and which furnished nourishing food to hundreds, the food being carried to the houses of the sick in automobiles.

Beginning Sunday, November 17, a preaching mission will be held in Christ Church, to last about ten days. The Rev. Claudius F. Smith, of Lynchburg, will be the preacher throughout the mission.

EASTON.

Rt. Rev. Wm. F. Adams, D. D., Bishop

The Rev. Alfred Lee Jones, rector of Trinity Parish, Elkton, has been appointed by the Cecil County Board of Education assistant principal of the Elkton High School.

The acceptance of the post by Mr. Jones greatly aids the school board in its work, as owing to the extremely large salaries paid by business concerns, the ranks of public school teachers have been much depleted.

Services have been held in the historic Parish of Saint Mary Anne's, Northeast, Cecil county, each Sunday morning at 9:30 A. M. by Mr. Jones, who has charge of both parishes.

EAST CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Thomas C. Darst, D. D., Bishop

The Convocation of Colored Workers of the Diocese of East Carolina, which was to have been held during the first week in November, has been postponed to December 3, 4 and 5.

The meeting will be held in St. Mark's Church, Wilmington, of which the Rev. Hubert A. Parris is rector.

The Rev. W. J. Herritage, of Edenton, is dean of the Convocation.

The Rev. Alfred Taylor, of Crescent City, Florida, has accepted his election as rector of Holy Trinity Church, Hertford, and Grace Church, Plymouth, and will take charge of these parishes, occupying the rectory at Hertford on December 1.

The Rev. C. H. Bascom, formerly rector of St. Barnabas' Church, Berlin, N. H., is in charge of St. Paul's Church, Greenville, during the absence of the rector, the Rev. George F. Hill, who is serving as a religious work director in a Y. M. C. A. building at Camp Wadsworth, S. C.

The Rev. J. E. Warner, of Parrsboro, N. S., Canada, is serving as locum tenens at St. Paul's, Beaufort, for the winter.

One-fifth of the East Carolina clergy are now in war work, four of the number being overseas, as follows: The Rev. John M. Robeson, senior chaplain, 30th Division; the Rev. Robert E. Gribbin, chaplain, 3d Pioneer Infantry; the Rev. Thomas N. Lawrence, Y. M. C. A., secretary, A. E. F.; the Rev. A. R. Parshley, private, Hospital Corps, 110th F. A. Those in the service on this side are: The Rev. B. F. Huske, chaplain, Naval Hospital, Portsmouth, Va.; the Rev. George Boate, civilian chaplain, naval base near Cape May, N. J.; the Rev. G. F. Hill, Y. M. C. A., Camp Wadsworth, S. C., and the Rev. Theodore Partrick, Y. M. C. A., Camp Greene, N. C.

Another clergyman of the Diocese, the Rev. H. S. Osburn, is serving as locum tenens at St. Paul's, Petersburg, during the absence of the rector, who is in war service.

Rt. Rev. T. J. Garland, D. D., Suffragan.

Old Swedes' Memorial.

On the second Sunday in December the congregation and Sunday School of Gloria Dei (Old Swedes') Church, Southwark, Philadelphia, purpose making observance of the fiftieth anniversary of the coming of their late rector and his wife, the Rev. and Mrs. Snyder B. Simes, to take charge of the Parish. On December 12, 1868, Mr. Simes conducted his first service in the Church which he served for forty-seven years of faithful and successful ministry. As bride and groom Mr. and Mrs. Simes came to the rectory of Old Swedes' at the same time that he began his rectorship; and the work of the Church and Sunday School was theirs jointly, until the former was laid to rest in the yard of the old Church in July, 1915. There Mrs. Simes followed him in February of the present year. During the long period of their mutual service they won the affection and allegiance of a multitude of friends, both in the Church and in the community at large; and throughout the mission field, where their personal generosity and the liberal gifts of Gloria Dei Sunday School, under their inspiring leadership, gave many a struggling station—encouragement and support.

As a fitting observance of this anniversary year of memory, it is proposed to place a memorial to Mr. and Mrs. Simes on the mission field, in the form of endowing a bed in the Wushang General Hospital, China, in their name. It is hoped to raise a fund of $1,250 for this purpose to be presented on December 8, the anniversary Sunday. Already the Sunday School has raised about $500 towards this amount, and the congregation in general, and all friends of Mr. and Mrs. Simes throughout the Church at large, are being appealed to for the balance.

A biography of Mr. and Mrs. Simes, in relation to Gloria Dei, is being prepared and will be sent to all those who may apply for it. This and the arrangements for the anniversary services are in charge of the present rector, the Rev. Percy R. Stockman, 916 Swan-on Street, Philadelphia, Pa., to whom contributions may be sent by those wishing to make them.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. C. Whitehead, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Whitehead's illness has been very much protracted, and he is still in the hospital, although on the way to recovery. On October 30 he was waited on by three members of the anniversary committee, and presented with a testimonial from his people and a handsome gift of Liberty Loan Bonds.

Convalescent Hospital.—The Parish House of Calvary Church, Pittsburgh, has been tendered to the military authorities in charge of the army camps at the University of Pittsburgh and Carnegie Technical School, to be used as a convalescent hospital for the men of the S. A. T. C. Every convalescent man sent to this emergency hospital releases a bed in the city hospitals, where space is so urgently needed for the people of the city suffering from the prevailing epidemic. The two large assembly rooms have been fitted up as wards and contain sixty beds. The kitchen, club rooms and gymnasiums are also in use, the culinary department being in charge of a caterer. Contributions of food have been generously supplied by members of the congregation, and there is a large demand for current magazines, games, books and daily newspapers, city, New York, Philadelphia and Chicago, as many of the boys belong to these cities. The ladies' parlor, choir room and vestry room have been reserved, all communication being cut off from the hospital, so there is no danger of infection being caused by the arrangement.

Uniontown.—Three large flags of the finest quality have lately been added to the equipment of St. Peter's Church: one a service flag, and the others the British and French colors, gifts of Mrs. Mary Gilmore, Mr. Samuel Gilmore and Mr. A. Plumer Austin. Under the will of Mrs. Margaret J. McClelland, a communicant of the parish, St. Peter's Church has received a bequest of $500, and one of its missions, Grace, Meadlen, $250. Mrs. McClelland also left $1,000 for Foreign Missions. The memory of Dr. and Mrs. Alonzo P. Bowie, late communicants, is to be kept green by the use of their old home for a purpose with which all their interests and activities showed them to be sympathetic. Their children, Lieutenant Eleazer R. Bowie, Medical Corps, A. E. F., and Miss Elizabeth W. Bowie, a student in Columbia University, have leased the house for a nominal sum to the Congress of Women's Clubs to be used as a social center for young women. Miss Katherine W. Howell, of St. Peter's, has spent the last few months in New York training for this special work of which she is to have charge.

NEW MEXICO.

Rt. Rev. F. B. Howden, D. D., Bishop.

On account of the Spanish influenza, the usual Sunday services have been discontinued for a few Sundays in most places. In some places the Holy Communion has been celebrated, with a limited number in attendance. Especially among Indians the influenza has been disastrous. The Church hospital for Navajo Indians near Farmington has been overwhelmed with work. This one fact shows clearly the great need of such a hospital at that place.

The Rev. D. A. Sanford has removed from Gallup to Albuquerque, as the high altitude at Gallup has proved to be disastrous for Mrs. Sanford's health. Mr. Sanford will now supply services at various vacant places, going out from Albuquerque as a center.

ERIE.

Rt. Rev. Rogers Israel, D. D., Bishop

Influenza Situation in the Diocese.

The Archdeaconry of Meadville, which was to be held in St. Mark's Church, Erie, has been indefinitely postponed because of the epidemic.

The influenza has taken its toll of deaths from every town and city of the Diocese. At St. Mary's, a town of 6,000, every third person has been ill. At Osceola Mills the conditions have been worse.

Oil City reports 2,000 ill, i. e., one out of ten. The rector and vestry of Christ Church at once offered the Parish House as an emergency hospital, and it has been of great use to the city during the epidemic. As many as one hundred patients have been cared for at one time, and there are still forty in the Parish House. Rev. John E. Reilly, the rector, caught the disease while ministering to the people and has been very ill, but has recovered.

New Castle, Sharon, Ridgway, Bradford, Warren and Titusville all report large numbers ill.

In Erie the situation is slowly improving, although the national government, noticing the decreased output of war materials, has taken at hand and forbidden an early lifting of the entire embargo. The board of health thanked the Cathedral Chapter for their offer of the Chapter House for an emergency hospital, but finally decided to take the Elks' building, which was more suitable.

The health officer of Erie appointed the dean, who had started a local canteen service, to take charge for the whole city.

Co-operating with the physicians and the visiting nurses, broth and other nourishment has been taken to every house where whole families are ill or only one well enough to assist the others. All the religious bodies have co-operated in cooking for this canteen service and the emergency hospital. Automobiles have been loaned to carry the nurses and the canteen service from house to house, thus covering the whole city. The St. Agnes' Guild of the Cathedral, under its president, Mrs. James Thaver, has done splendid work.

The Rev. W. R. Agate, M. D., rector of Emporium, has been doing splendid service as a medical man in assisting the doctors at St. Mary's.

In Ridgway the epidemic has lasted over five Sundays. Every Saturday the daily paper contained some words from the clergy of the town. The church bells rang as usual and the people were urged to have family prayers in every home. Archdeacon Radcliffe celebrated the Eucharist each Sunday with special intention, and at 4:30 P. M. had evening prayer.

Sunday, November 10, all church services were permitted, but no Sunday Schools allowed to open.

TEXAS.

Rt. Rev. G. H. Kinsolving, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. C. S. Quin, D. D., Coadjutor.

Consecration of the Rev. Dr. Quin as Bishop-Coadjutor of the Diocese.

The Rev. Clinton S. Quin, D. D., rector of Trinity Church, Houston, was consecrated Bishop-Coadjutor of the Diocese of Texas Thursday, October 31, in Christ Church, Houston, the Rev. Peter Gray Sears, rector. A large number of the clergy of Texas and neighboring dioceses were present, and a congregation which was representative of Houston's best and most influential citizenship. The only thing which marred the service was the absence of the Bishop of the Diocese, who is ill.

The consecrators were the Presiding Bishop, the Bishop of Kentucky, and the Bishop of West Texas. The presenters were the Bishop of North Texas and the Bishop-Coadjutor of Dallas. The preacher was the Bishop of Kentucky. These, with the Bishop of Mexico, united in the laying on of hands. The attending Presbyters were the Rev. Charles Clingman, who succeeds Bishop Quin as rector of Trinity Church, Houston, and the Rev. Thomas Windham, a predecessor of the new Bishop in the same parish.

Bishop Woodcock preached a powerful sermon, dealing with the greatest question of the day, the war, his theme being the vast need of spiritual direction and moral leadership in such a time, the unlimited opportunity for the leader of faith and vision. It is interesting to observe that the Bishop of Kentucky received Bishop Quin as postulant and candidate for orders, ordered him deacon, advanced him to the priesthood, married him, baptized his children, and now was one of the consecrators in his elevation to the episcopate.

After the service, during a lunch served at the Rice Hotel to the bishops and clergy, a message of sympathy was sent to Bishop Kinsolving.

Bishop Quin will continue to reside in Houston. His official duty is the oversight of missions and missionary work in the Diocese.

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

LETTER FROM DR. BOWIE.

We feel that we cannot publish anything in this department this week more interesting than the following letter from the Rev. Dr. W. Russell Bowie, the gifted and beloved former Editor of this page, who is now serving as chaplain in France with Base Hospital Unit No. 45. From there he writes to his congregation a message which is bound to be interesting to the Church at large, which we quote almost in full:

... First, let me just give you the simple outline of the way the war grows upon one's consciousness as he comes nearer to it.

Of course, to begin with, the crossing is different from what it used to be. The instant one passes through the wire barricade stretched along the front of the piers and docks in New York, presenting his card which has on it nothing but a number and gives no hint yet as to the identification of his ship, he knows that he has crossed the threshold into a realm of thought and discipline more strict, more tense, more watchful than anything which is familiar to us at home. Once inside the enclosure of the docks, you cannot go out any more; you cannot send any message out. You have become part of the silent, irrevocable business of this war from that moment on. . . . Then up the jealously guarded gangplank you go to climb aboard your ship—and to find out what ship it is that you have climbed aboard of, afterward. Other ships may be lying in the slips near by, but you do not know whether their sailing is to be with yours or not. After a while it simply comes to pass that you are on your way, dropping down the harbor out to sea. Possibly you will be part of a convoy; and so it chanced we were. To my mind, there is something exceedingly pleasant about a convoy. Solitude may be all very well, but not these days, and on the ocean. The sight of those other sturdy looking hulls and decks looks very much better than an empty horizon when you are considering what you would do if a submarine were on your trail. Toward nightfall, when the dark is closing in and there are no lights on deck and few within, you feel that sense of companionship not less but more. You cannot see the other ships—but, like the little child who objected to its mother going out at night, you say to yourself, "I don't have to see you, but I like to know that you are there."

When the real danger zone is reached, then, of course, the voyage is most interesting of all. As to what things of sea and air conveyed us, as to whether destroyers went with us part way or all the way, or only came out to meet us from the other side, it is not for properly censored persons to say; but it would be a hard-hearted censor who would prevent those same destroyers from getting the word of enthusiasm which is their due. They are not much concerned about their looks. Their paint may be dull and weather-stained and the depth bombs a raw red in the racks above their sterns; their flags have been wet so long with the foam of the churning sea and whipped by so many winds that their colors are faded to an almost indistinguishable smear; but for sheer beauty of movement, for wicked, mettlesome grace, for lithe energy and speed and deadlines, they are as fascinating to watch as leopards would be if one could see them hunt their prey. Back and forth, along the flanks and across the bows of heavier ships, they go—springing forward with a flash of foam at their bows, stopping short and wheeling in smother of water, never resting, never weary in that vigilant patrol; and watching them you lose all concern for possible danger in sheer admiration at these exultant things which hunt for the submarine as hounds hunt for a fox. And when the submarine fails to show up, you catch yourself feeling distinctly disappointed.

If a person were really on a ship that were submarined, he would doubtless have until his dying day the memory of a very horrible experience, but when you go across perfectly safe with nothing except imagination to make you conscious that there is any danger at all, it is hard still to grasp the war as a deadly fact instead of simply a rather excitingly staged spectacle. And when at length the ship comes into sight of land, and there as you draw in closer are headlands and hills and placid green meadows lying all still and sweet in the opalescent morning, and the tiny specks in the fields stand out under the glass as cattle feeding leisurely, and the gray thing on the hillside is seen to be a cottage half hidden in its garden with the smoke curling from its chimney, there comes a curious sense of incredulity that there can be such a thing as war in this Europe whose shores seem at first glimpse so undisturbed.

But when you actually land in England, the realities draw closer. From the windows of the railroad trains there are multiplying signs of war material and war movement; the posters in the railroad stations all have to do with the war; notices in the trains tell you what the regulations are as to lights after dark in case raiders should come across the coast. In London, and I suppose in other cities, the streets at night are caverns of shadow, dimly punctuated by the veiled street lamps here and there. But in the daytime the city goes tranquilly and busily upon its way, and one searches with little success for any evidence that the German bombing has done discoverable damage. The signs of war are not of hurts received, but of the power that is going out—though my memory corrects me a little as I write that and recalls one vivid impression in which these two sides of the reality were blended. In a railroad station I watched a brigade of Welsh troops, heavily laden with the full field equipment, entraining for the front. It was made up of some men who were evidently old hand; in this war, but mostly of very young lads who were going out for the first time. They were singing and cheering as they went along the platform—but the officer in command of them was as quiet as they were exuberant. He was a British captain, evidently from the training camp in which these boys were fitted; tall and handsome and young, with very still, grave eyes; his right arm was gone, and the empty sleeve was folded into his pocket. His service at the front was finished, but at home he was still "carrying on."

The streets of London are full, of course, of soldiers—men home on leave, men assigned in various capacities to the home service, and men who are on their way to France—British troops, a few French in their horizon blue, Belgians with the tassels on the peak of their service caps, Canadians and the magnificent lean stalwarts from Australia with their broad-brimmed hats cocked up on the side and caught with their ornament of the rising sun, and New Zealanders, men of the same sturdy breed, much like the Australians in their uniform, but distinguishable by the red band wound round their hats.

Of the things I saw in London having to do with the war which impressed me most there were two. One was the stand of colors in Westminster Abbey. At the corner where the north transept joins the chancel is the monument to Wolfe, the conqueror of Quebec; and all round the monument and upon it and over it the Canadian regiments as one by one they have come through London on their way to the front have deposited their regimental flags. There the standards lift themselves, a glorious flame of color against the gray stone of the ancient Abbey walls, until the day when the men who put them there shall come again to carry them home. And when they come, what mighty memories of Arras and Ypres, of Cambrai and St. Quentin, shall come with them to clothe those flags with a new splendor brighter than their embroidered gold!

The other thing I saw which I can never forget is the memorial in Hyde Park for the men whose bodies lie in the fields across the channel. It is simply a terraced arrangement of wooden steps or shelves; climbing from a base shaped as a cross to a point where the allied flags are flying. All the shelves are filled with flowers, some of them growing in pots, some of them bunches of cut blossoms in a vase. On each one is tied a card, written with the name of the soldier in whose memory it is put there and with whatever else the father or mother or wife who brought it has chosen to express. There is a simplicity and intimacy about many of them which it stabs your heart to read—just such messages as might be left at some appointed meeting place for some one who would come back in a little while and recognize as meant for him the love that is written there in the handwriting he will know. And it is a very wonderful thing to consider the sacred kinship of sorrow which this place, where so many gather, must create. Grief cannot be selfish when it stands there. Over in Flanders, in France, in Mesopotamia, at Gallipoli, often perhaps in nameless and undiscoverable graves, the bodies lie of those for whom the flowers are brought; but of their spirits something is wrought which is not buried and is not far away, but has entered into the soul of England in constancy, in courage and in the unselfish loyalty of a great people bound together by the power of its dead.

It is in France, of course, that one knows he will have the war made most real to him, but in this, Paris is not France. It is true that there is something in the atmosphere of the city which is different from other days; it is quieter and graver. Also there seem fewer people there. If you look for them, you can find places where the bombs from German airplanes and shells from the long-range guns have left their scars—for example, the Church of St. Gervais, where so many were killed on Good Friday morning in the black days of the first great German Collect for Sixth Sunday After Epiphany.

O God, whose blessed Son was manifested that He might destroy the works of the devil, and make us the sons of God, and heirs of eternal life; Grant us, we beseech Thee, that, having this hope, we may purify ourselves, even as He is pure; that, when He shall appear again with power and great glory, we may be made like unto Him in His eternal and glorious Kingdom; where with Thee, O Father, and Thee, O Holy Ghost, He liveth and reigneth ever, one God, world without end. Amen.

(Collect for either third, fourth or fifth Sunday after Epiphany may be used.)

To a Son of Despair.

Sad spirit, tortured by the round
Of days of haunted darkness, nights
Of dread,
Dream-harassed by the spectres of
despair,
The last hope merging into empty air,
Compassed with pallid fears whose feet are bound
Downward to regions of the dead.

No draught Lethean can I bring,
Nor from thy shoulders lift the awful cross,
Nor free thy temples from the crown of thorns;
But this my head has that grim circlet worn,
Beneath that cross has life crept sorrowing,
And each day mourned with sense
of loss.

What, then, thy comfort? This, my friend:
Thine is no lonely track; no unknown road
Draws thy bewildered soul to death's retreat.
Lean on this faith God sent, prediction
sweet,
That He who made shall bear thee to
the end,
And Love immortal lift the load.

Only endure; though prayer be dumb,
And faith lie well-nigh strangled by
despair;
Love companies thy footsteps: through the dark
Shall pierce the shafted sunlight, and Hope's lack,
Stretching at last his pinions faint and numb,
Give voice to thy reviving prayer.

Charles Simeon tells in a letter quoted in his biography of receiving nineteen persons into his church in Cambridge after a long absence on a trip to Scotland, and he rejoices that "not one of them owed his first impression to my ministry. All were awakened either gradually and insensibly by God Himself, or by conversation with one or other of my people."

heritage of love, we must put ourselves in sympathetic and intelligent touch with the Lord Jesus Christ as manifesting God's love toward all mankind. Then the divine love that flows into us will also flow through us and reach out to others. Much practical teaching on love will be found in the week day lesson, especially St. James' royal law of love and our Lord's "I have given you an example." The first lesson, though obscure in places, is still full of warning and of inspiration and of comfort: "Rejoice ye with Jerusalem (the Church) and be glad with her, all ye that love her"; there shall also be "a new heaven and a new earth."

Faith is always, in an important sense, the antithesis of Sight. It always indicates an element of the unseen and unknown somewhere in the matter. No doubt Faith and Sight stand in a close connection with each other, and often seem to run over, so to speak, into one another. Faith, in its true and sane sense, cannot live without some foothold of what we may call sight. But faith in itself is precisely that which ventures out beyond sight, and moves and works in the dark, in the unseen, in the unknown.—Bishop Moule.

Twenty-fifth Sunday After Trinity:
In taking leave of the Maccabean story, it seems worth while to call attention to one important lesson applicable to our own times. If guidance and inspiration are to be found in those early struggles for liberty, there is warning also in the perils of peace that followed the glorious victories. Patriotism is a much more difficult duty, both morally and intellectually, in time of peace than in war; and the sun that rose with the Maccabees afterwards set. Independence and religious fervor alike were lost in selfishness and mutual jealousies; and this was brought about the subjugation of God's people by Rome, ending with the destruction of Jerusalem in A. D. 70. We must see to it that our military victory over Germany and her co-conspirators is followed by a still greater victory over ourselves.

Having completed the Maccabean history on Saturday before the twenty-fifth Sunday after Trinity, the remaining days of the ecclesiastical year are filled in with topical selections drawn from the literature of the inter-biblical period, from the closing chapters of Isaiah, and from other prophets. And as those selections expressed the hope of Israel for the coming of the Messiah, or contain the reflection of her sages upon the great problem of human destiny, they fittingly lead up to the close of the year and the Advent season to follow. The first morning lesson, though drawn from the Apocrypha, professes, on the face of it, to be a divinely authorized answer to the author's desire to pierce, or have lifted, the veil of the future. It is, at any rate, a vigorous expression of faith in the final victory of truth and right, and does not fall below the moral and spiritual value of the alternate lesson; though verses 12 and 13 of latter contain at least the germ of faith in immortality, as a moral necessity. The second lesson carries this faith in right and in the essential well being of them that fear the Lord up into the clear sunlight of assured belief in the future life.

In the evening, the course reading of the first Epistle of St. John is continued by chapter four: a treatise on love: "God is love and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God and God in him." It is sometimes said that "there is no theology in love," with the idea of disparaging creeds. Certainly no one ever stressed love toward our fellow-men more urgently than does St. John; but both the nature and meaning of love and the motives for loving would be seriously impaired if we had to leave out of account the fact that the nature of God as love is revealed to us in the historic person, Jesus Christ. All true love, in fact, is divine in its origin and that we love at all is due, says the Apostle, to the fact that God loves us. But if we would enter into the full

On Her First Sons Fallen in the Great War.

Now you are one with us, you know our tears,
Those tears of pride and pain so fast to flow;
You, too, have sipped the first strange draught of woe;
You, too, have tasted of our hopes and fears;
Sister across the ocean, stretch your hand,
Must we not love you more, who learn to understand?

There are new graves in France, new quiet graves;
The first-fruit of a nation great and free,
Full of rich fire of life and chivalry,
Lie quietly, though tide of battle laves Above them; sister, sister, see our tears;
We mourn with you, who know so well the bitter years.

Now do you watch with us; our pain of loss
Lit by a wondrous glow of love and power
That flowers, star-like at the darkest hour,
Lighting the eternal message of the cross;
They gain their life who lose it, earth shall rise
Anew and cleansed, because of life's great sacrifice.

And that great band of souls your dead have met,
Who saved the world in centuries past and gone,
Shall find new comrades in their valiant throng—
O Nation's heart that cannot e'er forget,
Is not death but the door to life begun
To those who hear far Heaven cry, "Well done!"

What Think You of Heaven?

Rhoda E. Baker.

"Oh, dear!" sighed Mrs. Gray, as she vainly tried to see something outside her window which had attracted her attention. "I wonder if we ever shall get that telescope?"

"I do not know," replied her companion, Mrs. Ross.

The two friends were both very near-sighted, and they had often talked about a telescope, and how pleasant it would be to be able to have one.

"Someone has said," Mrs. Ross continued thoughtfully, "that if you want a thing long enough and hard enough, it is sure to come some time. I often wonder what Heaven will be to those who, like us, have never had good eyes! Will it not seem wonderful to be able to see anything? Surely those who have always had good sight could not appreciate it as we would."

"That reminds me," said Mrs. Gray. "Not long ago, in our Sunday-school class, the leader remarked that she believed there would be degrees in Heaven, but a chorus of 'No, no,' interrupted her. When quiet was restored, she gave this illustration: Two friends went to hear a noted musician. One became so absorbed that she was oblivious of all else. The other barely heard a sound; she was so restless during the entire concert she could scarcely wait till the program was over. Both liked music, but one of them was incapable of enjoying that kind of music. This time all the class agreed with Mrs. Bell."

"I do, too," Mrs. Ross said. "For instance, take one who has always been sick in this world. Heaven might not mean so much in that way to one who had always had good health. I know you understand what I mean."

"I believe," she continued after a moment's pause, "that all the purest and best of earth's pleasures will be there: music, books—"

"Oh, I do not believe there will be books," Mrs. Gray interrupted.

"No books in Heaven?"

"No," Mrs. Gray replied. "I do not think there will be any need for books."

"I do," returned Mrs. Ross thoughtfully. "There are many persons to whom books mean everything—almost as much as life itself. And to such, as well as many others, it seems to me that even Heaven would not be Heaven were there no books."

"And pictures?" asked little Harold Gray, who had come in, and had been an interested listener. Harold loved pictures.

"Yes, dear, and pictures, too, I think," Mrs. Ross answered. "I do not see why there should not be," as Mrs. Gray looked up somewhat reproachfully. "As I have already said, I believe the purest and best of all earth's pleasures will be there—trees, birds, books, flowers, music—everything that will add to the happiness of immortal spirits. There is perfect health for body, mind and soul. St. John tells us of the river of life, in whose crystal depths there is no harm, but only cool refreshment for all; and the Tree of Life with its variety of fruits and healing leaves. Beside these things, we are told that 'eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him.'"

"But," continued Mrs. Ross reverently, "whatever there is, or is not, of the things we hope for, or expect, in Heaven, of one thing we may be quite sure, 'We shall be satisfied when we awake in His likeness.'"

FAMILIAR HYMNS.

XXII. From Greenland's Icy Mountains.

Bishop Heber, whose life we have already briefly sketched in this series, is the author of the great missionary hymn named above. He wrote also that other treasure of the Church, Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty, for which we give him our sincere gratitude; but it is probable that he is better known by this missionary hymn. Indeed, one can seldom name his name without remembering, subconsciously or otherwise, From Greenland's Icy Mountains. It is a hymn that belongs to every creed and every country. Most of all it belongs to those whose hearts beat strongly for the extension of the Gospel into heathen lands—as did the heart of the great missionary Bishop, the creator of the poem.

The hymn is exactly a hundred years old. The story of how it came to be written has often been told, but it will bear repetition.

Heber was in the ministry at the time of its composition, but he had not yet been raised to the bishopric. One Saturday afternoon in the year 1818, while he was visiting at the home of his wife's father, the Rev. Dr. Shipley, of Wrexham, a dozen friends were gathered with him in the little rectory parlor. It chanced—if we may, for the sake of convenience, use the expression—that Dr. Shipley planned to preach the next day on the subject of missions. He turned suddenly to his son-in-law with the request for a suitable hymn for the occasion.

"This," comments a biographer of Heber's, "was scant notice to give a man for the achievement of the distinguishing work of his life . . . and in the few moments that followed Reginald Heber builded better than he knew."

Withdrawing to a corner of the room he wrote the first three verses of his hymn. Then he read them to his companion. Dr. Shipley was eminently satisfied with the result of his proposition, but Heber hesitated; his poet's ear missed something. Retiring again to the corner he remained busy for awhile; finally he returned to the company with what a critic has called the glorious bugle blast of the fourth verse.

The poem was printed that evening and sung by the Wrexham congregation the following morning. Thus was given to us the great hymn that for more than a hundred years has fired the souls of men with zeal for the spread of God's Kingdom on earth.

From Greenland's icy mountains,
From India's coral strand,
Where Afric's sunny fountains
Roll down their golden sand;
From many an ancient river,
From many a palmy plain,
They call us to deliver
Their land from error's chain.

What though the spicy breezes
Blow soft o'er Ceylon's isle;
Though every prospect pleases,
And only man is vile;
In vain with lavish kindness
The gifts of God are strown;
The heathen in his blindness
Bows down to wood and stone.

Can we, whose souls are lighted
With wisdom from on high;
Can we to men benighted
The lamp of life deny?
Salvation, O salvation!
The joyful sound proclaim,
Till each remotest nation
Has learnt Messiah's Name.

Waft, waft, ye winds, His story,
And you, ye waters, roll,
Till, like a sea of glory,
It spreads from pole to pole;
Till o'er our ransomed nature,
The Lamb for sinners slain,
Redeemer, King, Creator,
In bliss returns to reign.

Things to Which We Can Cling.

In these dark and troublesome times there are trembling souls who are wailing forth the cry that they have lost their faith. In a world torn with terrible strife and filled with awful confusion, they have become hopelessly bewildered. Their grip on spiritual realities has been loosened, and amid the smoke of conflict their vision has been obscured.

There are others who still retain their religious convictions but who are sadly perplexed. At times they are oppressed with an agony of doubt. They find themselves confronted with heart-breaking problems, with facts that apparently contradict their most cherished beliefs.

There are some things of which we may be certain and to which we can cling with serene confidence in this day of stress and storm.

The fact of God. Sons and daughters of the highest are we, with the strength of everlasting arms about us, held close to the divine heart. He thinks upon us tenderly. He knows our needs, and all the hostile powers of worlds seen and unseen cannot separate us from His love. To our Father we may submit ourselves in loving trustfulness, harmonizing our will with His will, assured that His purposes for us are the expression of a wisdom that never fails.

The saving power of Christ. This is simply a matter of human experience, a fact repeated over and over again in millions of lives. Nothing has been demonstrated more clearly and effectively than just this: that the Son of God redeems from the guilt and power of sin.

"From shades of night to planes of light,
O praise His name, He lifted me."

Eternity will be filled with the praises of redeemed souls, redeemed fully and gloriously through the power of Christ. All the fearful tragedies that are darkening the world to-day cannot hide the sublime fact that Jesus saves.

The ultimate triumph of right. We are living in a time when good men are occasionally tempted to yield to the gruesome fear that in the world-conflict now raging the forces of evil will be victorious; that paganism and conscienceless force and unspeakable brutality shall win. The poet as he surveyed human history exclaimed that right seemed forever on the scaffold and wrong forever on the throne. Let our hearts be filled to overflowing with the confidence that right is invincible, that goodness and truth and justice shall be crowned with victory. God has not forsaken His world. God is eternally on the side of right. We are in the midst of great tribulation but we are moving toward the light.

The life immortal. With millions of the choice sons of men slain upon the battlefields is it any wonder that the question of what lies beyond the grave is awfully vivid and insistent just now? What a mighty hunger for immortality there is in these curious, questioning hearts of ours! An unquenchable instinct for endless life possesses us. Who but God Himself has planted it in our souls? And the sure word of Jesus is, "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he die yet shall he live." Upon that promise as a foundation we may build the structure of our faith in the confidence that it will stand firm and sure amid the fiercest storms that blow.

"There is no death
To those whose hearts are set
On higher things than this life doth afford;
How shall their passing leave one least regret,
Who go to join their Lord."

These are some of the great fundamental truths of revelation and experience. To meditate upon them will bring precious comfort and steady assurance. These are things to which we can cling safely and victoriously in tremendous days when God is "sifting out the hearts of men before His judgment seat."—United Presbyterian.

Our Sufficiency.

Like babes that fear to try their feet,

For some support we stretch and cry;

We catch at every friend we meet—

But God is our sufficiency.

We weep that friends should prove so weak,

When they are just as strong as we;

For other human props we seek—

When God is our sufficiency.

We lean on plans and hopes as do

The blind on staffs—we cannot see;

They break—our hands are punctured through;

For God is our sufficiency.

When shall we mortals learn to lean

On staffs that Heaven will supply?

Then shall we walk through pastures green,

And God will be sufficiency.

—Lincoln Phifer.

The Gift Table.

"Well, I do hope they'll like it after we select it," Ellen said to herself, as she took the elevator to the furniture department. "I had no idea it was so much trouble to buy a table."

The table in question was to be the gift of Ellen's class, at graduation, for the reception room which the school was furnishing. Ellen had thought it a simple matter to be chairman of the committee, but now, as she sat down wearily to wait for the girl who was to help her make the final decision, she counted over the difficulties.

"First you have to talk with the principal, then you have to visit every furniture store in town and send for catalogues. Then you report to the class, and they don't like what you have decided on. Then you look again, and take half a dozen of the girls down to see for themselves, and waste hours waiting for them after school. Then you find the thing you really want costs too much—furniture has gone up so terribly—and you have to raise more money, which is an awful bother because all the girls won't pay when they promise. Well, there's one thing sure, I shall enjoy that table if no one else does. I feel as if it were the most wonderful piece of furniture that ever was made."

She looked affectionately over at the shining top of the piece that had been practically selected. "Oh, I wish Alice would hurry and come," she said to herself. "She'll like the table, too, for she has spent almost as much time on it as I have."

Her eyes wandered on past the table to an enclosed space, about the size of an ordinary room, which had been arranged for the temporary exhibition of a model of a warship. "Oh, I forgot they were exhibiting that to-day," thought Ellen. "It must be almost time for them to begin."

Even as the thought flashed through her mind, a crowd of people began to push their way to the booth. Mothers leading their children, men and boys and girls, all were eager to see the model and hear the lecturer explain it. The space was soon filled and the children on the edges had no chance at all to see.

"Here, stand up on this, dear," Ellen heard a mother's voice behind her. She turned toward the child with a smile which froze to horror. "This" was her precious table! A cherub-like small boy was grinding a solid little pair of heels into its shining surface, unnoticed by his good natured mother.

Ellen's hands moved to lift him from the table, but she caught herself just in time with the realization that her authority might not be recognized, particularly as she had not yet bought the table. She hurried to the nearest salesman. "Can't you make her take her little boy off of that table?" she asked all in one breath. "I want to buy it! He's spoiling it."

"I'll see what I can do, miss," answered the salesman with a resigned smile, "but it's not much use. If you notice, they are standing on everything in sight—that couch is ruined already. They have done it every day this week, and the management doesn't want us to interfere. I am sure they wouldn't act like that in their own homes."

Ellen watched anxiously as he moved away and by a carefully worded request persuaded the woman to transfer her boy to a high stool, while he moved the table to a place of safety.

"I'm waiting for a friend to look at the table," Ellen explained, "and if it suits her as well as it suits me, we are going to buy it for our class to give to the school. Can you fix it up, do you suppose, where he marred it?"

The salesman's smile this time was much more amused than resigned. "Yes, ma'am," he answered, "I can fix it up, but I guarantee it won't last if you put it in a school. Folks act the same way about a school as they do about stores. Even young ladies from good families—they don't think, you know."

The glory of her table became suddenly dimmed for Ellen as she thought of it marred by careless usage. Pictures floated before her eyes—girls sitting with their heels on the arms of the settee in the study room; girls pushing chairs hastily against the wainscoting; girls leaving papers on the cloakroom floor; girls throwing soiled towels carelessly on the washstand, instead of into the basket put there to hold them. Sometimes she saw herself among the number.

With a sigh she came out of her reverie. "Well," she said, "I suppose I can't help it if they spoil the table I've taken so much trouble to select, but I can be sure of one thing; I shall always remember after this that some one has had to work hard to have things look the way they ought to look, and some one has to lose if we ruin them; and wherever I am I'll try to act as if it were my own home."—Selected.

"We are living in a day when the Providence of God has opened a common door to loftiest and to lowest, to richest and to poorest. To some it may be a door of death, to some of poverty, to some of hunger and of separation—but to all of honor and of opportunity, for it is the door of escape from selfishness through service. To the brave who fall, to the strong who toil, to the great who think, to the humble who can only dream and pray—to all of these the door is opened. But upon those whose dollars are dearer than their lives, upon those whose ambitions make them a Judas to the nation and upon those whose fears are their governors—upon these the door is shut. And they have no part with us."—Richmond News-Leader.

The White Guinea's Nest.

"Henry, if you find that guinea's nest, you may have as many eggs for breakfast as you can eat," said Glenn's grandmother as the men were starting off to work one morning.

"I'd be glad to, Mrs. Tolliver, and I'd enjoy the eggs; but we're mighty busy just now, and you know it takes long patience and watching to find a guinea's nest," replied Henry, grandfather's helper on his big Western farm.

"Yes, I know that you haven't time, Henry; but I do wish some one would find the nest. I know there must be lots of eggs in it, she has been laying so long. I think it must be in the wheat field somewhere. The only way I know to find it is to watch her go to the nest, but I never can find the time," replied grandmother.

Glenn looked thoughtful after his grandmother had gone into the house. Why couldn't he find the guinea's nest and surprise grandmother? She had said you must watch the guinea, and he could do that as well as any one.

The white guinea was in plain sight at that time, picking about the yard; so Glenn sat down on the steps to watch her.

The winter before grandmother had had a flock of seven guinea fowls, but one thing and another had happened to them until now only one hen remained.

It seemed to Glenn that he had been sitting there for hours, when at last the guinea hen started for the wheat field, across the road, in a somewhat furtive manner. Glenn followed her cautiously; for if the guinea suspected that she was being followed, she would not go to the nest.

As he crossed the road, Glenn idly picked up a long stick lying there, and afterwards he was glad that he did. He had not been visiting at the farm very long and was not very well acquainted with it, but "he knew one thing—grandfather had the tallest wheat he ever saw; why, it reached away above his head. And how thick it was! A great, waving, yellow mass when the wind blew!

The white guinea moved slowly, stopping to pick here and there, but still Glenn had hard work to keep her in sight in the thick wheat without coming too close. On and on they went. It was now about ten o'clock; but as it was a cloudy day, the sun was not very hot.

Ah! the guinea was stopping at last under a little clump of bushes. And Glenn caught a glimpse of a nest full of speckled eggs.

The white guinea slipped slyly on the nest; and Glenn, suddenly remembering the stick in his hand, decided to set it up to mark the nest, so he could find it again and return to the house. As he stole softly away, he thought he was going back exactly the way he had come; but after he had walked until he was all tired out, he knew he must have taken the wrong direction. But even in that case, he thought, he ought to by this time have reached the other edge of the field. Glenn did not know that this field contained over fifty acres and that it would take a small boy a good while to walk across it, even if he went in a straight line. So he turned about and walked on.

About this time it began to rain; and as Glenn tried to hurry, the thick wet wheat tripped him in a most irritating manner. It was all he could do to keep back the tears. He felt as if he might just as well lie down in this awful wheat and not try to go on any longer. But then no one knew where he was, and he might have to stay here all night—he had no idea what time it was—so he stumbled on again bravely. If only he could just see where he was going.

Suddenly he heard a shout. "Glenn, Glenn! Where are you?" someone called.

"Whoop-ee! Here!" he screamed, feeling as if he wanted to jump for joy.

"Where?" asked the voice.

"Here, here!" shouted Glenn as loud as he could. And pretty soon there was a sound of something coming through the wheat, and there was Henry on the black horse.

The men had come in to dinner and found Glenn missing; so grandfather and Henry had both started out to hunt for him, Henry selecting the wheat field as the most likely place to begin the search. "As soon as I saw that stick standing up over yonder, I felt sure you were in here," said Henry. "What did you set it up for?"

"Why, that is to mark the white guinea's nest. I found it, you know," said Glenn, feeling very contented now upon the black horse in front of Henry.

"Well, I'll declare!" exclaimed Henry. "It was worth getting lost to find that, wasn't it?"

And Glenn said yes; he guessed it was.

Henry and Glenn visited the nest later and found thirty-four eggs, of which grandmother gave Glenn as many as he wanted. But you may be sure he never tried to walk through the wheat field alone again.—Catherine Masters, in Epworth Herald.

As the Crow Flies.

Johnny Wheelan looked at the little side gate hanging on its hinge and wished very hard that he hadn't tried to swing on it. Father had told him not to, and Johnny had meant to swing but a minute; but he had taken only one or two rides when, ker-plunk! down came the gate, dragging its top hinge right out of the post.

Father would be sure to ask him how it happened. "Look here," Johnny said to himself, "that hinge must have been just barely holding on or it wouldn't have pulled out so quick. I'm not that heavy!" and having persuaded himself that this comfortable excuse was true, Johnny went around to the front porch, where his father was reading the evening paper. "What are those black birds, father?" Johnny asked presently, as a long-winged line of birds crossed the yard above the treetops.

"Crows," answered father. "Don't you know a crow when you see him, John?"

"I know 'em when they're close," said John. "Where are they going, father?"

"Wherever it is, they are taking the shortest cut to it," answered Mr. Wheelan. "They always do. I never forget it, because when I was a little boy like you my father told me I could never be a real man unless my speech was 'as the crow flies'—right straight to the truth, no cutting off corners and going around hard places. We never could fool God, my father used to say; and the only speech that pleased Him was 'as the crow flies.'"

"Father," said Johnny quite suddenly, "I was swinging on the side gate just now, and it broke down."

"That is told 'as the crow flies,'" said father.—Jewels.

Lessons From Football: A Children's Sermon.

This is the season for football, when our papers tell so much about thrilling games that have been played. I watched a game played a few weeks ago, and as I watched the opposing boys struggle over the ball I learned several lessons which seem to me to be important enough for us all to learn and practice in our every day life.

First, I noticed that every boy on the teams kept close watch of the whole game. Every movement was carefully noticed lest they be taken by surprise and thereby be defeated. One little move unseen might easily have permitted the other team to win. And this often happens in real life. Many people fail in their plans just because they did not keep their eyes opened to everything around them. They went to sleep on their job, and when they woke up another had their job.

In the second place, I noticed that the boys threw their whole powers into the game. They seemed to love it. They played as if they had rather play football than to eat a good dinner. Each team made some thrilling plays which they could not have played if they had not loved it. What a lesson this is! No one can do good work and succeed until he falls in love with his work. There was once a boy who could not do his arithmetic problems. He was always at the foot of his class because of his poor work. He said he hated arithmetic anyway. But his teacher finally got him to see through the work. He fell in love with it. He then would rather work arithmetic problems than do anything else. The harder the problems the better he liked it. He left the foot of the class and went to the head.

Next, I noticed that each boy did his own part. No one waited around for someone to do his work. Each seemed to think that the whole game depended upon him. And, indeed, it did. If either boy had failed at a critical moment, the game might have been lost right there. Each one of us has a work to do, and if we do not do it, we will cause much trouble. The boy or girl who does not do his or her part in life becomes a dead weight about the necks of those who are willing to work. Each one of us must do our full share and help humanity win her battles.

But what appealed to me most of all was the unselfishness of the boys. While each one did his individual part and played as if he was the whole team, yet he did it for the sake of his team. One fought desperately that another might carry the ball over the goal line. In this game one of the boys got hurt and was taken out of the game. He received his injury while trying to protect one of his teammates. Without this unselfishness the team would be hopeless. So it is through all our days. Unselfishness is what is needed more than anything else. Each of us must depend upon every other one of us else none of us can ever win the victories for God and humanity.—From "The Advance."

They're, oh, so nice and good!
I love them very much, too,
As anybody would.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE COMMUNITY.

drive. But from the aspect of Paris at large you would never know that such things had been. You walk, for example, in the Garden of the Tuilleries, with great beds of autumn flowers gorgeous in the sunlight and the water tinkling in the fountains, and look out across the Place de Concorde along that serene vista of the Champs Elysees climbing up between its chestnut trees to the Arc de Triomphe in its magnificent, blue distance; and war seems hardly a thing to be believed.

Then you take a train and go out of Paris in the direction of the front. Very soon the roads begin to catch your attention with their vivid and changeful panoramas. Here, with the white dust swirling behind it, a military automobile flashes by. Round the curve and over the hill goes a seemingly endless procession of great motor trucks. On a siding is a troop train, its box-cars labeled with the familiar alternative, "Hommes, 40; Chevaux, 8," and very often with cheerful impartiality the horses and men are not only put in the same sort of cars, but in the same cars, until they look like animated Noah's arks. As far as appearances go, the passengers get on very peaceably together.

If you are going through the region where these would naturally be, you are not long without seeing where the dead have been buried after the fighting of these four years. Sometimes there are cemeteries, with rank after rank of crosses, on each one a little rosette of tri-color; more often the graves are one by one, or two and three in a group, fenced round by a little railing in the midst of a field of grain or a meadow, just where men fell and afterward were found.

Before I came here to our own Base Hospital 45, I happened to be sent for a very little while to an evacuation hospital in another part of France. Because it was in another part of the line and because I am not there now, it can do no harm to speak of the locality by name. It was near Verdun. Nothing in France has been more thrilling to me than to see that name on the signboards at the cross roads, and to know that along those same ways went the streams of men and munitions going up, and the ambulance trains of wounded coming down, in those days when that one fortress seemed to incarnate for the time the whole beleaguered soul of France. Many of the villages through that country have been almost swept from the face of the earth. In the broken church of one of them the Germans shut up all the inhabitants for two days, without troubling to give them anything to eat, so that they might not have any tales to tell of the German forces which were passing through the place. In another village there is nothing left of the church except a few feet of walls above the foundations, and the base of the shattered tower. Three great bells which hung in it once are lying among the ruins; and beside a cross, which must have fallen from the top of the spire, some one has laid the fragments of the statuary which once stood somewhere along the walls. These are the only recognizable things among the crumbled desolation.

But worse to see, of course, than shattered buildings are the shattered bodies of men. For a while in this not-to-be-named place where we are, we watched every evening as the dusk grew near and the roads would be protected by the darkness from the airplane reconnaissance, the vast movement of artillery toward the front. Then one night we woke to hear the terrific distant thunder of the barrage and to watch the red lightnings of the guns flicker in the sky. Then that next day the ambulances began to come. Many of them brought men who were not seriously hurt, men mud-stained and hungry and exhausted and hurt in some partial way, but with their boyish exultancy flashing out as they huddled over the stove in the receiving room and told each other what experiences their particular companies had had at the points where they went over the top. The next day and the next the ambulances still came; and now they brought men incredibly weary with the long exposure of trench and dugout, and the more gravely wounded who had been sifted back through the field hospitals to us. So for a while the hospital became such a place of pain as only this war which it is the curse of Germany that she has romanticised about and which civilization is fighting now to have done with forever—can create.

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM.

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To cure Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer with rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, gall stones, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred, on the average, report no benefit.

But greater than all the suffering, shining through it and glorifying in it, is the courage of these boys who have given their bodies to torture, and still are undismayed. In one of the hospitals in Paris before I came here I saw a lad in a bed which had a bit of red worsted tied to it. I asked him what that meant, and he said it meant that he was to be sent home. He said that both his feet were gone—and then his eyes lighted and he flashed out: "If they just would fix me on another pair, I'd go over the top again tomorrow." And a young lieutenant with whom I talked here after he had come in wounded told me that as he thought over what this war was bringing to men he knew that at least it would be a good thing for a man to learn that he could go deliberately into a situation which very possibly meant death, and, as he expressed it, stick to it without being more than reasonably afraid.

And now at the end let me make this grow into likeness to a sermon in this if in no more—that it shall bring a question and a challenge to your spirits. What sort of a Church do you think the men who have fought this war will be concerned with when they come home? They have learned to be in such earnest about a great loyalty that they are willing to give their lives for it. They have themselves been judged, and they have judged others, in the light of a pitiless sincerity. It has not been a question of what they said that counted; it has been a question of what they showed the stuff to do when the big moment of reality came. They have despised the slacker and the coward. They have seen the bigness of men who have risked their own lives to save a wounded comrade. They have been part of a fellowship which has come very close to learning what Jesus meant when He said: "He that would be the greatest among you—let him be the servant of all."

Do you think that men who have lived after this fashion will be appealed to by a Church that should have in it no glow of moral and spiritual heroism? Do you think they would be much attracted by Christians who sing "The son of God goes forth to war, a kingly crown to gain," but whose personal combativeness may be confined to making sure that they get first into their own pew? Do you think these men will believe much in the sincerity of any Church whose members cannot or will not rise to the splendor of whole-hearted dedication to the point of sacrifice—sacrifice of time, sacrifice of self-indulgence, sacrifice of the luxuries which absorb the money that ought to go to nobler things? When men have given up everything to follow the flag of the country, will they think that the flag of the Church means anything worth while if Christians must keep everything and still pretend to follow that?

God be thanked that these questions are upon us? Through them the Church can be inspired to a new splendor of devotion. She can learn, as she ought to learn, to be more militant against unrighteousness, more truly a force to be reckoned with and feared by all that is evil in the community where God has planted her. She can learn—or, rather, let us put it, we can learn, that there cannot be any ornamental members in the army of God; we are either soldiers ready to dare, to work and to obey, or else we are slackers and deserters. Above all we must learn that the Church of Christ means not a place of privilege for the few, but the great fellowship of democratic service that belongs to all who want to live courageous, helpful lives. With such a vision in her eyes, the Church will win to herself the men who through this war have known courage and unselfishness and are ready to give their loyalty to that which most can call these forth.

The average man has moral intuitions which, if they are not infallible, are usually dependable. If death ends all, if the verdicts of earthly courts are final, if there is no Highest Court in the world to come by which the unrighteous judgments of earthly courts shall be reviewed and reversed, then the universe is not moral, eternal justice fails.

See how often good men suffer and how often evil men flourish; how often men whose hands have taken bribes and whose lips have spoken lies are courted, flattered, sumptuously fed; how often he who keeps his conscience clean is left to fight the battle from the under side.

Dives in purple and fine linen, Lazarus in rags. It is the old, old way, the world's way, but not God's way. It is not right. It requires another world to make it right.

Not that the good man wants revenge, nor that he desires to see the evil man suffer. Let the wicked be happy if he can be, for his time is short. By all the martyr-fires and prison cells and dungeon chains of faithful witnesses to truth, eternal justice promises a world to come. The question of immortality resolves itself, at least in one phase, into this: Is the universe moral? We think it is. "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?"

HENRY MAURY VAUGHN.

The vestry of St. John's, Chester, Va., meeting for the first time after the sad event, desire to put on record some expression of their sorrow and sense of loss in the death of their late associate, HENRY MAURY VAUGHN. For a number of years he was a member of this vestry and all the time he was keenly alive to all that concerned the welfare of the Church and unflinchingly active in promoting its interests.

Before coming to us he had been an earnest worker in Grace Church, Richmond, and his work here was but the continuation of that life of earnest zeal so manifested there.

Ever ready to serve the Church in any capacity where duty called, he was Rector of the vestry, Delegate to the Diocesan Councils and Superintendent of the Sunday school. Indeed, it may with truth be said to him and to the members of his family the Sunday school owed its existence.

Not alone in the Church was he exemplary. In his relations with his fellowmen, he was honest, open and just. In his family he was the devoted husband, the true and loving father in whom the children confided and in whose companionship they delighted.

Our loss is great! May God comfort the bereaved, and we are all bereaved.

INGTON LEWIS, late Register of the vestry, the following testimonial was ordered to be placed on the minutes:

When we speak of one as coming from a line of ancestors who were true and noble Christian people, we are testifying, in a large degree, to the character of the one of whom we are speaking. Eminently this is true of Washington Lewis, the great-great-grandson of Lawrence Lewis, who married Nellie Custis, the adopted daughter of General Washington. He upheld the high standard of honor, gentleness, truth, courtesy and Christian faith of the family to which he was so closely related. His fidelity to any trust given him by his church or by the community in which he was growing in influence was recognized. He gave promise of a high standing in both; and both feel his loss. The only child of his mother, and the widow, he leaves an only son, a child of one year of age.

Be it therefore resolved: First, That the vestry has lost an able and faithful member, and each vestryman a trusted and valued friend.

Second, That we desire to bear testimony to the uprightness of character, the purity of life, and sincerity of purpose of George Washington Lewis, by whose death the Church and city have lost a most useful member and honored citizen.

Third, That we extend to the family our heartfelt sympathy in their sad bereavement.

The Last Call—A Memory.

"Going West." The purple evening
Brings me many thoughts of thee,
Thou little lad, my darling,
Whom I held upon my knee,
For I hear thy childish foot-fall
As it patters after me.

"Going West." The darkening shadows
Bring precious thoughts of thee,
Yet no surcease of sorrow,
Can twilight bring to me.
For I hear thy drowsy voice calls
Silver, clamoring for me.

"Going West." The stars, thy candles,
And thy bright child-face I can see,
My joyous lad, my darling,
Whom I held upon my knee,
But thy sad man's face, my hero,
Death—hideth that from me.

"West," yet cold? So still my own!
Going, so far, far off from me?
Worn, weary and spent with the battle,
Hard fought for mine and me.
Your warm, brave heart's strong beating,
Cold, stilled in its love for me.

"Gone West," and into God's splendour,
God's purest gift to me!
Thou great grown lad, my soldier,
I once held upon my knee.
Christ, grant that I may follow
When next Thou callest me!

A pledge has been received in these terms: "I will give $1,000 a year for the Church in Paris so long as the war lasts." There has been sent to France in this period, August 2d to October 23—

For the Church in Paris.	$7,050 00
For relief.	$3,129 50

We are deeply grateful for the ready and generous response of the many good and faithful friends who have made possible "this great achievement"; the words are taken from a letter from the Chairman of the Finance Committee of the Church in Paris, dated October 9th. He writes:

"My thanks and my heartiest congratulations upon your great achievement."

And a Bishop writes: "I want to congratulate you: I have been feeling safe for it ever since I got a glimpse of the work" (he was with us in Paris for a few days in 1917). I saw in Paris "what delighted me—not only that the Church could demonstrate what His love means, but was actually doing it."

Again, we can only say, we are grateful.

WHAT THE UNITED WAR WORK CAMPAIGN IS!

READ EVERY WORD OF THIS!

"THERE ARE SEVEN WONDERFUL AMERICAN ORGANILATIONS DEVOTING THEIR ENTIRE TIME, MONEY, AND EFFORTS TO CARING FOR OUR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS UNDER ARMS AND TO THE WOMEN WHO ARE ENGAGED IN ANY SORT OF WAR WORK, HERE OR OVER THERE."

THESE ORGANIZATIONS'

Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., National Catholic War Council (K. of C.), Jewish Welfare Board, War Camp Community Service, American Library Association and Salvation Army have been acting separately, raising the money to carry on their own essential work, but at the request of President Wilson, have now combined in one great drive to secure the necessary funds to further all their purposes during the war.

THE UNITED WAR WORK CAMPAIGN'

Is the effort to raise $170,500,000 in America, of which Virginia's part is $1,500,000, between November 11th and 18th.

WHAT THE MONEY DOES

This money will give encouragement to the fight-weary boys, drive the blues away, keep the spirits up, supply writing paper to the extent of 125,000,000 sheets a month, and envelopes, cigars, cigarettes, tobacco, chocolate, cocoa, beds, and baths; give information, counsel, entertainments, books—3,600,000 volumes and 5,000,000 periodicals have been sent over, as well as enough scripture and booklets to make a pile twenty miles high if stacked together. In fact, everything that is possible is done for the benefit of our boys' mental and physical comfort, health and general welfare.

AMERICA'S WOMEN

The gentle hand and the loving heart of the American woman are materially evidenced in the hostess houses around our camps here, as well as her pure, wholesome influence and care for her patriotic sister who has taken a fighting man's place in our industrial and war activities here and over yonder.

No man or woman who has heard from a son on the battle front and who knows the wealth of mental and physical health that exists under the roof of these huts will regret one red penny given to these organizations to carry on their work.

THE OTHER ENEMY

There is another menacing enemy on the battle front besides the horrible, low-principled Hun—that is the soul-destroying power of evil influence, which can break a soldier quicker than Uncle Sam can make him. These seven organizations are waging a war of greater import and permanent value to us here—that is, the moulding of character and morale of our young men in war, which not only keeps them in good fighting trim, but gives them a clean, healthy mind and body.

WHEN PEACE IS DECLARED

Do not let the present victories and peace rumors mislead you, but when peace is declared there will be more need for the work of these organizations and this money—support the morale of our men—the demobilization will bring added temptation and dangers—we must bring the boys home clean, strong and healthy.

"KNOWING ALL THESE FACTS, WILL YOU HESITATE TO RESPOND LIBERALLY TO THE COMMITTEE IN YOUR COMMUNITY FOR THIS FUND WHICH RENDERS SUCH A SERVICE TO THE BOYS WHO ARE FIGHTING AND DYING THAT YOU AND WHAT YOU HAVE WILL BE SAFE?"

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

He is the freeman whom the truth makes free.—Cowper.

Every noble life leaves the fibre of it forever interwoven in the world's work.—Ruskin.

The Lord requires us to be soldiers for the right rather than victims for the wrong.—Messervy.

Get thy tools ready—

God will find thee work.

—Browning.

An easy victory brings no strength to the soul. It is the effort which tries every nerve that reacts in new power.

Talent and cleverness are common enough, but sincerity and trustworthiness are great but rare virtues.—Thoreau.

The more I study the world, the more am I convinced of the inability of force to create anything durable.—Napoleon Bonaparte.

No one really knows the richness of Christ's love who has not tried to love and serve men as He did.—J. A. Clapperton.

The serene, silent beauty of a holy life is the most powerful influence in the world, next to the might of God.—Blaise Pascal.

In the moment of need the great secret of victory is to believe in the sufficiency of Christ, including his sufficiency to supply all the faith we need.

"We should not be blind to the immense truth that whatever has been made known to us by revelation has always been true."—Bishop of Calcutta.

Only the soul that knows the mighty grief
Can know the mighty rapture. Sorrows come
To stretch out spaces in the heart for joy.

Men are convinced more quickly and certainly by what they see than by what they hear. It is not, "Let your lips speak," but "Let your light shine." The living Spirit is not known and heard of all men, but known and read.

The Gospel of the Sonship and Atonement of our Lord will continue to be as it has been in the past, the most powerful means that exists of exciting men to claim for themselves the privilege of divine sonship.—Clement C. Webb.

The light which brings into prominence the secret sins also brings into prominence the secret virtue. The good Lord takes the candle and sweeps the house not just to find the dust, but to find the piece of silver! No bit of silver is lost. Every bit of secret goodness is seen in the light of His countenance.—J. H. Jowett.

The healing of the world
Is in its nameless saints, each separate star
Seems nothing; but a myriad scattered stars Break up the night and make it beautiful.

—Bayard Taylor.

Faith in the justice and love of the Father is the best and, indeed, the only support under the sufferings of this life. The foundation of all our pains is unbelief; we doubt whether what happens to us ought to happen to us; we think ourselves wiser than Providence.—Amiel.

There is but one rule of conduct for a man—to do the right thing. The cost may be dear in money, in friends, in influence, in labor, in a prolonged and painful sacrifice, but the cost not to do right is far more dear; you pay in the integrity of your manhood, in honor, in truth, in character.

Many a time we unburden our heart by telling its trouble to some sympathetic friend. There is no more sympathetic ear than our Lord's into which to speak our woe. But He does more than simply hear. He puts strength in us to bear the burden until its unloading comes. He leads us by His promised Spirit to the course that will bring relief.—Selected.

The emancipation from care and sorrow and unrest lies in that going out of ourselves which we call Love.—MacLaren.

THE LITERARY DIGEST LIBERTY MAP of the World War (4 ft. 4 in. Wide 3 ft. 6 in. High)

All Arms of the Service Commend It
On account of its remarkable qualities it has been enthusiastically approved by the highest officials of the army and navy. The Inspector General of the army, Major-General John L. Chamberlain, describes it as "an excellent map" which "conveys a very clear idea of the situation." Rear-Admiral H. P. Huse, President of the Naval Examining Board, terms it "the most satisfactory thing of the kind" he has seen, and adds that he does not know "how it can be improved upon."

"It Will Be of Immense Value to Me,"

writes Charles S. Sloane, Secretary of the U. S. Geographic Board, Washington, D. C., who praises its size and scale particularly. The Aide to Brigadier-General Enoch H. Crowder, the Provost Marshal General, characterizes it as "an interesting and helpful map" and expects to "find it very useful" in his office.

"Its Publication is a Real Service to the Country," declares Daniel C. Roper, Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and Captain Roger Wells, U. S. N., Director of Naval Intelligence, speaks of it as "complete to the minutest detail." Vice-President Marshall has given it "a prominent position in his private office where he may consult it from day to day."

America's Highest Map Authority Endorses it. Chief Geographer B. B. Marshall, U. S. Geographic Survey, Washington, D. C., styles it "a fine piece of work in every respect and by all odds the best that I have seen. The shading scheme is graphic indeed, showing at a glance the track of the Hun in his effort to crush civilization under his cruel, inhuman control. Each home from which has gone a father, a son, a husband, or a brother, would certainly appreciate a copy of your Liberty Map, as would those who cannot go. By all means try to put one in each home."

A Clear and Thrilling Picture

The wonderful LITERARY DIGEST LIBERTY MAP shows at a glance how far the Huns have advanced, how much territory they occupy, the area of their latest "drives"; where our own American armies, shoulder to shoulder with our Allies, are fighting on the great Battle Line of Liberty, and makes plain the mighty task which confronts America.

An Index of More Than 12,000 Places

is supplied with each map. It is bound in a separate booklet with handsome war covers, and is packed with the folded map, in a strong square envelope pouch which can be used as a permanent container for both.

In Addition to the Western War Area

is a complete insert map of the whole field of operations, showing Russia, the British Isles, Spain, the Balkans, the Italian Front, the whole Mediterranean, and the Mesopotamian campaign.

Railroad and Highways

and thousands of cities, towns, fortresses, hills, and other places of military importance are shown with special care to secure completeness, convenience and legibility. The Limits of the Submarine Blockade are shown as well as the routes of the Air Raids which will be increasing rapidly in number and importance as the great new fleet of airplanes, now building, go into action.

Coal and Iron Areas

A special insert map is provided, showing the coal and iron areas in the countries included in the larger map and their relation to the abilities of the opposing nations to carry on the war.

The Coloring of the Liberty Map

is strikingly graphic and significant. The countries are clearly differentiated and all boundaries are made very plain. The great Battle Line of Liberty, marking the positions of the American and Allied armies, is shown in Red, White and Blue.

It Will Be a Great Satisfaction to You and an inspiration to your family, or to those who are working in your place of business, or to those who call at your office, to see, day by day, this unusual and eloquent LITERARY DIGEST LIBERTY MAP displayed conspicuously on your wall telling its wonderful story of the great fight for freedom.

Size 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 3 ft. 6 in. high

It is the only map which gives the American people a vivid visualization of the great war, and thus is calculated to rouse their patriotism to a still higher pitch and intensify their determination to see the war through to a victorious conclusion. It shows how a black cloud of frightfulness and terror has been thrust across Europe by the savage Hun; how it has swept over whole nations, scattering death and ruin in its wake. But now, from all the ends of the earth where men are still free, the Armies of Liberty have gathered at the "Frontier of Freedom," and are battling, driving back the savage hordes.

Giving Thanks.

A little strength was lost each day,
A little hope dropped by the way,
The feet dragged slowly up the road,
The shoulders almost dropped their load,

Courage seemed dying in the heart,
The will played but a feeble part.

Night brought no ease,
Day no surcease
From heavy cares or wearying smart.
Then why give thanks?

Somehow strength lasted through the day,

Hope joined with courage in the way;
The feet still kept the up-hill road,
The shoulders did not drop their load,
An unseen Power sustained the heart
When flesh and will failed in their part.

While God gave light
By day and night
And also grace to bear the smart.
For this give thanks.

Thanks for the daily bread, which feeds
The body's wants, the spirit's needs;
Thanks for the keen, the quick'ning word,

"He only lives who lives in God."
Whether his time on earth is spent
In lordly house or labor's tent.

Thanks for the light
By day and night
Which shows the way the Master went.
And He gave thanks.

—Southern Cross.

Thanksgiving in War Times.

At this writing the President's proclamation appointing a day of thanksgiving has not been issued, but it is probable that, as in other years, he will call our people to the faithful keeping of the day. In this second year of our participation in the war there are many more than there were a year ago whose hearts are burdened with sorrow and care. And it is hard to be thankful when one recalls the pains endured, the sufferings borne, the sacrifices made both by many in military and civil life. The very idea of thanksgiving is apt to bring out in our minds the darker aspects of life, which grow more somber by contrast. Yet we may all learn a lesson from the soldiers who are now coming home wounded from the war. They are as cheerful a company of men as can anywhere be found. In spite of torments endured in the past, and present physical handicaps, they are learning useful occupations for self-support, and facing the future with strong courage and hope. You never hear them bemoaning their fate; and the last thing they wish is pitying sympathy. Which goes to show how true it is that life is what you make it, and that in every state of existence there is something to be glad about. For the deeper grounds of thanksgiving are immaterial. It is not the fullest stomach, but the most faithful heart which best enables one to give thanks. And the discerning mind looks beyond the events of the day for the real reasons of gratitude. When this is done there is found reason for thanksgiving this year also.

"Now, God be thanked who has matched us with His hour,
And caught our youth, and wakened us from sleeping."

There, in two lines, is enough for a man to reflect upon through a whole hour of worship in the house of God. And when one goes on to sum up all that has happened, is happening, and will yet be in our world, he will find himself carried away in great gladness of spirit that God has given him part and lot at this time in the building of His kingdom.

It is to be hoped, therefore, that Thanksgiving Day may be kept this year, not as in the old days, in feasting and sport and merry-making, which things set not well to our serious mood, but by Christian people, at least, in dutiful prayer and worship in God's house, in manifestations of mercy and brotherly kindness to the suffering and needy, and with such earnest thinking and high resolving as are the most acceptable of offerings and sacrifices to our Lord.—Newark Churchman.

Seeing Only the Black.

Many people have a strangely perverted faculty of exaggerating their molehills of trouble into mountains, and then of looking at their blessings through diminishing lenses. A cheerful heart always finds brightness, while an unhappy spirit sees nothing but discouragement in even the most favorable conditions. One person is happy in the narrowest circumstances, while another is wretched in a luxuriant home with every want supplied. Some persons never see anything to be thankful for. They may attend a service of praise on Thanksgiving Day; but they are not in a joyful mood, and not the first strain of thanksgiving rises from their hearts. They never stop complaining long enough to allow a grateful thought to nest in their hearts. They keep themselves always in such a mood of discontent that no note of praise is ever heard from their lips. One would think, to hear them talk about their trials, that God does not love them, and that no favor ever comes into their lives. Yet really they do not have any more than their share of human suffering, while they certainly have a full portion of blessing and good.

But this is not the way for a Christian to live. We dishonor God when we indulge in unhappiness and refuse to be grateful. We spoil our own lives and make existence wretched for ourselves when we insist on seeing only the black. Then we make it harder for others to live, casting the burden of our gloom upon them. We should train ourselves just as carefully and conscientiously to be thankful and songful as we do to be truthful, honest, kind, or thoughtful.—J. R. Miller.

A Te Deum For These Times.

We thank Thee, Lord,
For mercies manifold in these dark days;
For Heart of Grace that would not suffer wrong;
For all the stirrings in the dead dry bones;
For bold self-steeling to the times' dread needs;
For every sacrifice of self to Thee;
For ease and wealth and life so freely given;
For Thy deep sounding of the hearts of men;
For Thy great opening of the hearts of men;
For Thy close knitting of the hearts of men;
For all who sprang to answer the great call;
For their high courage and self-sacrifice;
For their endurance under deadly stress;
For all the unknown heroes who have died
To keep the land inviolate and free.
For all who come back from the gates of death;
For all who pass to larger life with Thee,
And find in Thee the wider liberty;
For hope of righteous and enduring peace;
For hope of cleaner earth and closer Heaven;
With burdened hearts, but faith unquenchable,
We thank Thee, Lord!
—From "All's Well," by John Oxenham.

No wonder the Christian has joy. No wonder St. Peter could exclaim, "Believing, ye rejoice greatly with joy unspeakable and full of glory." Believing, we rejoice. In other words, faith produces joy. The relation is that of inseparability, of cause and effect. The believing is the cause of the rejoicing. Faith brings gladness. Trusting brings happiness. Let us not fail to notice also the nature of the joy faith produces. It is "unspeakable." That is, it is unspeakably great. It is also in its nature not a noisy, but a deep and silent thing. In this sense, too, it is "unspeakable." And that is the reason, we doubt not, why it is so often mistaken for the opposite. Because it is calm and sometimes even grave, the world thinks it severe. But, "the gods approve the depth and not the tumult of the soul." Joy may be a very quiet thing, "a calm rapture" as once Jonathan Edwards defined it.—G. B. F. Hallock.

Let us learn to be content with what we have. Let us rid ourselves of our false estimates, set up all the higher ideals—a quiet home; vines of our own planting; a few books full of the inspiration of genius; a few friends worthy of being loved, and able to love us in return; a hundred innocent pleasures that bring us no pain or sorrow; a devotion to the right that will never swerve; a simple religion, empty of all bigotry, full of trust and hope and love—and to such a philosophy the world will give up all the empty joy it has.—David Swing.

PREPAREDNESS FOR THE CHURCH

Never in the history of the country has the Church's responsibility in upholding the ideals of the nation been so great. In rendering its share of the essential work, its buildings should provide for maximum efficiency in every department.

Consult the leading specialists in all branches of church improvement, construction, alteration, etc. Designs will be prepared indicating how contemplated changes, etc., can be effected. Local labor will be availed of when desired for the constructive work, the artistic and elaborate enrichment being executed under the supervision of our New York artists.

Send for photographs of church interiors showing changes and improvements that have been accomplished, with memorial gifts included as a part of the scheme.

To number the mercies of God is an impossible task at any time. It is only those that stand out most conspicuously, not necessarily those that are the most signal or most blessed, that we are usually-conscious of and specifically grateful for. But these teach us of that all-embracing goodness which underlies and overreaches all our lives. They are tokens and sacraments of a love and care and bounty which ever surpasses our utmost thought of it.

Our national Thanksgiving Day in this year of our Lord finds us with hearts already attuned to praise and gratitude. By two great deliverances, from pestilence and war, coming almost simultaneously, has God attested His loving kindness towards His people. In nearly every place this appointed day has been anticipated by public acknowledgement and the worship of praise that could not wait to thank Him for so great mercies. Again on Thanksgiving Day they will stand out in commanding prominence among the ordinary blessings of His merciful providence which will claim our grateful remembrance, to emphasize, let us hope, but not to obscure them.

For the daily mercies of our Heavenly Father are ever His greatest mercies. The peace that prevailed in our homes and hearts throughout the days of war, the normal health that was ours before the illness and after the recovery, the abundant supply for all our needs when our superabundance was limited, the love that remained with us when the loved one was taken—these are the true tokens of His goodness which faileth not. Others that are unusual force themselves upon our attention; these must be remembered. Others that are most striking extort the occasional outburst of wondering praise and adoration; these justify that calm attitude of trust that frees the heart from anxious care. For the constant miracle of His unrelenting mercies as well as the special tokens of His super-abounding favor have we need to offer our sacrifice of praise to God continually, giving thanks to His name.

"RELIGION'S RESPONSIBILITY."

A venerable clergyman of the Church sends us an editorial article from the Baltimore Sun under the above title, with the suggestion that it be republished in our columns. He says: "I wish it could be read to every congregation in the land. Alas! Earthliness and worldliness have taken such hold upon the Church that a secular paper feels constrained to raise its voice seeking to picture the true condition of religion amongst us and point out the way of meeting our heavy responsibility in these critical times." We give space for the whole of this significant editorial, reserving our own comments for the end.

For four years the allied world has been talking mainly in terms of democracy and of national and international justice. And as we approach the final discussion of questions of permanent readjustment the same general thought is uppermost; we are still emphasizing the purely political and social influences that will make for international harmony and human happiness. That is as inevitable as it is proper. Statesmen and diplomatists work only with the brick and mortar of constitutions, of government, of popular and national rights and powers. The structures they erect for democracy and liberty must be built with hands. That is their business. They can go no further. But the house of safety for the world is a temple not constructed simply with the hands of intellect, but one built with souls and consecrated to eternal things.

Who and what are the agencies that are to safeguard the safeguards of statesmen; that are to give enduring vitality to the new order which the statesmen create? Clearly only the organizations that represent the moral and religious forces of the world, those which are avowedly dedicated to the work of spiritual and religious uplift. Whether they can perform this essential service depends wholly upon how much they have learned during the last four years.

This is an hour for humble self-examination, for ruthless soul-searching on the part of organized religion, on the part of what we describe by the general term "The Church." And the more humbly and the more relentlessly organized religion examines its own soul the more hope there will be for the world in the days to come.

Mankind cannot do without religion, nations cannot be safe without it. Robespierre in the maddest period of the French Revolution coined or echoed a great phrase when he said if there were no God, men would have to invent one. But the religion that keeps nations safe must demonstrate its sincerity in its life. It must be clothed in the spiritual sackcloth of humility and sacrifice; it must prove its faith by its works. As soon as it becomes of the world worldly, of the earth earthy, it loses its hold on the human mind and becomes a power for evil rather than for good. The men who point other men to heaven must show that their own chief interest lies in heaven and not in earthly dignities and rewards. The history of the Christian Church and of all other religious systems points the same moral—a moral that must be remembered now, if religion is to perform the saving work that it is called upon to do.

The question of contributory responsibility for the struggle which is now drawing to an end has been debated voluminously and with bitterness on both sides. So far as mere governmental and national influences are concerned, the main responsibility has properly been placed on heartless German ambition. But it would be dishonest for religion to put the whole responsibility upon the moral perversion of Germany. What did religion do during all the years of preparation for this war to teach Germany the danger and the wickedness of the thing her rulers were planning? The basic principles of religion are love, peace, justice and right. If the German people were so perverted that they came to put wrong for right and darkness for light, whose fault was it? And how many religious voices were raised against this moral perversion in Germany, even while the slaughter of the innocents was going on? Many pulpits in his own land will thunder against the Kaiser now and in years to come. How many thundered against him, how many told him the truth, while all things were going well with him?

But has religion been at fault in Germany alone? Was it doing its full duty in all things everywhere else in the half century before this crisis developed? Had it been doing its full duty, for that matter, for a century and a half before—not to mention preceding centuries? A great outcry has been raised whenever this suggestion has been made since 1914, and a great outcry will be made again; but the question is in the general mind and it cannot be answered by an outcry.

There are millions of real Christians and genuinely religious people in the world, and there are thousands of priests and preachers who are worthy of their high creeds; and during this war Christ, in their persons, has been in the trenches as well as in our churches and our homes. But if the Christian and religious world, as a whole, had been in heart what it pro-

Thanksgiving Day

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—A PROCLAMATION.

"It has long been our custom to turn in the autumn of the year in praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God for His many blessings and mercies to us as a nation. This year we have special and moving cause to be grateful and to rejoice. God has in His good pleasure given us peace. It has not come as a mere cessation of arms, a mere relief from the strain and tragedy of war. It has come as a great triumph of right.

"Complete victory has brought us not peace alone, but the confident promise of a new day as well, in which justice shall replace force and jealous intrigue among nations.

"Our gallant armies have participated in a triumph of right which is not marred or stained by any purpose of selfish aggression. In a righteous cause they have won immortal glory and have nobly served their nation in serving mankind.

"God has indeed been gracious. We have cause for such rejoicing as revives and strengthens in us all the best traditions of our national history. A new day shines about us in which our hearts take new courage and look forward with new hope to new and greater duties.

"While we render thanks for these things, let us not forget to seek the divine guidance in the performance of those duties, and divine mercy and forgiveness for all errors of act or purpose, and pray that in all we do we shall strengthen the ties of friendship and mutual respect upon which we must assist to build the new structure of peace and good will among the nations.

"Wherefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate Thursday, the 28th day of November next, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and invite the people throughout the land to cease upon that day from their ordinary occupations and in their several homes and places of worship to render thanks to God, the ruler of nations.

"In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done in the District of Columbia, this 16th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1918, and of the independence of America the 143d year.

"WOODROW WILSON.

Thanksgiving, 1918

Nancy Byrd Turner.

Thankful this year for all the former things—

For the good fields that were not tilled in vain,
For harvest home and golden garnerings,
And sun and wind and rain;

For health, and hope, and labor late and soon,
And all the beauty that the seasons bore—
Then at the last for that most shining boon,
Peace on the earth once more!

We had not known until we lost it, Lord,
What prize we held in child-like, happy hands—
Not till the guns spoke and the unsheathed sword
Leapt out across the lands.

But now we know. . . . The battle mists divide,
The guns are mute, the bugles soaring play;
We bow us humbly, yet all glorified,
Our gratitude to pay.

Thankful for dear reunions, swift and sweet,
For laughter breaking clearly after pain;
Thankful for music of returning feet,
And voices heard again.

And proudly thankful also, loving God,
For gallant feet we may not welcome home,
That late an unreturning journey trod
So peace might surely come.

Thankful for courage in the face of doom,
Thankful for strength when human strength was past,
For faith well kept, for guidance in the gloom,
For victory at last!

Shaken and thrilled after the smiting years,
We name old blessings in the old glad way,
Then lift our strange new thanks with tender tears,
This new Thanksgiving Day!

fessed to be in creed, if its official representatives had been untouched and untainted by worldliness, would there not have been a moral league for peace and justice that would have made such a conflict impossible?

How did Christianity, starting in a stable in Bethlehem and on a cross on Calvary, become such a mighty force in a few generations? Because its leaders believed in it with all their hearts and souls and minds; because they were anxious to live it, as well as ready to die for it. And it is a great deal easier to die for a creed than to live up to it.

Christianity has been the mightiest influence in history, but, like the disciples in the Garden, it has sometimes gone to sleep, and, like Peter, has sometimes denied its Lord. The devil has taken it up into high mountains more than once and seduced it with promises of pomp and power. With almost royal circumstance and splendor it has reigned where the early Christian missionaries, in mean raiment and sandaled feet, preached "the everlasting gospel." That Christianity has survived the weaknesses and half-heartedness of many of its exponents and leaders is the strongest proof of its divine origin.

But Christianity, and all organized religion face a period now that will put them to the test; that will try their soul to the uttermost. On the sincerity, the sacrifice, the loving humility of the leaders of religious thought and practice, the world's future will mainly depend. They can establish a spiritual democracy, a spiritual league of peace founded on a rock, against which storms of hate and passion and self-interest will beat in vain. The world is ready and waiting for the Church. But it must come not with the voice of a false Christ of worldliness, selfishness, conventional and superficial ceremonial or narrow sectarianism, but with the voice of the Christ of love and devotion to humanity.

Why should not the representatives of religion hold a conference of their own and organize for the work before them by the establishment of a spiritual league of peace, good will and service? The Church must return to the spirit of the stable and the cross, in daily life as well as in creed, if the world is to be something more than a well-ordered industrial plant, with recreation and pleasure facilities.

There is nothing very new in this, and, if one were so inclined, room could be found for rejoinder. Its significance lies, to our mind, largely in the fact that it fairly represents the thought of the average citizen, the man on the street, on a subject which he knows to be important and in regard to which he feels some concern but little responsibility. It is representative of him in its positiveness of conviction, coupled with its vagueness of thought and indefiniteness of expression. Even this trained writer, accustomed by the necessities of his vocation to making nice discriminations, fails to distinguish clearly between religion, Christianity, the Church and leaders of religious thought or representatives or exponents of religion. It is plain that no two of these are identical, and in drawing this indictment the culprit should certainly be more clearly identified. For instance, there has been a "religion" taught and held in Prussia for many years which has had little or no kinship with Christianity, and this distinction ought to be plainly drawn. Christianity has never gone to sleep, never denied its Lord, never been seduced by the devil, but the Church has in some of its parts. But again the Church must not be held responsible for the vagaries and inconsistencies of some of its own members, to say nothing of other leaders of religious thought.

But while the intelligent Christian and Churchman makes these distinctions, the average man does not. And it is this average man that the Church cannot ignore, but must know his thought, weigh his judgments, and by her sincerity and faithful witness win him to herself and her Lord. He has been too much overlooked in the past, while the Church has been busied with things which have seemed to him academic and unimportant. Indeed, there has been a great deal of indifference, the one toward the other, and no little misjudgment on both sides. But the two are feeling their need each of the other in these days and ought to come to a better understanding. The man on the street has been thinking more deeply and seriously than has been usual with him. He has been making sacrifices. He has been cultivating an ideal. He has met problems which have a spiritual side he does not quite understand. And religion, or Christianity, or the Church, and these are all one in his mind, does not seem to him to offer much practical help for his needs or those of society and civilization; yet he feels a distinct need for what he thinks the Church ought to be and religion ought to give.

It is well, then, to study his notions and get his point of view. A bit crude and one-sided they may be, but they are what the Church has to do with if she is going to win this man to her allegiance and her aid. He can teach her many things that it were well for her to know and lay to heart. And even if we can disprove all his charges, which we cannot, and expose all his prejudices as ungrounded, the question remains, How came this man so to misjudge and suspect the religion of Jesus Christ of which the Church and every Churchman are exponents and witnesses? Why has not our light shone in such manner that he would see our good works and glorify our Father? The utmost necessity of the Church Militant today of all days is to answer these questions honestly, humbly and with full purpose of amendment of life.

His charges lie, not against religion, but its representatives; not against Christianity, but the Christian and the Church. The candid mind must acknowledge the truth that is in them, accept the rebuke, and realize the responsibility of more truly manifesting the Christ in all simplicity and sincerity to a newly awakened generation.

Here and There

The recent election of Major Davis Elkins to the United States Senate from West Virginia puts his mother, Mrs. Stephen B. Elkins, in a unique position amongst American women. She was formerly Miss Hallie Davis, daughter of the Hon. Henry G. Davis, who was one of West Virginia's representatives in the United States Senate shortly after the Civil War. Her husband, the Hon. Stephen B. Elkins, represented West Virginia in that august body for several terms, and now the election of her son gives her a connection with the United States Senate through her closest male relatives for three generations. Mrs. Elkins herself is a wonderfully cultured and attractive woman, and a fine type of the American woman in public life.

The record distance for the passage of a wireless telegraphic message through the air was reached recently when the station in Sydney, Australia, picked up a message that had been sent out from a station in Wales. Unless one traces the distance on a globe from the British Isles to Australia it is almost impossible to imagine the greatness of this feat of wireless transmission.

The State of Ohio passed into the dry column in the last election by a majority of over 20,000. This decision also means another State to ratify the Federal Prohibition Amendment to the Constitution.

Mme. Breshkovsky, who is known in Russia as the "Little Grandmother," and has variously been reported as being executed by the Bolsheviks, as having died a natural death, and as having left Russia for some other European country, is now reported to be on her way to the United States. With her arrival and that of Prince Lvoff, who is now on his way here via Japan, we ought to be able to get some authentic information about conditions in that distracted country.

The American Red Cross Society has appointed Homer Folks to study the effect of the war on the civilian population and the changes it has wrought in social and family life. He will have a considerable staff to assist him of food and health experts, photographers and interpreters. England, Italy, Serbia, Greece, Palestine, Belgium, Switzerland, and possibly Russia, will be visited and the report made will be the basis of the new Red Cross overseas plans for peace times.

A good old custom has recently entirely disappeared. At one time it was considered polite and a friendly act to say "God bless you" when you sneezed. Nowadays a sneeze brings anything but a benediction, and you are lucky if you are not expelled from the street car or public audience for allowing yourself such a luxury.

American political events sometimes produce very odd situations. The Hon. Robert M. LaFollette, the Senator from Wisconsin, who has been recently under investigation by a committee of the Senate, with possible expulsion as a result of its finding, is now a dominant figure in that body. According to the final election returns the Republicans have a majority of two, but if Senator LaFollette should become fractious on any close question and vote with the Democrats it would make a tie which the casting vote of the Vice-President would break in favor of the administration, so it behooves the Republicans to be very polite to Mr. LaFollette. It is certainly an anomaly that the party whose slogan was "Unconditional Surrender" should be dependent for its power upon the most uncompromising pacifist in public life.

The following estimate of the casualties of the great war has been sent out by the Express of London:

Germany	6,900,000
Austria	4,500,000
France	4,000,000
Great Britain.....	2,900,000
Turkey	750,000
Belgium	350,000
Rumania	200,000
Bulgaria	200,000

With the unestimated casualties of Russia and others not included in the above list, the Express estimates the total of casualties of war at 26,000,000 men.

The American casualties are estimated at not more than 100,000, and we are told by statisticians of the Health Departments that Spanish influenza has a larger death toll for us than the German guns and bayonets.

Letters to the Editor

Vengeance.

Mr. Editor:

If the newspaper reports be true, the utterances of certain clergymen in various parts of the country are most surprising. One would like to ask them these questions. Is there any sentiment of the human heart more directly opposed to the teachings of Christ than the spirit of vengeance? Is there any sentiment of the human heart more directly approved by the teachings of Christ than the spirit of forgiveness? Why is it even made a part of the great, brief, compressed Lord's Prayer that we should have the forgiving mind rather than the vindictive mind?

From the words of Deuteronomy, "To me belongeth vengeance," to the words of St. Paul, "Vengeance is mine," the trend of the teaching of our religion is that vengeance is God's business, not man's. The verse in Deuteronomy goes on to say, "Their foot shall slide in due time," and the verse in the Epistle to the Romans goes on to say, "I will repay, saith the Lord." In other words, God has His way, when punishment is needed, of bringing the right punishment to pass in due time. This is a tremendous fact which the world has not realized. Not having faith in God and God's great law, we have taken the business of vengeance into our own hands. And what troubles we have wrought with it, whether in the feuds of individuals and families or in the jealousies of nations?

This spirit of vengeance, let us understand, goes beyond the idea of a just restitution, and to endeavor to get rid of it is no counsel of idealism, but common sense. The practice of vengeance never pays. It has brought only evil in the past. It will bring only evil in the future. In one way or another it is sure to react. Even the Greek dramatists, before the coming of Christ, taught this.

Jesus Christ, in this as in all other things, in His positive way put the whole thought on the topmost plane. The heart and center of his appeal is for good will to men, not only to some men, not only to the men we judge to be good, but to all men, including such as we judge to be evil and hostile. His doctrine and His appeal are nothing less. And about nothing else was He more emphatic.

The great world of nations today, made up, after all, of us individual men and women, is face to face with this tremendous problem, and the great question is whether the spirit of vengeance, as it generally has prevailed in the dealings of nations, shall again prevail. A more intimate question, back of the other question, is this: Is our Christianity, in our so-called Christian civilization, yet strong enough to prevail in the council of the nations? And is it not the business of every preacher in every pulpit to support in this present crisis a righteous and not a vindictive settlement, a settlement which shall make for peace present and future? Such a settlement is surely the wish of the great man in Washington, by whom, though knowing best of all the awful provocation, not one word of vengeance against the German people has been uttered.

FRATERNAL MESSAGE TO ENGLISH CHURCHES.

The following message from the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America was conveyed to the British churches by Bishop Charles Gore and Rev. Arthur T. Guttery, who have just sailed:

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, to the Church of England, and to the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches of England and Wales:

Dear Brethren:

It is with heartfelt joy that we ask the privilege of conveying this message of our affection and gratitude, by the hands of two messengers, Rt. Rev. Charles Gore and President-elect Arthur T. Guttery, for whose service to our churches and people we are profoundly thankful.

They came to our nation for two great ends, to help us set before our people, in vital power, the moral aims of the war and to bring us your sympathetic judgment as to our hope and faith in such an association of nations as shall create, develop and perpetuate justice and righteousness in the world of nations, by means of the good-will and mutual consideration persuaded and demanded by our Christian faith.

They have performed their task. They have shed light and imparted inspiration and have helped both our nations on the way to this great end.

History will ever have a glowing page for the days of 1914, in which you made your great decision, a determination which was of infinitely greater weight in the destinies of mankind than we had dreamed. We rejoice that we have this opportunity to tell you that our hearts have been touched and our life renewed by the courageous, steadfast, determined measure in which, from its instant response to the demand of national duty, through years of the severest emergency and distress, your nation has pursued its way, and above all by the Christian spirit in which your churches have spoken the severe and penetrating truth, but have spoken that truth in love.

Your messengers and their messages have ever fulfilled the word of the apostle, letting all bitterness and clamor and railing be put away from them, that the fruit of the spirit might abound.

Meanwhile, we feel profoundly that your people have followed the Master, in that they have suffered for us and for the freedom and justice which we seek, with all mankind. It was of the fruit of your labors that we partook.

For a little time and in some slight measure we have entered into your heritage and shared, not only in the ideals of truth and justice which have sustained you, but have also partaken of your labors and sacrifices.

We have been brought very close together, as we have mingled the tears of each other's wives and mothers and fathers and sisters and little children. Ours is slight besides yours, but it is enough to reveal to us the valley of the shadow through which you have passed, now, God be praised, out into the light.

Thus we begin to realize the blessings which, by the hand of God, have come to us, and we send you this message because we desire to perpetuate, in the coming days of joy and gladness, the ties which have bound us together in conflict and suffering.

Our ideas, political and social, and, above all, religious, are common and have been mutual for a century and more. Our future task of rebuilding wasted Europe is a common task. Our own nations will call for unity in the reconstruction of their mutual life and institutions.

Our national organizations and societies, political, economic, commercial and industrial, are proceeding to common conference and mutual endeavor. We invite, through this message, the closest relationship between the churches of our two nations, in sentiment and faith and in every practical action.

We suggest that we continue to interchange messengers; our pastors and laymen, our teachers of theology, our missionaries, our students.

God grant that as our brave soldiers have fought together, in conflict for ideals of truth and freedom, as our two peoples have been united in solemn league and covenant, our churches may keep close together, in our future task of building upon the foundations now at last established, of a world which has forever secured to itself the force of right and has forever repudiated and condemned the right of force.

As we are handing this message to your messengers, the glad news comes to us that the eternal principle to which you committed yourselves for these four years, and which drew us to you and to the democratic nations which have stood together, has become the heritage now of all the nations.

Glory be to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Spirit. Amen.

We are assured that this message conveys the spirit of all our churches, without reference to formal or organic relationship.

"FOOD WILL WIN THE WORLD."

Following is the message of the United States Food Commission to the Religious Press, and through it to our Christian people:

"All men are pondering now the new conditions in the world under peace.

"During the last year the influence of the churches has been unmeasured toward making vivid the flame of devotion and sacrifice for the nation's cause, intensifying and purifying the war conscience.

"Now the spirit to be awakened and quickened is that of devotion and sacrifice for freedom's cause, broadening and deepening the world consciousness; as though that far-off divine event toward which all things created move were now within reach of our apprehension; as though the universal gospel once proclaimed were at last to be grasped by the communion of all living.

"We do not presume that we are bringing to your attention any thought that has not already occupied it. Indeed, the frequent choice of "the common table" as a pulpit theme is recognition of this new thought that by sharing food, as it were a sacrament, the unity of the family of nations is to be approached. Certainly the fact that the Inter-Allied Food Council was the first expression of organic international life apart from purely military efforts has been often noted and the symbolism of sharing food as a means of enlisting intimate sympathies has repeatedly attracted thought.

"We wish here only to emphasize the patriotic purpose by which America's food pledge is to be kept—for humanity and for the larger purposes beyond our ken. So to hasten the long-promised time when wars shall be no more.

"UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION.

Y. M. C. A. WORKERS WANTED.

The War Personnel Board of the Young Men's Christian Association will soon issue an earnest appeal for men, of whom large numbers are needed at once in France to carry on the work of the Association. They say:

"The nation will have given generously of its funds to maintain the physical, mental, moral and spiritual welfare of our armies, both at home and abroad.

"Men of the choicest personalities must now be sent to carry on this work.

"During the post-war period, when 150,000 to 200,000 men will be on leave all the time, when the education of thousands must be continued, when temptations will be inviting on every hand, the need for workers will be greater than ever before.

"The immediate future challenges us to send our finest men—men of good health, ability and character, with a large capacity for friendship, to serve our boys until they are returned to their homes."

We are beset by two evils, opposite in character, but alike in result: one is frivolity, the other despair. The first tempts us to treat life as a jest, duty as a dream, and God as an intrusion; the second drives us to think life as a blunder, duty as a tyrant, and God as fate. Deliverance from both these evils is gained by a vision of the bare truth of life, that is, a vision of God.—J. Clifford.

The Great Commission

The Advent Call.

The members of the Woman's Auxiliary are making ready to take part in the Advent Call. What does it mean? What is it that, under the commissions of their several bishops, and with the sanction and help of their rectors, they are being sent to do?

Their task is to carry to every woman of our Church a message which is in reality an invitation—an invitation to unite with her fellow-Church women in prayers and thanksgiving, in study of the Bible and in the service which is the fruit of earnest prayer and study.

In the coming fortnight all over our land messengers will be trained to bear the Call; and women who are remote from the points where training classes are gathered, but are none the less eager in their desire to give the Call to those about them, will prepare themselves by correspondence with their leaders and by personal reading and devotions.

When this work was planned prayers for victory held a leading place in our thoughts. Now that victory has been won, what change will be made in the Call?

The General Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, Miss Grace Lindley, in a letter to her diocesan leaders, deals with this subject, and gives some necessary directions. A part of this letter is as follows:

"The question is being asked, 'How will peace affect the Advent Call?' Isn't it wonderful that we should have to ask the question? How little we dreamed last spring when this Call was planned that it would be made in times of glorious victory and peace! When we talked of patience in tribulation we looked into a future of deep sorrow and anxiety, and now—what is there to do but turn our week into one of heartfelt thanksgiving? We said that if our casualty lists were very long, the way for victory very tedious and hard, then women would be ready to take part in the prayers and pledges of our Call. Shall we believe that and not believe that they will welcome a Call to give thanks?

"But the second part of our purpose was always the more important. We were to mobilize our spiritual power, not only for winning the war, but to prepare for the time after the war. That time is here. Are we ready? Every one of us would answer, 'No, not as we wish we might be.' Then there is tremendous need for an Advent Call. Peace on the battlefields has been won. Now come the peace conferences, the problems created by the return of the armies, the need for Christianizing social relations in all countries, the need for winning the world for Christ. 'Crowns and thrones' have indeed 'perished.' What is to come? We say a 'better time.' It can be that really, only as it is built on the everlasting principles our Lord gave us. And now is the time when this must be done. If we believe in spiritual power we need now to mobilize that power for the new era. Peace has changed nothing in our Advent Call except to turn our prayers for victory into thanksgiving. It has only made more imperative an Advent Call to the women of the Church. As we thank for the coming of peace let us prepare the way for the Advent of the Prince of Peace. Think what Advent and Christmas may be this year! Let us make our Advent Call more earnestly than we have already planned and hoped.

"A word about practical matters. There is no time to print a new pledge card. The only thing is to suggest to the messengers that they should make the changes necessary on the cards they use. They should cross out the words 'for winning the war,' 'until the end of the war,' and both on this card and on the prayer cards they should suggest that in place of praying for victory we should give thanks that it has already come.

"* * * Let us face the first week in Advent in deepest gratitude that we are allowed our share in this service and a most joyful hope that what we do is indeed preparing the way for the return of the King."

A Prayer.

For the Messengers of the Advent Call.

O God, the strength of all those who put their trust in Thee; send Thy blessing upon Thy servants who are undertaking the special work to which the Woman's Auxiliary is now called. Fill their hearts with wisdom, courage, patience and love. Give them, in this time of earthly tumult, the constant vision of Thy glorious Kingdom, and the power of imparting that vision unto those to whom they are sent; so that the women of Thy Church may be moved to united prayer and to more faithful service, to the glory of Thy Name, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

Notes From the Mission House.

At the thirty-ninth annual commencement of St. John's University, Shanghai, announcement was made of a gift of $80,000 from the China Medical Board of the Rockefeller Foundation for the improvement of the School of Science. A considerable part of this sum will be used to build and equip a new laboratory for the use of the biology, chemistry and physics departments. The same Board has signified its willingness to make a grant of $17,625 toward strengthening the equipment of St. James' Hospital, Anking, China, provided the Board of Missions will contribute the sum of $5,875 for the same purpose. The Board has accepted the gift on these terms and Dr. Harry B. Taylor, the head of the hospital staff, who is now in this country on furlough, has been asked to appeal for special gifts for this purpose.

In a personal letter to a friend in the East, Bishop Morrison, of Duluth, wrote on October 17th: We have just been visited with a terrible fire which swept over one hundred miles of my diocese in one evening. More than a thousand people were burned to death, multitudes were injured, and thousands lost their homes and all they possessed. I have lost churches and parsonages and must begin over again the work of construction.

The Bulletin of the Insular and Foreign Division of the American Red Cross for October prints in full the first report received from Dr. Teusler, who is in charge of relief work at Vladivostok. In commenting on it, the Bulletin says: "How efficient that work has been will be appreciated when it is stated that Dr. Teusler has been asked by the Czecho-Slovak general staff to provide medical service for the entire Siberian army," and it quotes Secretary Daniels as saying, "The quickest and most efficient long distance relief job I ever saw handled."

At the November meeting of the Board of Missions the apportionment for the year 1919 was fixed at $1,590,000, to be distributed among the various dioceses and districts on the same basis as heretofore.

Church Intelligence

Meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board of Missions.

The stated meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board of Missions was held in the Church Missions House on November 12, 1918.

The Domestic Secretary called attention to the death of the Rt. Rev. Francis K. Brooke, D. D., Missionary Bishop of Oklahoma. The Executive Committee adopted the following minute by a rising vote:

"Whereas, the Rt. Rev. Francis Key Brooke, Doctor of Divinity and for the last twenty-five years a Bishop of the Church in the Missionary District of Oklahoma, has rendered his final earthly accounting, and on October 22, 1918, passed from the Church Militant into the Church Expectant:

"Resolved, That the Board of Missions hereby notes this fact upon its minutes, and in addition places on record its gratitude to Almighty God for the good example and faithful service of His servant, and our fellow-worker in the extension of the Kingdom of God within the borders of these United States.

"Called to the unique position of primary Bishop of a State born in a day, Dr. Brooke went to his task in Oklahoma endowed with a disposition of singular sweetness, and a rare charm of mind and manner, which won friends for the Church wherever he ministered as a shepherd and pastor of the flock. A material record of his work can be found in the hospital, the hostel for Churchwomen in the town of Norman, Oklahoma, the Cathedral, the Bishop's house and in churches, parish houses and rectories for the erection of which he spent himself unreservedly; and wisely administered such funds as came to him through the years of his Episcopate.

"The Board also learns, with gratitude that his spiritual ministry has left an ecclesiastical household determined to maintain and carry forward all those missionary ideals which Bishop Brooke ever strove to inculcate in his priests and congregations.

"To the Church at large the Board commends for emulation the good example of a faithful soldier of Jesus Christ, who bore his pain of body, and the disappointments of his ministry with uncomplaining devotion and a steadfast faith. The Board prays God to rest the soul of His servant and to grant him and his household that peace which He has promised to those who unfeignedly love Him.

"Resolved, That a copy of this minute be sent to the family of Bishop Brooke, with an added expression of the Board's sympathy for Mrs. Brooke and her children in their sense of personal loss and bereavement."

The Bishop of New York spoke in a most appreciative way of the life and work of the late Bishop.

The condition of the work in the Diocese of Duluth was a matter which received careful consideration by the committee. Several letters have been received from Bishop Morrison, giving in part the devastation done by the forest fire in October. Special attention was called to the destruction of the beautiful St. Andrew's Church and its fine parsonage in the City of Cloquet. The Cloquet people, the Bishop said, owe their lives to the Great Northern Railway which crammed the yards with engines and freight cars, and carried thousands out of the flames to the only refuge, the City of Superior, forty miles away. The beautiful little city of Moose Lake was utterly destroyed and our new church has only the concrete steps and chimney left. This is only part of the destruction to our church property. The Bishop was very anxious to rebuild the church and rectory at Cloquet and the church at Moose Lake. The people have lost everything, but even so are doing everything in their power to help toward the rebuilding.

The Executive Committee turned to the fund established as a result of the receipt of undesignated legacies, and assured the Bishop that they would stand back of him in the rebuilding of these structures, and if necessary make an appropriation from this fund.

The Secretary for Latin America also reported the devastation due to the earthquake in Porto Rico. Our splendid St. Luke's Hospital in Ponce has been badly damaged; the repairs necessary will cost in the neighborhood of $6,000. A paper received from Porto Rico giving an account of the valuable work done by St. Luke's Hospital mentioned, among other things, that it had organized Red Cross work and carried on a most valuable relief work in Mayaguez through the services of Miss Hicks, the nurse in charge of the hospital. The Bishop was authorized to proceed with the necessary repairs. It is hoped that members of the Church will realize the importance of this medical work in Porto Rico and come forward with sufficient funds to make up the loss.

The Bishop of Cuba expects to ordain Mr. P. H. Asheton-Martin, and was given permission to employ him in the field.

Our new mission in Santo Domingo is growing to such an extent that a teacher is necessary, and Mrs. Aldeo was employed for that purpose.

In the Foreign Field: In order to take advantage of the low price of rice in Liberia, an advance up to $1,800 was made to lay by a sufficient store for our six schools. This rice is to be held subject to monthly requisition by each school.

Mr. J. J. Neal, who for many years had served as business agent at Cape Palmas, as well as Superintendent of the Cape Palmas Orphan Asylum and Girls' School, was obliged to retire on account of age and infirmity. A suitable retiring allowance was provided.

In Alaska the resignations of Mr. and Mrs. David L. McConnell and Miss Frances Wells were accepted.

Miss Wells had married Mr. Walter Harner, who had for some time been Archdeacon Stuck's traveling companion and was with him in the ascent of Mt. Denali and was the first to reach the summit. They were coming out on the steamer "Sophia," which was wrecked in October and all lives lost.

Miss Kathleen LaMothe Rigby, of Baltimore, Md., was appointed to the District of Anking, and Miss Helen A. Little to the District of Hankow.

The salaries of our missionaries in Alaska have for some time been felt to be inadequate. Prices are excessively high, especially in the interior. It was felt necessary to make some small increase and to regulate the salaries in accordance with the plan in force in all of the foreign missionary districts. A pay table was therefore adopted providing standard salaries, adjusted according to character of service rendered and terms of years served.

The Treasurer's report to November 1st was such that the members of the committee gave long consideration to it. With two months more of the year remaining, we shall require an additional amount of $311,762, even should the total amount of the apportionment be raised. Our appropriations to November 1st, including the deficit of last year amount to $143,309, total $2,408,118. There is still $625,904 due on the apportionment. With other large mission boards reporting not only increased offerings, but large plans for advance work, it makes the Board feel that the requests they have made upon the Church have been altogether too modest and that it is only fair to expect that at least the obligations already contracted for should be taken care of.

A splendid report has come in as a result of the One Day's Income Plan, over $125,000 having been received from that source. Every mission board in the country today faces perhaps the greatest opportunity since its organization. Many are seeing this and preparing for it.

The Board at its December meeting will take time to consider this whole question, as it is to be called in extraordinary session for this purpose. It is hoped, however, that the regular offerings of the people will be adequate to meet the present emergencies.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

New Departure in Church Finance Advocated.

The semi-annual meeting of the Archdeaconry of the city and adjacent parishes met at St. John's Parish Hall November 13th. The meeting was the most important, probably, ever held, as there was presented the report of the "Central Missionary Committee" on the subject, "What Is the Matter With Our Church Finances?" This report produced a live discussion, especially by the laymen, and the meeting adjourned until another suitable time for a more thorough consideration of this matter.

A new power has arisen quietly among the laymen of the Diocese of Washington, through the leadership of Mr. Byron S. Adams. These men are informed, after years of study and investigation, with regard to their business in the Diocese; and are prepared to cope with the situation that confronts the Church in the new era. The enlightening power of this war has made clear to men of vision the inwardness of men's hearts, and leaders are in a position to direct intelligently the course of Church affairs. With a body of the leading laymen of the Diocese of Washington awake to their opportunity, we are practically assured that the Diocese will meet the problems and opportunities before us in an adequate way.

The clergy of the Diocese are fully awake to their responsibilities. The Bishop has taken charge of Old Trinity Parish, close by the capital, and has plans to make it a great community church for the city. The clergy are back of him in this enterprise, and with the support of the laity we can feel assured of a great work at this important.

The whole Diocese is in a state of ferment at present, and none of us can foresee what the outcome will be: Whether it will amount to a revolutionary centre—with its great church of a democratic nature or a temporary stimulating of present methods remains to be seen. The clergy have been doing the layman's work for such a length of time that it is taken for granted as the only way. This has resulted in a great loss to the spiritual effectiveness of the clergy and a callous indifference among the laity. Sometimes it has been said that the clergy are poor business men; never was a more absurd statement made. The clergyman who has not been a first-class business man during the last generation, at least, was a failure, no matter what other good qualities he might have.

We need the men of suitable learning, of spiritual discernment and godly lives, to devote themselves to the work of the ministry, without wasting their powers on business affairs. When I speak of spirituality I do not mean pious dreamers; but men who grasp the meaning of the great spiritual forces that rule the world.

We need the diaconate in our parishes, and the archdiaconate in our dioceses, to look after the temporal affairs. Our diaconate today is an appendix and needs modern surgery. I don't think the bishops and clergy generally would take kindly at first to a change, as they are sincerely afraid of the deacon. The diaconate means democratic revolution. Democracy in the new era before us is inevitable, and it will not help the Church if the clergy are to maintain the attitude of the Bourbons. It may be necessary in the future to look at ministry as ordained laymen rather than traditional autocrats. The ordaining of business men to the office of deacon would certainly be a step in this direction. It would place the temporal affairs of the Church in the hands of the men to whom they rightly belong. It would place upon the laymen a deeper sense of their opportunity and privilege in bringing men to the Church and to Christ, than can be placed by the St. Andrew's Brotherhood or any such makeshift.

Responsibility is the foundation of democracy; the placing of responsibility where it properly belongs is the key to the solution of our coming problems.

Peace Celebration In Old Bruton Church.

The peace celebration held Sunday night, November 17th, in old Bruton Church, Williamsburg, was participated in by more people than in any indoor event since the great Jamestown year of 1907. Every seat in the historic edifice was filled and crowds thronged the doors.

The procession, which entered the tower of the church promptly at 8 o'clock with bright banners and the mingled colors of the religious, military, civic and academic units that composed it, represented brilliantly the rejoicing of an entire community. The procession was headed by a soldier bearing the national colors from the military headquarters at the College of William and Mary. The order of the procession was: Vested choir under the leadership of Professor R. M. Crawford, the student soldiers of William and Mary, United States officers of the S. A. T. C. unit of the college, college women of William and Mary, college non-military students bearing the service flag of the college with over 300 stars, official boards of the Williamsburg churches—Presbyterian, Baptist, Methodist, Episcopal—the senior warden of the latter bearing the service flag of Bruton Church, the faculty of the college in academic robes and the officiating clergy and speaker.

The speaker of the occasion was Dr. John Leslie Hall, dean of William and Mary, who himself had three sons in the service and one daughter in war work. The service was conducted by the rector of Bruton Church, Rev. E. Ruffin Jones, and Rev. W. H. Holloway, of the Methodist Church. Dr. Hall's address was a brilliant interpretation of the meaning of the occasion.

Old Bruton Church, the oldest church in continuous use in English-speaking America, is linked by historic association with every great era of American history.

The Y. M. C. A. and the Hospital: At Camp Lee the Association has from the first done a good work in the hospital. Each "Y" building has had two or more wards assigned to it where three weekly visits are made, say on Tuesday, Friday and Sunday. On weekday visits the men are provided with free stationery, and stamps, post cards, pencils and papers are sold to them. A word of cheer is given to every man. A few words here and there, as opportunity offers, are spoken in behalf of the religious life. Sometimes a prayer is offered at a bedside, and always a New Testament is offered to every man. By these visits the sick are cheered and helped. Some find their way to the Saviour's feet. On Sundays a short service is held in each ward. The convalescents join heartily in the singing. The others, if not too sick, look on from chair or bed, so the day is marked, the monotony of the ward is broken, faith is nourished in the hearts of the believers, and many are started on a definite path of Christian living. This is a part, and no small part, of the Association's work in the camp.

In the recent epidemic the Association men again did a fine work. In the early days of the trouble the "Y" men were withdrawn from the hospital, but very soon the army chaplains appealed to the Association for help. Immediately all the clergymen and some laymen were sent to assist the chaplains in ministering to the sick and dying. The cheerful bearing, the hopeful spirit of these men, and a short prayer at each bed did much to dispel the fear which naturally accompanies such a scourge as this. During the epidemic many were baptized and more brought to a knowledge of salvation through Christ. With few exceptions all who passed safely the crisis of illness expressed deep gratitude to God. Those who died had some word of prayer and a friendly hand to clasp as they passed. Sometimes a mother or a father would be standing with a "Y" man by a dying boy. The gripping hand of the parent told more than words could as the "Y" man passed on. Nurses and doctors gave the Association men cordial greetings always. The commanding officer of the hospital is reported as saying that he had learned to appreciate the Young Men's Christian Association beyond what he could have thought. Of course, the chaplains expressed profound appreciation for the help rendered them in a time of great and urgent need.

The Association has proved itself a great factor in the making and care of the army.

A Worker.

The Rev. J. Lewis Gibbs, for the past six years rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Forest Hill, South Richmond, has resigned to accept the rectorship of Emmanuel Church, Staunton, and expects to assume his new duties the first of the year.

The Rev. Frank A. Ridout, who has been doing Y. M. C. A. work in France for six months, arrived home Friday, November 15th. He is rector of Holy Trinity Episcopal Church, of Onancock, and St. George's Church, Pungoteague.

The Advent Call—Letter From the Bishop.

To the Clergy of Virginia:

My Dear Brothers,—This letter goes to you with one from the President of the Diocesan Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Virginia. Miss Davis' letter will explain what the women of the whole Church are trying to do for the cause of religion and patriotism in these critical days. Let us distinctly recognize that they are acting under the clear sanction of the Board of Missions. Missions depend on religion, and at this time surely religion and patriotism are for Americans only different sides of the same shield.

The thought of sending persons with a religious message, and with aids to prayer to all the women of this land whom the messengers can reach; grows out of a belief in the power of prayer to bring our human wills into agreement with God's will; and if religious people know anything, they know this—"That if we ask anything according to His will He heareth us."

We are asking for victory, the safe return of our soldiers, a reasonable, secure and abiding peace for the world. We must ask importunately, but we must also ask filially; confidently as to our own desires, trustingly as to the wisdom and goodness of our Father in heaven.

If the great body of our people can voice their prayers in this spirit, what an impetus will be given to the progress of the Church, the unity of our nation, the valor of the army and to religion in our own souls.

The visit of the messengers to our parishes is intended to assist toward the attainment of just these results. Let us fall in with the plan and carry it out in every detail.

Special Points About the Advent Call. For Both Clergy and Laity.

With a view to getting the detailed program of the Advent Call put into a brief outline, it has been suggested that such an outline be printed in the Southern Churchman. While the points given below are addressed to the churches in Richmond so far as local meetings are concerned, the matter of their applies to the Call at large.

1. The messengers in Richmond will meet for training in Holy Trinity Sunday school room Friday, November 29th, at 4 P. M. The training will be continuous, through afternoon and night sessions. There will be a short recess for supper, and each messenger is requested to carry lunch with her. The presence of the clergy is desired at this meeting.

2. All messengers in Richmond will meet at St. Paul's Church Monday, December 2d, at 10 A. M., for a corporate celebration of the Holy Communion, at which time the Bishop will give commissions to all the messengers. The clergy are requested to bring their vestments and to go as a body into the chancel.

3. By action of clericus the daily celebration of the Holy Communion in the several churches will be at 10 A. M., for the special benefit of the messengers as they go out.

4. Letters are to be sent by the clergy before December 1st to all women to be visited in their respected parishes. This is an important part of the program, and should be done with much care—and prayer.

5. On the first Sunday in Advent, December 1st, by sermon or otherwise, the rectors are requested to explain the plan to the congregation and ask their co-operation.

6. The rectors are also requested to hold a closing service on the second Sunday in Advent, December 8th, and to follow up the campaign in the way best suited to their parishes.

7. It is respectfully suggested that the rectors plan in advance for definite methods of promoting systematic Bible study. The women appealed to will be greatly helped by some simple method that will guide them, at least at the beginning, in their Bible reading. This can be done in at least three ways: (1) by getting them to join the Women's Bible Class; (2) to join an organized Home Department; (3) to study the Sunday school lesson with and teach it to their children.

Thanksgiving Service.

Rarely has there been celebrated in Richmond a more beautifully impressive service than that which took place in Holy Trinity Church under the auspices of the Richmond Clericus, on the night of Wednesday, November 13th, when all the Episcopalians of Richmond assembled to render praise and thanksgiving for God's blessing in restoring peace to the world. Bishop Gibson and all of the Richmond clergy, with one or two exceptions, were present, making twenty within the chancel rail. All of the choirs in the city contributed their voices, so that eighty-five were in line besides the clergy. The church, which is one of the largest in the city, was packed, and great numbers were turned away, unable to find even standing room. The Rev. Dr. J. J. Gravatt, rector of the church, had charge of the service, being assisted by the Rev. Messrs. W. H. Burkhardt, Walter Williams, F. E. Warren, H. W. Sublett, Bishop Gibson saying the concluding prayers and pronouncing the benediction. Dr. Douglas S. Freeman, Ph. D., editor of the Richmond News-Leader, made the address, which was thoroughly appropriate and in keeping with the occasion, emphasizing especially the Divine power displayed in bringing about the speedy and victorious conclusion of the war so much sooner than had been expected according to human calculation.

It argues well for the great new era of unity and co-operation in which we are now passing that with all their clergy present Episcopalians should have invited a layman of another Church to be the speaker upon such an occasion, and that he should have consented; although being so popular a speaker, he must have been overwhelmed with invitations, as all of the Richmond churches were celebrating in a similar manner that night at their prayer meeting services.

The Rev. John L. Saunders, of Little Rock, Ark., who is now at the Virginia Seminary, has been appointed minister-in-charge of Christ Church Chapel, Braddock, for this session.

The Rev. John W. Quinton, formerly of Charles Town, W. Va., who is now living in Winchester, will have charge of Christ Church during the absence of the rector, the Rev. Dr. William D. Smith, serving in France as chaplain in the United States Army.

The Rev. R. C. Cowling, who has been rector of Wickliffe Parish, Clarke County, for the past eleven years, has resigned to accept a call to St. Margaret's Church, Westminster Parish, Anne Arundel County, Md. The address will be Route A, Annapolis, Md.

Consecration of the First Chinese Bishop—New Churches Consecrated—Diocesan Synod.

The week beginning September 22d was so crowded with interesting and epoch-marking events in the history of the Church in China that it is hard to condense an account of them all within the compass of one news-letter.

Thursday morning the seating capacity of the trains on the Shanghai-Nanking Railway was taxed to accommodate the crowds of Christians flocking from east and west to attend the consecration of Christ Church, Quinsan, and the annual meeting of the Men's Auxiliary. What gave the occasion a peculiar interest in the eyes of the Chinese was that the land on which the church stands had been bought and the church erected entirely from funds raised by the Men's Auxiliary of the Diocese of Kiangsu. This organization of Chinese laymen was founded thirteen years ago, and three years later it opened the station at Quinsan and has been supporting it ever since without any help from the mission. It was hardly less interesting to us missionaries as an indication of the missionary spirit and the capacity of the Chinese Church.

On the following Tuesday a congregation estimated at 1,000 filled the new Church of Our Saviour, Shanghai, which was to be consecrated that day. It was fitting that this, the oldest of our parishes, should be the first to build a church for itself without mission help.

The Drum and Fife Corps, made up of boys from the parish school, led the long line of clergy and choir from the vestry around outside the church to the front door, where the Bishop, having broken the seal on the door, led the procession into the church. At the service which followed, the instrument of donation was read by Dr. Tyau, of St. Luke's Hospital, and the sermon preached by the Rev. T. H. Tai, rector of St. Peter's, Shanghai. The music, led by the parish choir of about sixty boys and men, would have been a credit to most churches in America.

The next day, October 2d, will always be remembered in the history of the Chinese Church as the date of the consecration of the first Chinese Bishop.

The father of the Rt. Rev. Sing Tsen-seng was the first Chinese clergyman of the Church of England in Chekiang Province. The future Bishop was born at Ningpo in 1861 and was educated in the schools of the Church Missionary Society, graduating from Trinity College, Ningpo, of which institution he afterwards became headmaster. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Moule in 1889 and was advanced to the priesthood a year later. In 1911 he was appointed Archdeacon, the first Chinese clergyman to hold that office.

At the Diocesan Synod of Chekiang last winter Archdeacon Sing was elected Assistant Bishop to the English Bishop, the Rt. Rev. H. J. Molony, D. D., of that diocese, and the election was confirmed by the General Synod of the Chinese Church, which met at St. John's University in April.

The Bishop-elect was consecrated in the Church of Our Saviour, Shanghai, by the Rt. Rev. F. R. Graves, D. D., Bishop of Kiangsu and Presiding Bishop of the Church in China, with the English Bishop of Shantung, the Rt. Rev. Dr. Iliff, and the Canadian Bishop of Honan, the Rt. Rev. Dr. White, as co-consecrators. He was presented by Bishop Molony, of Chekiang, and Bishop Norris, of North China, who, with Bishop Roots, of Hankow, and Bishop Huntington, of Anking, joined in the laying on of hands. The sermon was preached by the Rev. P. N. Tsu, rector of the Church of Our Saviour. Bishop Sing's son, the Rev. Z. S. Sung, rector of Grace Church, Shanghai, acted as chaplain to his father. (The name is pronounced Sing in the Ningpo dialect, Sung in Shanghai, and Shen in Mandarin.) Another son of the Bishop's is a doctor on the teaching staff of the Yale Medical School in Changsha. Both of them are graduates of St. John's University and a third son is now a student in the same institution.

Most of the clergy of the Dioceses of Chekiang and Kiangsu were present at the consecration, with some from other parts of China, about seventy in all. It was an occasion never to be forgotten by those who had the privilege of attending the service.

I will just mention, in closing, the last notable event of the week, the meeting of our annual Diocesan Synod at St. John's University on Thursday and Friday. The Rev. K. D. Dzing, rector of St. Paul's Church, Shanghai, was preacher at the opening service, when Bishop Graves administered Holy Communion, assisted by the two secretaries of the Synod, the Rev. J. W. Nichols and the Rev. Y. Y. Tsu.

There is nothing in itself particularly thrilling about the routine work of any diocesan convention but the intelligent, business-like way in which this fine body of clergy and laity went about their labors fits in with the more dramatic events of this memorable week to give a picture of a church that has "found itself," that realizes its responsibilities and is honestly trying to fulfill them, and is thereby becoming more and more the light and hope of this great nation of China.

Meeting of Virginia Seminary Alumni.

The fifty-third semi-annual meeting of the Philadelphia Association of the Students of the Theological Seminary in Virginia was held November 7, 1918, at the Galilee Mission, 823 Vine Street, the Rev. NEWARK.

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Rev. Francis H. Richey, formerly rector of Trinity Church, Asbury Park, has entered upon his duties as rector of St. George's Church, Vailsburg, N. J. The Asbury Park Press, in a recent editorial, says in part:

"Rev. Francis H. Richey will be best remembered here, perhaps, for his vigor. His was not merely a pulpit vigor, but also a street vigor, if that expresses the idea of the man who gets about a great deal among his neighbors, including those outside his congregation. He preached a straight religion. He preached patriotism, he lived it, he worked hard for the country he loved.

As a church executive, he set Trinity's affairs in order. He brought Trinity folk together not merely as church people, but as neighbors.

The good wishes of hundreds of friends will go with the Rev. Mr. Richey in his new work.

ARKANSAS.

Rt. Rev. Jas. R. Winchester, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. E. W. Saphore, D. D., Suffragan.

In view of the great blessing which has come to the world through the power of God in the cessation of hostilities, the Bishop requested that the Church in the Diocese observe Sunday, November 17th, as a day of special thanksgiving, as proclaimed by the Governor of the State. A form of service was set forth by his authority.

Rev. Henry F. Kloman.

The Rev. Henry F. Kloman, D. D., dean of Gethsemane Cathedral, Fargo, writes from France:

"Mine is a work of stimulus and interest—to visit and look after the spiritual, moral and social welfare of the sick and wounded boys.

"There are eleven hospitals in Beauvais, all French except our own American Red Cross hospital, which is run by American doctors and nurses. Some of our American boys are placed in French hospitals where there are specialists to care for their particular type of trouble; but naturally, most of our boys are sent to our own Red Cross hospitals.

"It is my privilege and duty to visit all of these hospitals, doing what I can for the French, but particularly looking after our own. I am the only chaplain in this section. There are many calls for services with the American units connected with the French army. Frequently I travel forty miles to administer the holy communion, hold services, readings, prayers, little talks with one or several; supplying material comfort where possible; assisting the doctors occasionally with dressings or operations; taking last messages from

INTERNATIONALIZATION.

"Daddy, my youngest Teddy bear has to go to France today," said a little six-year-old daughter to her father.

"Why does your Teddy have to go to France? And why is it the youngest one that is going?" inquired daddy.

"He has to go to be a Teddy for a little girl in France, and the youngest one must go because the oldest one has lost his eyes, but my youngest one has both his eyes and can squeak."

It was a slight incident, but it is vividly expressive of the times.

The family of this little six-year-old mother is becoming an international family. Many mothers have given of their best for other countries, and the process is only just beginning.

"The President is going abroad to work for world peace" (newspaper headline).

Here it is again! There is a precedent as old as the country that a President should not go outside of the United States, but what are precedents in these great times? Are not the nations of the world about to become members of a great League of Nations, which hereafter shall control international relations and make this world not only "safe for democracy," but safe for "peace on earth and good will toward men."

"Internationalization." It is a big word, but it is not any bigger than its meaning. It stands for a great new era, and you and I, whoever we are, are privileged to share in these times.

It is reported that just after we entered the great war that General Pershing said: "I would rather live now, and have a share in the events about to transpire, than to have been the dominant figure in any other period of history." That was before he had been selected to command our expeditionary forces, and of course before he knew how great a share he would have in the coming events.

Today, from the six-year-old children to the President of the United States, we have an opportunity to help in the shaping of a new world.

Let us make November, 1918, victory month in our own lives as well as in the world at large, and resolve that we shall think in larger terms, more of others and less of self.

In announcing the terms of the armistice to the United States Congress, President Wilson said: "To conquer the world by arms is to make only a temporary conquest; to conquer the world by earning its esteem is to make a permanent conquest. We must be patient and helpful and mindful above all of the great hope and confidence that lie in the heart of what is taking place."

"Be patient and helpful." Here is where you and I come in and can do our share as we travel the broad road that the world is treading today, the road that leads to internationalization.

LOOKING FORWARD.

The following statement, drawn up in 1914 and 1915 at the Henry Street Settlement in New York, is so applicable to the present time that we quote it in full:

By the eight million natives of the warring States living among us without malice or assault one upon another, we would leave the occasions of fighting no longer for idle war boards to decide.

By the blow our forebears struck at barbarism when they took vengeance out of private hands, we would wrest the manufacture of armaments and deadly weapons from the gun-mongers and powder-makers who gain by it.

By those electric currents that have cut the ground from under the old service of diplomacy, and spread the new intelligence, we would put the ban upon intrigue and secret treaties.

For we hold that not soldiers, nor profit-takers, nor diplomats, but the people who suffer and bear the brunt of war, should determine whether war must be; that with ample time for investigation and publicity of its every cause and meaning, with recourse to every avenue for mediation and settlement abroad, war should come only by the slow process of self-willing among men and women who solemnly publish and declare it to be a last and sole resort.

With our treated borderland, three thousand miles in length, without fort or trench from Atlantic to Pacific, which has helped weld us for a century of unbroken peace with our neighbors to the north, we would spread faith not in entrenched camps, but in open boundaries.

With the pact of our written Constitution before us, which binds our own sovereign States in amity, we are convinced that treaty-making may be lifted to a new and inviolable estate, and become the foundation for that world organization which for all time shall make for peace on earth and good-will among men.

With our experience in lesser conflicts in industrial life, which have none the less embraced groups as large as armies, have torn passions and rasped endurance to the uttermost, we can bear testimony that at the end of such strife as cleaves to the heart of things, men are disposed to lay the framework of their relations in larger molds than those which broke beneath them.

With our ninety million people drawn from Alpine and Mediterranean, Danubian, Baltic and Slavic stocks, with a culture blended from these differing affluents, we hold that progress lies in the predominance of none; and that the civilization of each nation needs to be refreshed by that commingling with the genius and the type of other human groups, that blending which began on the coast lands and islands of the Aegean Sea, where European civilization first drew its sources from the Euphrates and the Nile.

With memories of the tyranny which provoked our Revolution, with the travail still upon us by which our people in turn paid for the subjection of another race, with the bitterness only now assuaged which marked our period of mistrust and reconstruction, we bear witness that boundaries should be set where not force, but justice and consanguinity, direct; and that, however boundaries fall, liberty and the flowering-out of native culture should be secure.

With America's fair challenge to the spirit of the East and to the chivalry of the West in standing for the open door in China when that empire, now turned republic, was threatened by dismemberment, we call for the freeing of the ports of every ocean from special privilege based on territorial claim—throwing them open with equal chance to all who by their ability and energy can serve new regions with mutual benefit.

With the faith our people have kept with Cuba, the regard we have shown for the integrity of Mexico and our preparations for the independence of the Philippine Islands, we urge the framing of a common colonial policy which shall put down that predatory exploitation which has embroiled the West and oppressed the East, and shall stand for an opportunity for each latent and backward race to build up according to its own genius.

By our full century of ruthless waste of forest, ore and fuel; by the vision which has come to us in these later days, of conserving for the permanent uses of the people the water-power and natural wealth of our public domain, we propose the laying down of a world policy of conservation.

By that tedium and monotony of life and labor endured by vast multitudes until, when war drums sound, the wage-earner leaps from his bench, and the harvester forsakes his field, we hold that the ways of peace should be so cast as to make stirring appeal to the heroic qualities in men, and give common utterance to the rhythm and beauty of national feeling.

By the joy of our people in the conquest of a continent; by the rousing of all Europe, when the great navigators threw open the new Indies and the New World, we conceive a joint existence such that the achieving instincts among men, not as one nation against another, nor as one class against another, but as one generation after another, shall have freedom to come into their own.

The Loom of Life.

It is a seldom thought that every one of us carries with him a mystical loom, and we are always weaving—weave, weave, weave—this robe which we wear, every thought a thread of the web. We weave it, as the spider does its web, out of its own entrails if I might say so. We weave it, and we dry it, and we cut it, and we stitch it, and then we put it on and wear it; and it sticks to us. Like a snail that crawls about your garden patches and makes its shell by a process of secretion from out of its own substance, so you and I are making that mysterious solemn thing we call character, moment by moment. It is our own self modified by our actions. Character is the precipitate from the stream of conduct which, like the Nile delta, gradually rises solid and firm above the parent river, and confines its flow.—Alexander MacLaren.

Sunday Next Before Advent: The appropriateness of the Sunday lessons will, it is hoped, be obvious without any elucidation. The regular week-day lessons give way, of course, on the morning of the 28th, the evening of the 29th, and morning and evening of the 30th, to Thanksgiving Day, St. Andrew's and the eve. Attention is called to the lessons for first Sunday in Advent as being those for two years ago, only morning and evening selections interchanged, the same plan to run through the next two years, in order to give "onecers" an opportunity to hear all the Sunday lessons. The rest of this article, which concludes the series, will be devoted to some remarks on the plan of the New Lectionary in the light of two years' experience. Until the sub-committee shall have met and conferred and submitted their revised report to the entire Commission, the present writer begs to give his own judgment. It is, in brief, that the plan is sound and edifying, but that some revision will be required as to details. For instance, the use on Friday of this week of Ezekiel 47:1-12 collides with practically the same selection for the evening of St. Andrew's. Again, it will have been observed that Isaiah 66:1-23 on the evening of twenty-fifth Sunday after Trinity is duplicated too soon on Monday and Tuesday of this week and again as Old Testament alternate for next Sunday evening. Very strenuous objections have been made to the extensive use of the Levitical law during the twenty-fourth and following weeks after Trinity of this year, and even to the use of Leviticus at all, on the ground that in Christ Jesus we have been delivered from the bondage of the law. It is difficult to see how any intelligent Christian, knowing anything of the Old Testament as fulfilled in the New, could bring so sweeping a criticism as this latter; and the idea seems entirely sound that in order to give a picture of Jewish life after the Exile, we should paint in, at least in large outlines, the law; but it is freely conceded that this has been overdone and will no doubt be corrected in the Commission's final revision. The serious student of this Lectionary is urged to absorb one proposition, and that is, the plan is a very flexible one and admits of many variations of detail. For instance, the desire of some for outstanding Sunday lessons independent of any historical course can be met by the system of Alternates; and this concession is made without at all surrendering the contention that no one can really understand the Bible who does not know it in its historical development; and, really, the use of the Scriptures for devotional purposes solely, or the idea that devotion itself ought to be separated from intelligence and the knowledge of historical revelation, is one that ought not to be countenanced.

This same principle has influenced the Commission in the large use of the Apocrypha. It is possible that this, too, like Leviticus has been overdone; but that can be easily remedied. One plan under consideration is to condense the use of Maccabees and Ecclesiasticus during the latter half of the second year and to give a more topical treatment, using the Canonical Scriptures, to the week days. This brings up the question of the right use of Job; and perhaps the Prayer Book arrangement of it in Lent is, after all, the best; and it might well be omitted elsewhere.

We Give Thee Thanks.

Lord of the full and barren field,
The famine years and bounteous yield;
Lord of the rich and of the poor,
Whose love through life remaineth sure,
We give Thee thanks.

Lord of our life and of our death,
Of endless years and fleeting breath;
Lord of the day and of the night,
Of sweetest peace and fiercest fight,
We give Thee thanks.

Lord, who dost understand our fears,
Our deepest joys and saddest tears,
Thou who hast walked the way of life
And passed beyond its fevered strife,
We give Thee thanks.

For visions bright of Thy dear face,
For upward yearnings of our race,
For deathless love that conquers time
And leads the soul to thoughts sublime,
We give Thee thanks.

That Thou, O Lord, indeed art there,
Thy love and mercy everywhere;
Thine ear attuned to hear us plead,
Thy strength sufficient for our need,
We give Thee thanks.

Their Thanksgiving Guests.

"Do you know, dear," said Mrs. Gardner, coming into the library where her husband sat reading, "that I am afraid we have been very remiss in the training of our children."

"In what way?" inquired Mr. Gardner, looking up from his book with a glad look of welcome in his eyes for his wife.

"Why, I heard Harry giving three cheers because he saw by the calendar that Thursday week was Thanksgiving Day, and when I asked him why he was so glad, he replied, 'because it was a holiday.' I then asked little Ned what Thanksgiving Day meant and he answered 'turkey.' Mabel added, 'and mince pie.' And so it occurred to me to find out what the day meant to each one. When Jack came in from school I said, 'What is next Thursday, Jack?' and he shocked me by saying, 'the day we all eat too much. Even Edith, when appealed to, declared it was the day we had all we wanted and more than enough.'"

"Well, isn't it all that?" laughed Mr. Gardner.

"Of course, it is, dear, but Thanksgiving should mean so much more. The children talked as if it were the only day in all the year that we have anything to eat, when you know we have enough and to spare always. I fear we have all, old and young, drifted into a way of regarding Thanksgiving as a feast day only for gratifying our appetite, and that we are forgetful of all the year's blessings."

"Well, little wife, what do you propose to do—give us prison food this Thanksgiving and make us realize what a loss of our blessing would mean?"

"Why, no," replied Mrs. Gardner seriously, "but I thought instead of having our feast all to ourselves, or inviting our rich relatives, who could have us as much at home, that we would invite some poor unfortunates to dine with us."

"Quite a fine idea, my dear. I guess we are all rather selfish in our joys, so go ahead and make your plans, and whatever you say shall be done."

The next morning Mrs. Gardner made her proposition at the breakfast table and the young people made no objection.

"How many guests shall we have, mother?" inquired Mabel, "and will you get old ladies from the Old Folks' Home or children from the Orphanage?"

"Neither," said her mother. All institutions have a good dinner on these occasions; so we will look up some that would not have a treat of any kind—the destitute, the lonely, the stranger. There are seven of us. By putting all the leaves in the table, we can easily accommodate fourteen. So let each of us seek out one guest to dine here on Thanksgiving Day."

"Oh, mother," exclaimed Edith, who was at the romantic age and loved secrets, "let's not tell one another whom we invite, just for the fun of it, and see how many surprises will walk in on us Thanksgiving Day."

"Do you think it is safe to trust the children to make their own choice?" inquired their father.

"Why, I believe we will let them try. It will be a lesson to them to seek out needy cases, and I am sure they will be more mindful of their own blessings in future when they see the distress that is about us on every hand," Mrs. Gardner replied and then proceeded to call attention to several needy families that she had heard of and to tell of the loneliness and isolation of many.

"Munsy," said little Ted, "what makes God give us so much and some people nothing? Does He love us the best?"

"No, my little lad," said Mrs. Gardner, putting her arms about him. "God loves us every one, but some are more fortunate than others, and God means for us to share our plenty with them, and He helps others through us. God depends upon us to scatter His sunshine and blessings and to spread His gospel."

The children had great times making their selection, hinting, telling their initials, etc., but not a soul really knew of any guests that were coming but his or her own.

When the festal day arrived, the table groaned under the burden of good things—a steaming brown turkey stuffed with oysters, rice like grains of snow, creamed potatoes, green peas, yellow yams, artichokes, cranberry sauce, jelly, pickles, chicken salad, and the odor of mince pies from the kitchen, and fragrant coffee. Great bowls of tempting fruit and beautiful flowers graced the table, sideboard and mantel, and all the house wore a festive look.

No one was surprised when Edith's guest walked in, a poor seamstress, who often came to sew by the day for the family, and whose tired face lighted up with pleasure at the cordial greeting that awaited her.

Jack's guest came next—the little bootblack who had a stand near his father's store and who had washed his face until it shone up to the roots of his hair, but he had a line of demarcation there and had entirely forgotten to ply his trade on his own shoes. He seemed greatly embarrassed, but Jack's grasp of the hand and an invitation to play marbles soon set him at ease.

Next came old Mrs. Joals, who took in washing by the day to support her little brood. All knew that Mrs. Gardner had brought her, for she had sent the little children there every year with a Thanksgiving basket.

Harry's friend was the night watchman, and when asked the next day why he had chosen him, he replied "Why, you said ask someone who is lonely, and who could be lonelier than a night watchman, who never has a soul but bats and cats to keep him company?"

Mr. Gardner introduced his friend then, a drummer who could not get home to spend the festal day and who seemed more than grateful for the hospitality extended him.

Mabel paced the floor nervously for fear her motherless schoolmate would not show up, but she did at last and Mabel ran to meet her just as an electric carriage stopped at the gate. She almost forgot her little chum in the excitement, for she ran in exclaiming, "Who do you think is getting out and coming in our gate? Rich old Mrs. Tucker! What can she want here today of all days?" But little Ted was bounding down the walk and in a few moments came in the parlor with Mrs. Tucker leaning on him, exclaiming, "Here's my company, mother." Mrs. Gardner endeavored not to show the surprise she felt and gave a warning glance at the other children.

Now, Mrs. Tucker was considered hard and forbidding, and, knowing her great wealth, no one ever had an idea that she would accept an invitation to a dinner of this kind, but as little Ted said later, "I would like to know who could ever be more lonely than old Mrs. Tucker? No children, no friends, her house all shut up, and all by herself every day in her electric carriage, not even anybody to ride with her." Every Sunday she came to church in her electric coupe alone, walked up the church aisle alone, and out again, never acknowledging a greeting with more than a formal bow. Everybody seemed afraid of old Mrs. Tucker and stood in awe of her; so all the family wondered how little Ted ever had courage enough to ask her to dinner.

Mrs. Gardner was very much afraid the old lady would be offended when she saw the guests. The younger children found it hard to keep from giggling, the other guests looked disconcerted, and both Edith and her mother were nervous; but Ted determined to do the honors; so he took Mrs. Tucker's bonnet, brought his chair close to hers, and immediately began to show her his new top and to chatter away as if he had known her all his life. When dinner was announced, Mr. Gardner ushered all the guests in, and, after the blessing, Mrs. Gardner said in her sweet, tactful way: "We planned this day as a surprise to each of us as well as our friends. God has given us so much to be grateful for, we thought it a pity to celebrate alone; so each of us decided to invite some friend that would perhaps be lonely on that day, and not one of us knew whom the other would bring. We are so glad to have every one of you and we want you to feel perfectly at home."

And they did. Nothing breaks down reserve more quickly than a good, hearty meal. Mr. Gardner's drummer-friend proved very entertaining, with a fund of anecdotes; the little seamstress was dimpled and smiled; the night watchman's hearty laugh echoed through the room; old Mrs. Joals fairly beamed, and every child's face was bright and joyous. Even old Mrs. Tucker smiled benignly, and when she went up the stairs to put on her wraps, she said, "God bless that kind little heart in the breast of your Teddy boy, Mrs. Gardner. He saw through my loneliness. True, I have wealth, and I could buy many Thanksgiving dinners, but of all your guests, even to the very poorest, none could have been lonelier than I. I have no one to love me or care whether I live or die; perhaps it's my own fault; but this feast of yours has taught me a lesson. You have the right idea. I am not going to be unhappy and lonely any more. It is my turn to entertain next; so I want all of your family and every guest to come to a Christmas tree at my house. Let each one bring some one else who is sad and lonely, and even then I won't have enough; so I will send little Ted out to find others. He knows how."—Mrs. G. S. Brown, in Christian Advocate.

Thanksgiving.

I will extol Thee, O God, my King,
And I will bless Thy name forever
and ever;
Every day will I bless Thee,
And I will praise Thy name forever
and ever.

—145th Psalm.

The writer of that beautiful Psalm was very happy when he bore witness to the loving kindness of Jehovah. We trace his joy in every line. Are not our hearts made glad when we indulge in thanksgiving? May not this happiness become a very real experience in our own lives?

There are days when it seems impossible to cultivate this spirit. Distress, suffering, loss eat into our very souls. Ingratitude, or breach of faith on the part of those from whom we had hoped better things, possibly bring a tinge of bitterness and discouragement. Our own mistakes may produce anxiety in once quiet minds; yet after all is added up and the balance struck we find that there is reason for glorifying God. Is His generosity not beyond our deserts? Can we measure it?

Although human nature may sometimes seem all awry, and our own souls not attuned to God's sweet music as they might, although the world becomes exhausted with sin and drinks its cup of sorrow to the dregs, let us be thankful that there is good everywhere, and that so many men and women the world over desire to flee to God for daily help. The purple hills and sapphire mountains are symbolic of the lofty shelter enjoyed by those who look beyond the narrow circumstances of their lives to their high refuge, Jesus Christ. Surely the note of thanksgiving should become magnificently triumphant when a Saviour is our theme!

It is good to make and maintain the resolution that not once a year, but every day we will offer the simple sacrifice of praise. This uplift of spirit never fails to steady us. The finest spiritual and material dividends are returned to those who habitually invest in emotions of gratitude. The thankful heart is the optimistic heart. With sheer delight we can accept the language of John Oxenham:

For all Thy ministries—
For morning mist, and gently falling dew;
For summer rains, for winter ice and snow

For whispering wind and purifying storm,
For the rift clouds that show the tender blue;
For the forked flash and long, tumultuous roll;
For mighty rains that wash the dim earth clean;
For the sweet promise for the seven-fold bow;
For the soft sunshine, and the still, calm night;
For dimpled laughter of soft summer seas;
For latticed splendor of the sea-borne moon;
For gleaming sands, and granite frontled cliffs;
For flying spume, and waves that whip the skies;
For rushing gale, and for the great glad calm;
For Might so mighty, and for love so true

With equal mind, we thank Thee, Lord!

"Whom Shall I Send?"

These critical and crucial times are testing us all in a hundred different ways, testing our faith, our courage and powers of endurance, testing our patriotism, testing our capacity for service and sacrifice. It is not individuals only that are being tested at this crucial time. Nations, governments, institutions, nay, the very Church of Christ itself, are being tried. If, out of this awful welter of slaughter, out of this confusion and strife, right ways of thinking and acting, righteousness and truth, are to prevail, if the world is to be better, if the kingdom of God is to come upon the earth, which, after all the sacrifices that have been offered, we most earnestly hope and pray will be the result, the leaders in Church and State must be strong men and true, men of vision, men of faith, men of fearless readiness to proclaim the right and the true way, men of zeal and ability to lead men in the true and right way, courage enough to break out of old ruts and to discard the rags of threadbare customs, which have proved ineffectual, men courageous enough to stand firm against all opposition for principles which cannot change and must be maintained, men big enough to think little of the dignity of office and much of its responsibilities, men great enough to be willing to serve, unselfish enough to be ready to give themselves for the good of others, ready to lose their lives that they may find them in service, men who love and fear God, ready to stand on God's side four square to every wind of opposition, ready to strive their utmost at whatever cost to help forward His Kingdom on earth; for that alone—loyal allegiance to God, loyal obedience to His laws, whole-hearted surrender to Christ—will bring lasting peace to the blood-stained earth. That alone will cause war to cease in the world, and bring harmony, charity, righteous dealing between nation and nation, between man and man, bring real prosperity and happiness. God is calling for such men. "Whom shall I send, who will go for us?"—Bishop L. W. Williams.

Thoughtful Boy.

He was a good little boy, and about thoughtful. It was during of dry weather, and he the great scarcity the country. He came to his mother and slipped his hand into hers.

"Mamma," he said, "Is it true that in some places the little boys and girls have not enough water to drink?"

"That is what the papers say, my dear."

"Mamma," he presently said, "I'd like to give something for those poor little boys and girls."

"Yes, dear. What would you like to give?"

"Mamma," he said, in an earnest way, "as long as the water is so very scarce, I think I ought to give up bein' washed."—Farmer's Advocate.

Thanksgiving Prayer.

Fill Thou my heart with gratitude to-day—
For every friendly word and kindly smile;
And e'en the smallest blessing 'long the way
That cheers my saddened heart a little whole.

I thank Thee for the sunshine and the rain,
I thank Thee for my laughter and my pain;
I thank Thee for the common things of life,
When want, and need, and poverty are rife.
I thank Thee, Lord, that grief can't always last;
That there's an end to sorrow's darkest day;
Then give me gratitude for pleasures past,
My joys that Thou sawest fit to take away.

The treasures that were lent me for awhile
And then recalled—O help me, Lord, to smile
And say, "Thy will be done," sincere and true;
And give me work these empty hands can do.

For all my cruel sorrow and mistakes,
I humbly offer thanks to Thee to-day,
If thus I've learned to soothe a heart that aches,
Or turn some wanderer's feet back to the way
That leads to home, and heaven, and peace, and God.

Thus only, can I thank Thee for the rod—
To help another mourner to bear his loss—
Thus only, can I learn to kiss Thy cross.

Being on the Lord's Side.

How many there are today pretending to be loving both God and the world, men and women trying to touch the things that they should hate, and yet pretending to be living in the closest friendship of Jesus Christ? It is easy to put on the garments, but it is easier to see through the thin, mocking of them the true impossibility of compromising living. Just so truly, are laid down in world are at war. Compromising contrariety lives are things He has told us we are obedient to love. We must choose between the evil one of the world and the overflowing love of God.—Robert E. Speer.

Harvest.

Long in the strange, dark underworld,
The little waiting seed lay curled;
Then, fed by sun and rain and dew,
They felt their life stir—and they grew.

2.

And now the golden-harvest day
Fulfills the hope of March and May—
The joy forecast in summer's prime Blesses the happy harvest-time.

3.

O Thou, whose sunshine brings to birth
All the fair things of Thy fair earth,
Sow in our waiting hearts the seeds
That have their fruit in noble deeds.

Ted's Museum.

M. J. Jenkins.

"Oh, mother," said Ted, his eyes shining, "if I could only have that little house at the end of the garden for my own!"

We were walking in the garden, Ted and I. The house he wanted was at the end of a narrow path that wound through the shrubbery. It had been built for a tool-house, but we did not now need it. It was about ten feet square, and had, beside the door, a small window for light and air. There was nothing in it but a wooden bench.

"Just see how fine it is," said Ted; "perfectly strong and good, and real clean, if it were swept out. That's a dandy bench; and you know, mother, I could make a table, and shelves to go all round the walls, and some cabinets, if you gave me that big box in the barn and those odds and ends of boards the carpenter left the other day. Can't I have it, mother?"

"What do you want to use it for?"

"A museum."

"A museum! But you have no curiosities to put in it."

"You give me the house," said Ted, "and I'll find things to put in it; you'll see."

I said he could have the house and I gave him the key. He at once set about fastening it to a leather strap and a large piece of wood that there might be no danger of losing it. Then he ran away, with a yell of delight, to find Jimmy Brown, his best friend, to help him fit up the shelves and other improvements. They brought the boards and box and some nails over, and the carpenters' tools Ted got for his birthday, and had a great time all the afternoon sawing, matching, fitting and working. At last they had the shelves had a round table made, and they called paper (left over from work. The cabinets which I gave Ted to work on. I made them some paper and white a great time as paper-hanging a room), they washed the window I made a day I the muslim curtain for it; and I gave them a red geranium in a pot to keep on the sill for an ornament, on condition that they watered it daily. The floor being carefully swept, they stained it with some left-over floor stain I had; and then I hunted up an old braided rug of grandma's for the centre. I can tell you I have seen worse-looking houses than that; and the best part of it was, nobody had to spend a cent on it. For, of course, no one wants to be spending cents just now, when they ought to be saving them for Thrift Stamps.

The next day being rainy, they stayed indoors and made two very good cabinets, with glass doors, out of our window panes. The door-knobs were made out of spools. I gave them a cover for the table, of bleached muslin, with a blue denim border. That matched the wallpaper.

In the afternoon we went up in the garret and looked to see if there were any curiosities that could be spared up there. We found an old book in which the S's were all like F's, the cover calf-skin and the leaves marbled. It had some maps in it, where the unknown parts of countries were covered with fearful looking animals and two-headed men, and it was called "Travels in Affyria." This was a good beginning, a real curiosity. We also found an old hour-glass which was once used to tell the time, the sand with which it was filled taking exactly an hour to run from the top of the double bulb into the bottom, through the tiny passage allowed; after which you just turned it upside down and the same thing was repeated. They used to use them in school-rooms.

When the rain was over the boys went out to hunt curious rocks and pebbles down by the river. They found some pretty ones, and a flint Indian arrow head. They put these in one cabinet, and when Ted's aunt came home from the seaside she brought him a large box of shells, scallops, pearly mussels, biscuit fish, bachelors' buttons, star fish and dainty shells. They were lovely, and they filled the other cabinet.

Ted's uncle sent him a German helmet, which is the chief treasure of the museum. But now that school has opened there is hardly a day he does not bring home something rare and strange. Whenever he sees a school-mate have something that strikes him as queer or interesting, he trades with him for it. And all his friends look out for "finds" for him. Sometimes it is a strange leaf or a beautiful flower that can be pressed and kept under glass. Sometimes it is a stamp or a coin.

Of course, what he has now is just a beginning, but he will get together a great many treasures by and by, and then he will have regular exhibition days, and all the admission pennies will go to the Red Cross.

Nutmegs.

It was the morning of Thanksgiving Day at grandma's, in the country; and the kitchen was the most interesting place in the house; at least, that was the way it seemed to little Jessie, who his bothered grandma more than she obliged her. The hired man had an

the only place in the house where a man might warm his toes! Of course, it was the only place where a man might sit on the wood-box and whittle while he smelled good things baking, and watch grandma and Jessie's mother and Aunt Aggie stepping about preparing the Thanksgiving dinner.

The most fun of all for him was to see how the workers had to keep dodging little Jessie. She was plainly "underfoot" that morning, and the hired man knew that he, too, was in the way.

"Now, what can I do to help?" little Jessie asked for perhaps the seventeenth time.

"You may grate the nutmeg on the custard pie," grandma answered.

"What's a nutmeg?" asked little Jessie.

"This is a nutmeg," answered grandma, and she put a nutmeg in one of little Jessie's hands, and a nutmeg grater in the other, and showed her what to do with them.

The hired man quickly saw that little Jessie could not grate a nutmeg, although she tried hard, and he was afraid she would drop the nutmeg grater in that custard pie. That is why he offered to help her.

"Come, come," said little Jessie's mother, laughing; "please let me do it, and you two skip into the other room and keep the poor old cat company!"

Jessie was disappointed until the hired man said, "You remember, Jessie, about how I sailed before the mast." The little girl knew that was the beginning of a story hour, so she gladly accompanied the hired man into the big dining-room, where the two sat before the fireplace ready for a pleasant time.

"Did you ever dig up any custard pie nutmegs when you were in foreign parts?" inquired Jessie.

"Dig them up? No, indeed! How could I? Why, Jessie, nutmegs grow on trees. When I was sailing the South Seas, many a time away off in Sumatra I have seen nutmegs growing. Mayhap now I have seen the blossom of that very nutmeg we were about to sprinkle over that custard pie. There isn't a prettier sight growing than a nutmeg tree covered with fruit. The branches spread out in a wide circle like this," and the hired man spread his arms around until he hit the cat on the nose: she was asleep on the sofa. The hired man said, "Excuse me, missus," to her, but she "meowed" at him. When Jessie stopped laughing he went on to tell her more about nutmegs.

"There isn't a lovelier fruit in the world to look at than the nutmeg," said he. "Its shell is a beautiful cream color, so it looks like a peach. When the shell bursts open you see the little nutmeg circled by crimson mace."

"Mace!" exclaimed Jessie; "what is mace?"

"Mace is a spice and it is the second coat of the nutmeg," explained the hired man; "and I ask you to believe what I tell you when I say that a nutmeg, with the mace, and the peachy shell and green leaves, makes the prettiest picture you can imagine!"

Just then came the sound of horses' hoofs on the snow and the jingle of bells, and Jessie clapped her hands and shouted, "I know a prettier picture; I know a prettier picture. It is all my cousins coming home to grandma's in a big sleigh for Thanksgiving Day!"

"And I know another pretty picture," answered the hired man, as he snatched his cap so he could go and take care of the horses; "it is sprinklings of nutmeg on custard pie!"

Then the door burst open, the cousins rushed in and the fun began; but there were no games in the farm-house until Jessie had told all the children that nutmegs grow on trees away off in Sumatra.—Frances Margaret Fox in Sunday School Times.

Winter Quarters.

"Where's the crawling caterpillar?
Sound asleep in his cocoon.
Where's the bee, so bright and busy?
Dreaming in the hive of June.
Where's the snail and where's the turtle?
Safely buried in the ground.
Where's the woodchuck, where's the rabbit?
In their burrows they are found.
Where's the thrush, and where's the robin?
Singing 'neath the Southern sky—
Where's the bear and where's the squirrel?
In their hollow tree they lie.
Where's the ant, that careful worker?
In her underground abode.
Where's the eight-eyed spinning spider?
In a crevice snugly stowed.
Where's the bat that ranged at midnight?
He is in his winter sleep—
In his cave he hangs head downward,
And he never takes a peep.
These and many other creatures
Hide or drowse the winter through.
But when spring has once awakened
They are up and stirring too."

Unseen Blessings.

The people on the crowded street stopped and held their breath as the speeding touring car leaped up on the sidewalk right in the path of the two girls hurrying across the street to escape it. A sudden swerve of the chauffeur, a switch to one side just in time, and the car shot past, grazing the skirt of one of the girls.

Panting and flushed, the two girls stood on the curb. The by-standers' faces expressed relief at the narrow escape, while they joined in indignant protest at the reckless driver speeding away in the distance.

"How we ever escaped, I don't know," panted one of the girls.

"It was only God's providence," answered the other reverently, as they made their way slowly and thoughtfully down the street. "That was the nearest I ever came to being run over. When I saw the car dash up on the sidewalk we were making for—right in our path—I thought there was no escape for us. It was God alone who saved us."

"I wonder," said her companion, thoughtfully, "how many times He saves us from danger when we don't know about it? This time we saw how wonderful it was, but I wonder if there are not other times when we have just as great deliverances and never know."

"Yes," agreed her companion, "I saw a man crossing the street the other day when a car just missed him. He was walking along with his head down, evidently much pre-occupied, and the car coming up behind him just missed him by an inch or so; but he did not seem even to see it, went on the same way—head down, evidently lost in thought."

"I believe God saves us from danger many times when we don't know about it," answered her friend. "How much we have to thank Him for!"

Is it not so with each of us? We thank our Heavenly Father for the things we can see, for the blessings He sends us, for the times He saves us from harm and danger, but do we know how many times He does? Do we realize the dangers which beset us, unseen, every day of our lives? Do we realize the pitfalls of temptation He guards us from, knowing that we are not yet strong enough to meet them?

Let us, then, thank God for the unseen, the unknown, blessings, as well as those which we see and know!—Anne Guilbert Mahon in East and West.

Uncle Robert's Pumpkin Plan.

It had been a perfect stay-out-of-doors day. Halstead and Phil Morrison had just come from the field in the big "bumpy" red truck wagon, with Uncle Robert, and were helping him unharness the strong, gentle team of horses, which had already given them so many fine rides over the splendid large farm.

"My!" exclaimed Halstead, as the boys started towards the house for supper, "I wish Floyd Tucker and Ted Lockwood could have the good times we're having."

"So do—I," added Phil, generously. "And I'd like also to see Bob Bently have a bit of our fun. Gee! 'twould be—great!"

"It would be just dandy if we could box up some of it later to take to them, each one, when we have to go back to Paxton to school," was Halstead's deliberate response, as Uncle Robert and the two boys entered together the cool, inviting kitchen to wash.

"If you can't take them the experiences you've had on the farm, you can box up, literally, something when you do leave, that will give the fellows you mention a good time at home," remarked Uncle Robert, mysteriously; "something that will furnish them lots of fun," pouring out a quart dipper of hot water into the bright tin wash-basin before him.

"What?" questioned both boys, eagerly.

"Pumpkins," returned Uncle Robert, promptly, with a twinkle in his eyes.

"Pumpkins—for a good—time!" exclaimed Phil, wonderingly.

"Oh, you mean to make pies of," and Halstead looked at Uncle Robert quizzically.

"No; not this kind," and Uncle Robert stepped to the roller-towel near the door. "They're too hard to raise for that! Whoever heard of pumpkins, with names grown on them, used for pies!" with a merry laugh. "Just common ones are good 'enough to be eaten."

"But I don't understand," declared Phil, plainly puzzled.

"Nor I," put in Halstead. "Named pumpkins! I never heard of that kind."

"It's the sort we used to make Jack-o'-lanterns of, your father and I, when we were boys," explained Uncle Robert, reflectively. "And we used to have some great surprises with them every fall."

"But can we—"

"Surely," and Uncle Robert and the boys sat down to the table.

Neither Halstead nor Phil ate much, so interested were they in what Uncle Robert called his "pumpkin plan."

"We'll have to begin to prepare them," directed Uncle Robert, "a long time before Hallowe'en; indeed, many weeks. That's why I am suggesting it now, so early in summer."

"After the pumpkins begin to get large as, say, a two-quart dish, you'll want to select the roundest ones—the ones to be named."

"I don't understand what you mean by 'named,'" said Phil, in a quandary.

"Do you just call them some name; is that what you mean?"

"No; the plan is to have the name grow on them, as I've hinted before. That's the point where the mystery comes in," replied Uncle Robert.

"I—I don't see—"

"It's this way," resumed Uncle Robert, smiling. "As soon as the pumpkins are about grown, or fully so, before they begin to turn yellow, you must start to name them. One mustn't wait too long, to get the best results."

"You can tell them; let me see if I can remember! Yes; I think so. One of them is to be Floyd, another Ted, and—"

"The third Bob," interrupted Halstead, excitedly.

"Very good. The first thing to be done is to cut these names in a piece of cloth; that's better than paper. Then one of the pieces of cloth containing a name may be pasted on a green pumpkin."

"The name part will be exposed to the sun, you see, and so will become in a few days a rich golden yellow. That part of the cloth from which the name is cut will protect the portion of the rind around the letters from the light, and that, accordingly, will remain green, a green background for the yellow letters of each boy's name."

"Won't that be a surprise!" declared Phil.

"I should say so," agreed Halstead, emphatically. "Can we do it!"

"Certainly," consented Uncle Robert.

"Good!" exclaimed both the boys at once.

"Another thing you must be careful to do to ensure success, cautioned Uncle Robert. "There must be some large deep boxes taken into the field, which will have to be placed over the pumpkins every night, to keep the dew off the cloth. The pumpkins must also be covered up with boxes during a rain-storm. This mustn't be forgotten."

"We'll not forget," promised Halstead and Phil, promptly.

"My! won't Ted, Bob and Floyd be surprised, in the fall, when they see their namesake Jack-o'-lanterns!" and Halstead could not conceal his delight at the thought of the fun in store for them.

"I should say they will," agreed Phil, quickly. "Uncle Robert, your pumpkin plan is splendid!"—Selected.

Of Pins.

The bad bumble-bee has a pin in his tail;
Mosquito has one in his nose.

The dear little kittens
Have pins in their mittens,
And, ouch! There are pins on the rose!

So if you are little and chubby, and round,

Wherever you wander or go,
The pins begin pricking
And stabbing and sticking.

They think you a cushion, you know!

The Four Little Kittens.

Louise Gilman, Aged Seven.

Once upon a time there were four little kittens who lived with their mother. One day one of them ran away from her mother and the other three kittens ran after her. The mother called and called, but they did not answer. They ran way into the forest until they came to a house. There was a woman on the doorstep peeling apples; they all wanted them. The woman called them to her and they came and had some milk. The kittens lived there all their lives.

The Little Squirrel.

By Ruth Cockerille, Aged Ten Years.

Long, long ago, when I was but a little girl, I visited Hampden-Sidney. There were two big old trees that looked as if they touched the sky. And in those two trees there lived families of squirrels. They were both acorn trees. The little squirrels had a good time in those big trees. One day while I was there a little squirrel was crying because somebody was after his children. Either a snake or a cat. He cried for the longest kind of time, but now he's all right. They play around the tree just like children do on the ground. I wish I were a squirrel and could jump from limb to limb and go around the tree trunk like they do. Sometimes they go on the roof; then we can hear the pitter-patter of their feet. The back is of beautiful light gray and white; and the long, bushy tail is as pretty as can be; and underneath, the stomach is as white as snow. Their homes were in those two big trees and there are other squirrel homes all over the place.

I found a hole in the ground where a little squirrel had dug out a nut. That is the only one I have ever seen. I have no more to tell, so will now stop.

Answer to last riddle: The flag.

The Remarkable Hen.

Scarecrow was a remarkable hen. To begin with, she was remarkably queer-looking, for the feathers on her neck stuck up like quills, and as for the feathers that should have been in her tail, they weren't there at all! But Scarecrow was remarkably good-natured. And though Frank and Bertha couldn't help calling her Scarecrow, they liked her best of all the hens.

Scarecrow was feeling very unhappy. She stood under a tree, while thirteen wee fluffy baby chicks peeped and fluttered about her. Everybody said they were the prettiest chicks in the yard. They were Scarecrow's first family. Frank and Bertha expected her to be fairly bursting with pride.

But it wasn't hard to guess why Scarecrow was unhappy. The children meant well, to be sure, but they didn't understand a hen's feelings. They were afraid that Scarecrow might take her family into the road, where they would get hurt, or that she might venture too near the pond, where the babies would drown. So with a stout gingham rag they had tied Scarecrow to the tree.

The other hens stopped and stared and made unpleasant remarks. They weren't tied to trees! And what comfort is it to have the finest children in the yard, if people are going to call one a simpleton?

But Scarecrow was not a simpleton. She knew better than to take her precious children into the road or near the pond. She decided that she wouldn't let any gingham rag make her unhappy. She had her eye upon an empty dry-goods box near the barn. So, though the other hens stopped and stared, Scarecrow paid no attention, but pecked away busily at the rag.

They had reason to stare later, for at last Scarecrow pecked the knot to pieces. And maybe she didn't turn her back on those other hens then, and stalk away, as she wished!

The chicks weren't very good at stalking, but anyway they turned their backs and scurried along with their mother, who was no simpleton. So they followed, as she led the way to the empty dry-goods box. It really made an excellent coop. When Scarecrow had settled inside, with her thirteen wee fluffy baby chicks under her wings, she felt that she was the happiest hen in the country.

That evening, when Frank and Bertha went to feed Scarecrow, they found only a tree and a pecked gingham rag. They ran out to the road

RHEUMATISM AND INDIGESTION.

Practically all physicians and medical writers are agreed that there is a close relationship between Indigestion and Rheumatism. This view is substantiated by the fact that Shivar Spring Water, which is probably the best American mineral water for Dyspepsia and Indigestion, relieves Rheumatism and the rheumatoid diseases such as Gout, Sciatica, Neuralgia and Nervous Headache. All of these diseases are probably related and all are probably due in whole or in part to imperfect digestion or to imperfect assimilation of food. Physicians who have studied this water and who have observed its effects in their practice believe that it relieves these maladies by rendering the digestion complete and perfect and thereby preventing the formation of those poisons which inflame the joints and irritate the nerves, and also by eliminating, through the kidneys, such poisons as have already been formed.

The following letters are interesting in this connection. Dr. Crosby, a South Carolina physician, writes:—"I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time, will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant of Savannah writes:—"I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began to use Shivar Spring Water and in a short time was cured."

Mr. Rhodoe of Virginia writes:—"Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were cured of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes:—"The water has done more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam of South Carolina writes:—"My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water, was entirely cured of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter of Virginia writes:—"Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

The Power Behind
Strong, Keen, Red-Blooded Americans

"To help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron," says Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital. Nuxated Iron often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down people in two weeks' time. It is now being used by over three million people annually, including such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, former Secretary of the Treasury, and ex-Governor of Iowa; former United States Senator and Vice-Presidential nominee, Charles A. Towne; General John L. Clemm (Retired), the drummer boy of Shiloh, who was sergeant in the U. S. Army when only 12 years of age; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson of the Court of Claims of Washington, and others. Nuxated Iron is dispensed by all good druggists everywhere.

Thrift Made Easy

Perhaps at some time in the past you have tried to save money but it proved a little difficult and you gave it up.

Do not, however, despair. There is an easy way.

To start Thrift but three things are needed:

- 1. A Savings Account in this reliable institution.
- 2. A determination to save so much each week or month.
- 3. Careful management in little things.

Those who practice Thrift naturally save money; in fact, it saves itself!

JACK WILLIAMS.

An Appreciation.

He was not a man, he was a child; he was not a soldier, he was a scout; he was just his mother's boy—but he was a hero! He died for others, and has left an example blazoned in "the light that never was on land or sea," that can never die; that glory which is shed only whenever and wherever an act of perfect self-forgetfulness is rendered. He did not know he was heroic; he did simply what he thought was right, and with him that meant the only thing to do. When he passed through the door that we call death, who can doubt what welcome he found from Him who said, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

RESOLUTIONS.

It is the sense of the vestry of St. Thomas Church, in its duty to take official notice of the death of our late beloved rector, Rev. Robert S. Carter, to say that his sudden taking away was a distressing shock to the entire community without relation to creed.

For ten years he labored lovingly and efficiently among us, and our church expanded and grew under his shepherding.

His fine qualities of heart and mind, added to his consecrated character, brought to him the esteem and value of his fellows without stint. We adopt the following resolutions:

First. That the death of our late valued and loved rector causes each of us a grief and sadness that is difficult to express.

Second. That the church has sustained a great loss; that his unselfish care and labor as its rector will long be gratefully remembered and cherished; and that his example as a Christian man will live on and on.

Third. That we extend to each member of his family our heartfelt sympathy and the assurance that we hold each of them in tender and fond remembrance.

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Southern Churchman and the county papers and to the family of Mr. Carter.

Christiansburg, Va., November 10, 1918.

The undersigned Committee of St. Thomas' Protestant Episcopal Church Sunday School of Christiansburg, Va., submits the following as to the loss sustained by the recent death of MISS ELIZABETH STUART.

Her death has broken the earthly chain of our Sunday-School circle. She has gone to join that goodly company which abides in eternal spring-time.

While this splendid life, an incense and an inspiration, has gone from among us, her noble spirituality abides.

It has been said, and we believe truthfully, that nothing good perishes; and so, with her well-poised, intellectual and spiritual life.

Without distinction without procrastination, love. Lavish it upon the poor, where it is very easy, especially upon the rich who often need it most: most of all upon our equals, where it is very difficult and for whom perhaps we each do least of all.—Drummond.

It has not been lived in vain. While the nobleness of her character would have commanded attention and admiration in a larger Sunday School, or in the multitude, it was especially felt in our sparse ranks.

"Greater love hath no man than this, that he gave his life for a friend," was the slogan of her life, and the fulfilling of that scripture when she tendered her services to nurse the sick soldier who lay dying in our town, far away from relatives and home.

"Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye did it unto me," was a missing link in humanity's chain until Christ came to minister as a servant unto those in need, and Miss Elizabeth truly lived that life.

Her loyalty to country and to Christ was no fifty-fifty measure, but was crowned with a devotion that was a benediction to all with whom she chanced to meet.

Therefore, we record that our Sunday School has sustained the loss of an earnest and efficient teacher, one who was ever faithful to every trust, and worthy, in every way, of our emulation.

MRS. MADGE LISTER MINER.

Whereas, God in His divine wisdom has called to her heavenly home, on September 29, 1918, MRS. MADGE LISTER MINER, wife of our rector, Rev. Edward Patton Miner, and our beloved leader, we, the members of Galilee Guild of Galilee Church, Virginia Beach, Va., have resolved to submit these resolutions of love and respect.

Resolved, That in the death of Mrs. Miner the Guild has lost its most efficient worker; its most able counsel and its most loyal friend.

That as choir leader and organist of Galilee Church for more than twenty years her untiring labors will be held as a sacred reminder that "many shall rise up and call her blessed."

And that as a community we have lost our most valuable citizen and patriot.

Resolved, That our heartfelt sympathy be expressed in this form to our beloved rector, and to other members of her family, and that a copy of these resolutions be spread on the minute book of the Guild and published in our Church papers.

OBITUARY OF JOHN MONCURE ASHBY.

MR. JOHN MONCURE ASHBY died August 13, 1918, after an illness of several months, at his home near Fredericksburg, Va., leaving a wife, Minnie Duval Ashby; one son, Charles Ashby, and a brother, Mr. James Ashby, all of Stafford county, Va. His death was felt as a great loss to a community in which he had spent his life, and in which he was universally loved. With our sorrow for the loss of one so loved by all comes the feeling of thankfulness for his life and influence which has left us and the world better.

Mr. Ashby was the son of Mr. James Ashby and Mrs. Fannie Ashby, and a nephew of "the Ashby brothers."

His character and personality were striking. He combined the gallant spirit of the Ashbys with the gentleness and charity of the Moncures, and the high principles and honor for which they both stood. In the highest sense of the word, he was a Christian gentleman.

Faithfully fulfilling every relationship of life, faithfully following Christ and leading others to Him, by his life and example, with his heart full of love of God and his fellow man, we know in him a man after God's own heart. As we laid him to rest in the summer lights and shades in the Moncure resting place, at old Aquia Church, that he loved so well, I felt God's presence as He seemed to smile down on His beloved follower and say: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord," and my grief was stilled.

F. GREENHOW SCOTT.
VESTRY OF ST. THOMAS' PARISH, BALTIMORE COUNTY, MARYLAND.

November 2, 1918.

On motion of the rector, the following minute was ordered entered upon the vestry record:

"The rector and vestry of St. Thomas' Parish, Baltimore county, Maryland, record with sincere sorrow the death on Thursday, October 24, 1918, in Baltimore, of the REV. PHILLIP HOWARD WILLIAMS, formerly assistant minister of the parish from July, 1913, to July, 1915.

"The first two years of his priesthood were spent here in earnest and successful ministrations to the young people of the parish and McDonough school. It was with great regret that we parted with him to go to Alaska, where he felt called to missionary work, and where he was stationed at Tanana.

"Desiring to offer himself for special duty among the soldiers, he came east early in October, and was almost immediately stricken with the prevailing epidemic of influenza and pneumonia.

"He was thirty-three years old, a native of Baltimore, a student at the Baltimore City College and at St. Stephen's College, Annandale, New York, and completed his theological course at the Alexandria School, Virginia. He was a great-grandson of Bishop Clark, the first Bishop of Maryland, and inherited many charming qualities of mind and manner which were consecrated with whole-hearted devotion to Christ and His Church."

A memorial window to the late Rear Admiral Thom Williamson, Engineer Corps, United States Navy, was recently dedicated in St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Haymarket, Prince William county, Va.

The subject chosen is "The Good Shepherd." This is peculiarly appropriate, inasmuch as Rear Admiral Williamson was noted for his love for children. He was the constant joy and comfort for his own children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, as well as for all others who came in contact with him. His generous love included all, especially any in trouble—old or young, great or small.

The memorial is erected by his widow and children.

the dying and writing their home folks; burying the dead. These are some of the many opportunities that come to a chaplain.

"Side by side in the Red Cross hospital lay a Roman Catholic American, an English Jew, a Canadian Presbyterian lad from near my own home, and two young Frenchmen—all five frightfully wounded. The head of one was nearly severed from his body, a hole as big as a silver dollar just missed the heart of another, a third was terribly mangled in thigh and groin, and the others simply shot to pieces. I held them while Dr. Campbell dressed the wounds.

"I shall never forget the cheerful courage and tender solicitude of each for the other, the lasting gratitude in the eyes of all as each was nursed back to life, and evacuated the base hospital."

The Installation of Dr. Smythe as Dean of Bexley Hall.

The Seminary year of Bexley Hall, the Divinity School of Kenyon College, Gambier, O., is well under way. The Seminary opened Tuesday, September 24th, with Evening Prayer in St. Mary's Chapel, conducted by President Peirce, of the college. Immediately after Evening Prayer there took place the inauguration of the new Dean, the Rev. George Franklin Smythe, M. A., D. D., Colburn Professor of Homiletics and Religious Education. It was a simple but impressive ceremony of induction. The President administered the oath of installation, and the Bishop of Ohio, who was present, gave the benediction.

Dr. Smythe was elected to his office last June by the Board of Trustees, the announcement being made at commencement. For thirteen years Dean Smythe has been connected with Kenyon College, serving as rector of the Church of the Holy Spirit, the college chapel as college chaplain, and as a member of the faculty. He was elected to the chair of Homiletics and Religious Education in Bexley Hall in 1916. In 1911 he was appointed to deliver the Bedell Lectures on the Evidences of Natural and Revealed Religion, his subject being "The God of Israel." Dr. Smythe is now engaged in writing the Centennial History of the Diocese of Ohio, a work undertaken by his predecessor, the late Dean H. W. Jones, D. D., Professor of Ecclesiastical History, Church Polity and Canon Law, which was cut short by his death. Dean Smythe's well-known patience, skill and untiring devotion to historical investigation give promise of the production of a work which will be of great historical interest to the Church in Ohio. All those who know the author are awaiting with interest the forthcoming work.

Dean Smythe assumed his official duties under very unusual and extraordinary circumstances, as was suggested by President Peirce in his installation address. For the first time in the history of Kenyon College every able-bodied student is under military discipline and training, and as the enrollment is unusually large the facilities of the college are being utilized to their utmost in an attempt to contribute to the common cause in the present crisis.

It is Dean Smythe's desire that Bexley Hall, which has already contributed a generous number of its students and alumni to the nation's services, shall not be behind the college in the faithful performance of the particular duties which have been allotted to it, namely: the preparation of young men for the serious work which will confront the Christian ministry of this generation. He is therefore doing everything possible to foster the same spirit of loyalty, self-sacrifice and devotion to duty that is displayed by the soldier in the training camp, and to this end he is receiving the hearty co-operation of the student body.

Thanksgiving Service.

On Monday morning a service of thanksgiving for the cessation of hostilities between the Allied forces and Germany was held in Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, the Rev. Dr. E. S. Travers and his assistant, the Rev. E. B. Andrews, officiating. It began in a very impressive manner by the singing of the Long Metre Doxology, followed by the rendition by the organist of the national hymns of Belgium, France, Italy and England, the congregation standing, ending with the hearty singing of the Star Spangled Banner. Then came the responsive reading of Psalms 46, 47 and 150, and the reading by the rector of a greeting sent by Bishop Whitehead from his sickbed in the hospital to his people, "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through Jesus Christ our Lord." The Thanksgiving Psalm for Victory from Forms of Prayer to be used at sea was read responsively, and America was sung. The creed and prayers for the country and thanksgiving and the Lord's Prayer followed, the service closing with "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." The "Mothers of Democracy" were present in large numbers, and occupied the front pews in the church. Dr. Travers asked the congregation to stand while they marched out bearing their banners and flags, "Jerusalem the Golden," and two other appropriate hymns being sung as they withdrew.

The church was filled to capacity, nave and three galleries, and before the conclusion of the service the side aisles were crowded with worshippers who had come in from the throngs that filled the streets. All through the day Trinity Chimes played patriotic hymns and songs, thus adding to the general spirit of jubilation exhibited on every hand.

No man can speak for God except he to whom God has spoken.—Ex.

Love for God and man both come into the heart at the same moment.—Ex.

Thanksgiving is only our annual time for saying grace at the table of eternal goodness.—James M. Ludlow.

God's blessing is limited only by the size of the vessel we take to Him. He always fills that to overflowing.—Ex.

It is a beautiful saying of the great Saint Ignatius: "Bear all, put up with all, even as God beareth with thee."

Sometimes we must go forward for Christ, and sometimes we must do a harder thing—wait patiently for Him.—Exchange.

The Christian should cultivate the habit of trusting in God, moment by moment, until it becomes as natural as breathing.—Ex.

Men who live for self never succeed in satisfying self or in quite satisfying anybody else; men who live for others in Godlike unselfishness have joy themselves while giving joy to others.—Henry Clay Trumbull.

The ever present thought of the greatness of God's love and the depth of man's need—it is this, and this alone, that can save us from the sin of the hard and thankless heart.—Lang.

"All experience is an arch where-through Gleams that untraveled world, whose margin fades
Forever and forever when I move."
—Tennyson.

To be angry about trifles is mean and childish; to rage and be furious is brutish; and to maintain perpetual wrath is akin to the practice and temper of devils; but to prevent and suppress rising resentment is wise and glorious, is manly and divine.—Watts.

I hear men speak continually of going to a "better world" rather than of its coming to them; but in that prayer which they have straight from the lips of "the Light of the World," there is not anything about going to another world; only of another government coming into this, which will constitute it a new world indeed; new heavens and new earth: "Thy kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."—Ruskin.

Grief should be thoughts lasting to the end.

—Aubrey de Vere.

The extension of the true influence of the Church depends upon the intensity of its spirit. Even when most conscious of its call to affect the whole range of national life, to bring within its fold the masses who are straying without, the Church must, by repeated acts of recollection, return to the great saying of its Lord, "For their sakes I sanctify myself."—Selected.

We are not our own masters; we are children and servants, and we depend upon the will of another. Our eating and drinking, our sleeping and waking, our holiday making and our labor—all should be done in the consciousness of God, our Father and Lord. The thought of God should sound constantly like low music in the background of our spirits, and should form the keynote of all our thinking, feeling and willing.—A. Theluck.

The will of God is done in Heaven without reservation. Each one of those who works the purpose of God does it with absolute abandon, holding back no part of the price, and we are praying that we may do the same in this world; that we may ask no bargain with God as to our surrender, but give ourselves entirely into His hands.

A New England minister was on a journey when suddenly the speed of the train was slackened, and in a short time it came to a standstill. After waiting a little he got out to inquire the cause.

"Is anything wrong with the engine?"

"No, she's a new engine As good as runs on any line."

"Coal given out?"

"Plenty of coal."

"Water run short?"

"Power o' water, but it ain't bilin'."

No lack of supply, but a proper degree of heat must be attained before the steam can work off.

"While I was musing the fire kindled; then I spake I with my tongue."
—Selected.

In a ministers' prayer meeting a brother put the question, "What, then, is the cause of so much prayerlessness? Is it not unbelief?" The answer was, "Certainly." But then comes the question, What is the cause of that unbelief? When the disciples asked the Lord Jesus, "Why could not we cast the demon out?" His answer was, "Because of your unbelief." He went further, and said, "But this kind goeth not forth save by prayer and fasting." If the life is not one of self-denial, of fasting (that is, letting the world go), of prayer (that is, laying hold of Heaven), faith cannot be exercised. A life lived according to the flesh, and not according to the Spirit—it is in this that we find the origin of prayerlessness of which we complain.—Andrew Murray.

Guilds and all Church organizations desiring to assist their treasury can find no better way than by representing the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN. And at the same time you will do a good work by placing the SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN in homes where there is no Church paper. Write to-day for full particulars.

SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN,
Richmond, Va.

All Arms of the Service Commend It
On account of its remarkable qualities it has been enthusiastically approved by the highest officials of the army and navy. The Inspector General of the army, Major-General John L. Chamberlain, describes it as "an excellent map" which "conveys a very clear idea of the situation." Rear-Admiral H. P. Huse, President of the Naval Examining Board, terms it "the most satisfactory thing of the kind" he has seen, and adds that he does not know "how it can be improved upon."

writes Charles S. Sloane, Secretary of the U. S. Geographic Board, Washington, D. C., who praises its size and scale particularly. The Aide to Brigadier-General Enoch H. Crowder, the Provost Marshal General, characterizes it as "an interesting and helpful map" and expects to "find it very useful" in his office.

"Its Publication is a Real Service to the Country," declares Daniel C. Roper, Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and Captain Roger Wells, U. S. N., Director of Naval Intelligence, speaks of it as "complete to the minutest detail." Vice-President Marshall has given it "a prominent position in his private office where he may consult it from day to day."

America's Highest Map Authority Endorses it. Chief Geographer B. B. Marshall, U. S. Geographical Survey, Washington, D. C., styles it "a fine piece of work in every respect and by all odds the best that I have seen. The shading scheme is graphic indeed, showing at a glance the track of the Hun in his effort to crush civilization under his cruel, inhuman control. Each home from which has gone a father, a son, a husband, or a brother, would certainly appreciate a copy of your Liberty Map, as would those who cannot go. By all means try to put one in each home."

A Clear and Thrilling Picture

The wonderful LITERARY DIGEST LIBERTY MAP shows at a glance how far the Huns have advanced, how much territory they occupy, the area of their latest "drives"; where our own American armies, shoulder to shoulder with our Allies, are fighting on the great Battle Line of Liberty, and makes plain the mighty task which confronts America.

An Index of More Than 12,000 Places

is supplied with each map. It is bound in a separate booklet with handsome map covers, and is packed with the folded map, in a strong square envelope pouch which can be used as a permanent container for both.

In Addition to the Western War Area

is a complete insert map of the whole field of operations, showing Russia, the British Isles, Spain, the Balkans, the Italian Front, the whole Mediterranean, and the Mesopotamian campaign.

Railroad and Highways

and thousands of cities, towns, fortresses, hills, and other places of military importance are shown with special care to secure completeness, convenience and legibility. The Limits of the Submarine Blockade are shown as well as the routes of the Air Raids which will be increasing rapidly in number and importance as the great new fleet of airplanes, now building, go into action.

Coal and Iron Areas

A special insert map is provided, showing the coal and iron areas in the countries included in the larger map and their relation to the abilities of the opposing nations to carry on the war.

The Coloring of the Liberty Map

is strikingly graphic and significant. The countries are clearly differentiated and all boundaries are made very plain. The great Battle Line of Liberty, marking the positions of the American and Allied armies, is shown in Red, White and Blue.

It Will Be a Great Satisfaction to You and an inspiration to your family, or to those who are working in your place of business, or to those who call at your office, to see, day by day, this unusual and eloquent LITERARY DIGEST LIBERTY MAP displayed conspicuously on your wall telling its wonderful story of the great fight for freedom.

Size 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 3 ft. 6 in. high

It is the only map which gives the American people a vivid visualization of the great war, and thus is calculated to rouse their patriotism to a still higher pitch and intensify their determination to see the war through to a victorious conclusion. It shows how a black cloud of frightfulness and terror has been thrust across Europe by the savage Hun; how it has swept over whole nations, scattering death and ruin in its wake. But now, from all the ends of the earth where men are still free, the Armies of Liberty have gathered at the "Frontier of Freedom," and are battling, driving back the savage hordes.

Have We Forgotten?

The King went forth a kingdom to obtain,
With promise to His own to come again;
The long, long years have passed, the
years of pain;
And yet He cometh not—
Have we forgot?

He bade us keep our hearts forever
pure,
And, following Him, to suffer and endure,
That we to Him might weary souls allure,
And He might tarry not—
Have we forgot?

He asked us for Himself to wait and long,
To turn our faces from the worldly thrang
Upward to Him, to whom our lives belong.
And yet He hasteneth not—
Have we forgot?

And thus the days pass by, we joy and sing,
We take His gifts—yet little to Him bring.
And speak no word of bringing back
the King;
And so He cometh not—
We have forgot.

—Henry W. Frost.

Comforting Our Friends.

As the number of homes increases into which the shadow of death has come because of the war, all the wisdom and insight we possess will be called into use should we undertake the role of comforter. Unfit though we may feel ourselves to bind up the bleeding hearts, we can hardly stand aloof when those about us are bowed down with sorrow. It is better to try to comfort them and to bungle seemingly rather than not to try at all. Even if we have had no recent experience of great bereavement, our lives should normally be so sympathetic with all who suffer as to enable us to be of some help in his sorrow to our neighbor over the way.

No nobler form of ministration to others exists than that of comforting them in their tribulations. If we pray for help to say the right word or to do the right thing, if we try to take upon our own hearts something of the loneliness and loss they feel, we shall surely serve their need, poor as our comforting may seem to us. We need not undertake to explain all the mysteries involved or to speak in conventional or extended terms. On this point Sir William Robertson Nicoll writes helpfully in the British Weekly: "People can speak to one another by their very silence, when silence means that the heart is too full for utterance. Our quiet presence and support bear up our friend in spirit, as we silently pray to God for him. It does not make the sufferer feel uneasy or constrained, as it would if we had no religious sympathy or if our visit were merely conventional. We may go to the house thinking, 'What shall we say?' We may leave without having said much or anything to the purpose. But it does not follow that we have failed. If our hearts have been deeply stirred, God gives the instinct to know when our poor friend cannot bear to be spoken to, when all he can take from us is the silent offering of our sympathy."—Exchange.

God's Opportunity.

We found great comfort and inspiration in the chance statement of an earnest man the other day that, after all, the great thing we had to do, looking toward the future and its problems, was to let God get into our life to guide and direct and inspire. In the first place, we did not have to drag Him in or to plead with Him to come, but only to make a way for Him to enter. And in the second place, we were absolutely precluded from thinking that the situation was too serious for Him to handle, or the problem too hard for Him to solve.

To any candid and thoughtful man the future for the race, as it looks to-day, is an uphill road, with all chances of a tragedy at the end. But it is just because we see it so that there is hope. Once more it will be true that man's extremity is God's opportunity. In the midst of our great perplexity and staggering difficulties, the great thing to do is to give God His chance. Once more it will be found that the Almighty is able to save men out of the great trouble into which their sin and neglect have brought them.—The Christian Guardian.

Another Chance.

A man named Peter stumbled bad,
Lost all the love he ever had,
Fouled his own soul's divinest spring,
Cursed, swore, and all that sort of thing;

He got another chance, and then
Reached the far goal of God-like men.

Your boy goes wrong, the same as he
Who fed swine in the far country;
He seems beyond the utmost reach
Of hearts that pray, of lips that preach;
Give him another chance and see
How beautiful his life may be.

Paul cast the young man, Mark, aside,
But Barnabas his metal tried,
Called out his courage, roused his vim,
And made a splendid man of him:
Then Paul, near death, longed for one glance

At Mark, who had another chance.

King David one dark day fell down,
Lost every jewel from his crown;
He had another chance and found
His kingly self redeemed, re-crowned;
Now lonely souls and countless throngs
Are gladdened by his deathless songs.

—Alfred J. Hough.

The Secret Place.

There can be no culture of the soul, no obtaining mastery over the forces of life in the hurry and rush of life, unless there be quietness and time; time for introspection, time for the contemplation of the ideal presented; time for the readjustment of the forces of life to the great master principals of eternity. How many of us Christian people have but little experience of getting nearer to God because of our daily occupations? To by far the larger number of us, in by far the greater space of time in our lives, our daily work is a distraction, and tends to obscure the face of God to us and to shut us out from many of the storehouses of sustenance by which a quiet, contemplative faith is refreshed. Therefore, we need times of special prayer and remoteness from daily work; and there will be very little realization of the nourishing power of common duties unless there is familiar to us also the entrance into the "secret place of the Most High," where He feeds His children on the bread of life.—Alexander MacLaren.

All to God.

Jenny Lind once said to John Addington Symonds: "I sing to God." Coming as it did from the heart, it was a fine expression. The famous cantatrice was deeply devout and these words expressed the secret of her soul. She had a vivid sense of God, a boundless joy in Him, and her music was the spontaneous acknowledgment of His presence and beauty. Why should we not do all the work of life in the same spirit? "I sing for God," "I plow for God," "I write for God," "I build for God," "I weave for God," and "I buy and sell for God." All that Jenny Lind sang was not strictly sacred; it was often, no doubt, secular and trivial. But she had ever a commanding sense of the heavenly Presence and sang to the God whose gladness filled her heart. So, whatever our tasks may be, we may serve Him day and night in His presence.—W. L. Watkinson.

"Apathists."

The word "pacifist" has been in vogue for some time, but the undesirable class of persons whom it designates does not by any means embrace all who are falling short of duty in this stormy and strenuous day. A writer in The Outlook has lately coined another expressive word that fittingly sets forth the attitude of not a few individuals—the word "apathist." Are there not many among us who may thus be classed at this time when the call is loud and clear for every man to do his best?

The Church, too, has suffered at the hands of "apathists" throughout its entire history. The only worthy service to either State or Church is a whole-hearted service.—Christian Advocate.

"THY KINGDOM COME."

We are living in a time of many and great changes. The remark has become almost trite and the fact is accepted as a commonplace, so little do we realize its full significance or allow it to affect our thoughts and purposes. If one who had died a short century ago were to revisit our earth, how he would be lost in wonder and admiration at our progress in science and invention and all the arts of civilization. Great would be our pride in showing him the things our hands have wrought and our skill acquired, making life less burdensome and far more full and fruitful than in his day and multiplying tenfold our activities and capacities and the returns thereof.

And suppose he should ask us, as doubtless he would, "What have you done in so wondrous an age to lift the real burdens of life, which are those of the heart and spirit? Is there less of sin, with its long trail of suffering and sorrow, less of ignorance and selfishness and falsehood, of moral degradation and spiritual death, than in the old days of the stage coach and the tallow dip?" Even so there is something we could say, for our civilization has not been wholly forgetful of these things. We have put the stamp of outlawry upon certain grosser sins which once flaunted themselves in open defiance of all decency. We have recognized in certain evils the enemies of human welfare and have taken means to curb if not to destroy them. Suffering is alleviated both by science and public charity. Sorrow is met by a wider sympathy, ignorance by education and a broader intelligence. Honesty and uprightness of life are growing in favor and idleness and uselessness are no longer marks of respectability. The average of life has been made longer, and, we believe, happier and more worthy, richer in incentives and opportunities, than in the olden times. Moreover, the world is being knit together in closer bonds. The blessings of our civilization are being extended to backward peoples. Men and nations are feeling their responsibilities to their fellows and the prerogatives of robbery and unbridled greed are no longer allowed. Peace and truth and right living and fair dealing are being more and more desired and striven for in both public and private life.

We think these and even greater claims can be justly made, and the facts should be recognized. Rightly weighed they will humble us, for our generation, even as our fathers, have fallen so far short of making our world, our social and political life and our private character and aims, what they ought to be and might be. But they are also significant signs and auguries, and would teach us, if we have the intelligence and the will to see, that the powers of evil are not so strongly entrenched in the world as to be invincible. Men have been persuaded otherwise. A spirit of pessimism, sometimes bitter, sometimes quite complacent, has possessed their minds and rebuked their aspirations for better things. "You cannot change human nature; you cannot control the appetites or avarice of men; you cannot correct these necessary evils that are eating like a cancer at the vitals of society;" how often have we heard, yes and believed, that sort of thing spoken with owl-like wisdom and parrot-like persistency as the very last word on the subject. The bitter derision which greeted the hopeful Christ in the house of Jairus, when "they laughed Him to scorn, knowing that she was dead," has followed Him down the ages. They had all the facts and all the logic on their side—these undertakers and hired mourners who were so familiar and friendly with death. But when they were all put forth, lo! the miracle! And surely if we can discern the signs of these times they are enough to cast out these emissaries of unbelief, to raise the morale of Christ's army, and to persuade us that the strongholds of evil and error are not impregnable, that even prejudice can be overcome by truth and inertia by the moving of the Divine Spirit. It would be nothing short of a miracle, men have said, if our social corruptions were cleansed, if our slums and other breeding-places of impurity were wiped out, if the prohibition of this or that evil thing could be brought about and would really prohibit, if the fact of Christian brotherhood would become a constraining and ruling reality in men's lives, if the Church would become united and exert its full force in the world, if the gospel should be given to all the nations. So be it; but is not this a day of miracles? Has any one been alive in the past two years and has not seen them? Is not the world standing on the tiptoe of expectancy to-day waiting for new miracles to come about at the bidding of men of faith and vision? For what is a miracle but a sign; a sign of the willingness of Divine omnipotence to work with and through the faith and energy of men for the good of man?

"Thy Kingdom come," we pray. The Church ought to enter her Advent season this year with a vigor of faith and purpose and expectancy beyond what she has known heretofore. That Christ shall come in His Kingdom should be not only her belief but her determination. Too long have God's people waited supinely, with a remote if not a skeptical interest, for the signs of His coming. Can they not see them to-day? Not the time and the season of an ultimate manifestation that God has set in His own authority, we have little to do with that; but a time of the coming of His Kingdom with power. It is a day of visitation. Nations and kingdoms are being strangely moved, and our own people have been shaken out of their lethargy, have been led with a united purpose to will and to do a great thing at the call of God for the betterment of the world. And the end is not yet. Greater things are being planned, the result of which no man can foresee, because the way for them is being opened and an urge for them is being felt which cannot be ignored. Is the Church to have no corresponding part in this mighty movement toward righteousness, unity and a larger, freer, more abounding life with renewed conquests of evil?

It is for every thoughtful, grateful Christian to consider with a personal interest the things which God wrought in these days, to feel his own part therein as he felt it when "doing his bit" with sincere patriotism to win the war, to maintain with the whole Church the high purpose and the unbroken front which we have seen to be possible as she goes on to other victories and other occupations of the territories of sin and Satan under the unfurled banner of the King, that His may be prepared on earth by a people "willing in the day of His power."

PRAYERS FOR THESE TIMES.

For Soldiers and Sailors.

O Almighty Father, Whose right it is to rule in the hearts of men, we commend to Thy protecting and constraining love all those who are now in the service of our country on land or sea. Keep them safe, we beseech Thee, from every danger, both of soul and body; give them Thy strength in every time of temptation; in Thy good time bring them back in peace to their homes. And as Thou hast given them victory over the enemies of our country, so we pray Thee to give them an abiding victory over self and sin. Make them to know and to confess the Saviour of the world, and send them forth into all their later lives as faithful soldiers and servants of the King of kings: Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

(Set forth by the Bishop of Harrisburg.)

For the Peace Councils.

Almighty and everlasting God, who by Thy Spirit didst preside in the council of the blessed Apostles; we ask Thee to be now with all those to whom is committed the great task of bringing the nations of Europe into a state of unity, peace and concord. Protect these Thy servants against all error, ignorance, pride and prejudice; and of Thy great goodness, so direct, sanctify and govern them in the discharge of their vast and sacred responsibility, by the mighty power of the Holy Ghost, that all the nations, kindreds and tongues of the world may be knit into a Brotherhood of peace and good will—honoring Thee in that they honor and serve one another; through Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace, and the Saviour of us all. Amen.

(Authorized by the Bishop of Washington.)

For the Work of Reconstruction and Restoration.

O God Almighty, who dost bring order out of chaos, light out of darkness, and love out of hate; give Thy grace and Thy wisdom to all the peoples of the earth, their rulers and their leaders, and enable them to build up and maintain in every nation, and throughout the world, the reign of justice and love. Teach them to look to Thy Son as Lord and Saviour, and in Him to find peace, security and freedom. Make the wilderness and the solitary place to be glad, and the desert to rejoice and blossom as the rose. Undo the heavy burdens; break every yoke: let the oppressed go free; banish sorrow and sighing, and bestow on all mankind everlasting joy; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

For Brotherhood and Unity.

O Lord God Almighty, overrule, we beseech Thee, the trials of this present time, to the blessed issue, beyond mere earthly peace, of restored brotherhood among nations, the enlargement of the Redeemer's kingdom, and the reunion of Christendom in one faith and love; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Here and There

A fine tribute to British justice was paid by Napoleon Bonaparte when he found it impossible to live in France and was afraid to go anywhere else on the Continent. He wrote to the Prince-Regent and said: "A victim to the factions which distract my country and to the enmity of the greatest powers of Europe, I have terminated my political career, and I come, like Themistocles, to throw myself upon the hospitality of the British people. I put myself under the protection of their laws, which I claim from your Royal Highness, as the most powerful, the most constant, the most generous of my enemies."

It remains to be seen whether William Hohenzollern will feel the same way about his continental neighbors and prefer going to England to trusting himself to them. If he does it is practically certain he will have to face a British jury.

The gallant conduct of the Jewish soldiers in General Allenby's army has sent a thrill through the Jewish race throughout the world. It is the first time that a Jewish military organization has fought in Palestine since the year 135, when they tried to defend their country against the Romans. Perhaps a Jewish army fighting in Palestine is only the preliminary to a Jewish government once more established in the Promised Land.

A million pounds of bread a day is the quantity consumed by our American soldiers in France. It is baked within easy reach of the men who require it. A city of tents marks the site of this huge camp bakery along the country roadside. The camp stretches over many acres which at one time was farm land, but is now humming with the activity of a huge productive industry. The memory of sights like this will long linger in the minds of our soldiers after their return.

The Governors of Kansas, North Carolina, Nebraska and Colorado have informed the Union Club, a prohibition organization of Cincinnati, that there is no doubt that the recently elected Legislatures will ratify the national prohibition amendment. It is almost an assured fact that enough States will take this action before the present dry provisions of the food conservation laws expire, to prevent the reappearance of alcoholic beverages in this country after June 1, 1919.

The Senate Committee investigating the charges against Senator LaFollette has decided that there is no grounds for expulsion. The recent elections whereby Senator LaFollette now holds the deciding vote on close questions in the Senate, probably influenced the members of the committee to come to this decision, as neither party now cares to offend the Senator from Wisconsin.

The United War Work Fund has gone over $200,000,000, according to the latest reports. This is the largest gift ever made to charity and is one of the most creditable features of the whole war to the people of the United States. The signing of the armistice, coming as it did in the midst of this campaign, might have curtailed the subscriptions had not our people felt the importance of giving to the world at large as well as for our own boys.

PROPHECY AND THE NEW PALESTINE.

Mr. Editor,—I find this in Thackeray's "From Cornhill to Cairo." Writing in Jerusalem in 1844, he says: "I have mentioned our fellow-traveler, the consul-general for Syria of the United States America. He was a tradesman, who had made a considerable fortune. His opinion is that the prophecies of Scripture are about to be fulfilled; that the day of the return of the Jews is at hand, and the glorification of the restored Jerusalem. He is to witness this—he and a favorite dove with which he travels; and he forsook home and comfortable country-house to make this journey. He has no other knowledge of Syria but what he derives from prophecy; and this (as he takes the office gratis) has been considered a sufficient reason for his appointment by the United States Government. As soon as he arrived he demanded an interview with the Pasha; explained to him his interpretation of the Apocalypse, in which he has discovered that the Five Powers and America are about to intervene in Syrian affairs, and the infallible return of the Jews to Palestine. The news must have astonished the lieutenant of the Sublime Porte, and since the days of the kingdom of Munster, under his Anabaptist Majesty, John of Leyden, I doubt whether any government has received or appointed so queer an ambassador.

The kind, worthy, simple man took me to his temporary consulate-house at the American missionary establishment; and under pretense of treating me to white wine, expounded his ideas; talked of futurity, as he would about an article in the Times, and had no more doubt of seeing a divine kingdom established in Jerusalem than you that there will be a levee next spring at St. James'. The little room in which we sat was padded with missionary tracts; but I heard of scarce any converts."

What would Thackeray say now, if he could be reached, about this "kind, worthy, simple man," with his "favorite dove," and no other knowledge of Syria but what he derives from prophecy? He would have to admit, I think, in view of the present situation in Palestine, that the United States Government was not far wrong in appointing this "queer" ambassador, "taking the office gratis." Only seventy-four years ago, and how unlikely it seemed! To Thackeray a mere dream. I was born in 1842. It is almost within my memory. What wonderful things are coming to pass! Can we doubt that the divine kingdom will be established in Jerusalem in due time, and even perhaps in a short time?

BISHOP RANDOLPH.

I.

As Pastor and Preacher.

Rev. Randolph H. McKim, D. D.

(The Memorial Address on Bishop A. M. Randolph, delivered in Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, by Dr. McKim, could not have in pamphlet form the wide circulation which it deserves. We are glad to comply with the suggestions of valued friends and republish the greater part of this valuable paper, only regretting the necessity of marring it by the frequent omission of whole paragraphs.—Ed. S. C.)

* * * It not infrequently happens that the tone and spirit of a man's life may be summed up in one word. Such is the man's life and such is his character that one word may stand as the symbol of his personality—the interpretation of his life. When I study the life of Alfred Randolph, one word leaps to my lips as the symbol of the man—Love—the love of Christ and the love of man.

All who knew him will agree with me when I say he was a peculiarly lovable man—so human, so responsive, so quick to understand, so broad in his sympathies, such a charming companion; artistic in his tastes; poetic, playful, full of music and full of humor, a faithful counsellor and a loyal friend. If he was like St. John in his loveliness and gentleness, he was like him, also, in the fiery indignation which would flame up in his soul against injustice or disloyalty to the truth of God.

I must not fail to add that he was a man of transparent purity of soul, another Nathaniel—"an Israelite, indeed, in whom there was no guile." And so truly Christian was he that we may say that all his gifts, all his aptitudes, all his splendid qualities as a man were swathed in the thought of Christ as in an atmosphere of light and glory.

Nevertheless, his soul responded to the beauty of the world. He saw the spiritual meaning of our human relations. He believed in the religion of common life. Nothing that God had made was in him common or unclean. The world, with its cares and its duties, its joys and its sorrows, was, he believed, God's training school for human souls—the best that could be. But all the while he kept himself "unspotted from the world."

Noble example was he of those familiar lines—

"There are in this loud stunning tide
Of human care and crime,
With whom the melodies abide
Of the everlasting chime—
Who carry music in their heart,
Mid dusky lane and wrangling mart;
Plying their daily task with busier feet,
Because their secret souls a holy strain repeat."

* * * As an organizer of parish machinery he may not have excelled—I do not know. Had he continued in the pastoral office, he might not have felt at home amid the busy hum of those multifarious activities of the more modern parish—the Institutional Church. Probably he would have met these demands on the time and strength of the rector of today with Nehemiah's reply; "I am doing a great work, so that I cannot come down." However that may be, we know that as guide, and counsellor, and pastor, and friend, and comforter of his flock, he did excel.

In times of sickness and sorrow and death he went in and out as a man of God charged with the message of divine consolation. His words, his prayers—all his ministrations—were a living echo of the Christian Hope of Immortality. And this blessed power of consolation was his for the reason that he could say with the Apostle: "We speak that we do know, and testify of that we have seen."

He spoke out of a living, vital experience. The gospel was a reality to him—Jesus Christ was real to him, yes, a living Christ, a present Saviour. And so that faith and that assurance which illumined his own soul communicated itself by a divine contagion to his people when he came to them in trouble as the messenger of God. He had a strong conviction of the value of family religion, and his presence must have awakened in many minds a like conviction. All his life he deeply felt the beauty and the power of the religion of the fireside. Only three years before his death he devoted a part of his address to his Council to this subject. "Family religion," he said, "is the seed-bed of religion in the Church and the home. If the fire has died out upon your family altars, the worship in your churches must progressively degenerate into a form of godliness, with the power gone. Religion in your home is the mother of religion in your church. It is the little streams from a thousand homes that swell into the River of the Church that make glad the City of God."

Let me next speak of him as a preacher. The description given by St. Luke of Apollos may well be applied to Bishop Randolph—"He was an eloquent man and mighty in the Scriptures." He had a high conception of the function of the pulpit. To preach Christ and His salvation was, in his estimation, a most exalted privilege and a most solemn responsibility. It demanded the exercise of his best powers of mind and heart. More than any effort of the advocate in the courtroom, or the orator in the Senate, or in the forum, the pulpit called for the highest and the best that any man could give. No one could listen to Bishop Randolph without realizing that he felt himself "a messenger, watchman and steward of the Lord," bearing a commission from on high, burdened with a message of solemn and holy import.

Undoubtedly his powers as a preacher kept growing as he grew older, because he was a thinker and a student to the end, and because his Christian character went on developing, and his sense of the power and the glory of the gospel grew deeper and stronger.

If we seek the secret of his power in the pulpit, we shall not find it, in my opinion, in his felicity of expression, or in the wonderful music of his voice, or in his oratorical magnetism, or in his admirable diction, or in the force of his reasoning, or in his tender appeal to the human heart. All these qualities and accomplishments he possessed, but the secret of his power as a preacher lay deeper; it was because he was a "God-intoxicated man," because Christ and His gospel were to him intensely real—yes, the very power of God and the wisdom of God!

The truth of the gospel as he saw it was so vast in its reach, so sublime in its significance, that it awed him—and filled him—and possessed him—and left no room for self. It carried him as on eagle's wings to the higher reaches of thought and feeling. To use the language of his friend, Phillips Brooks (who alone in the American pulpit surpassed him as a preacher), "He possessed the power by which a man loses himself and becomes, but the sympathetic atmosphere between the truth on one side of him and the man on the other side of him." He had "the inspiration—the possession of preaching."

He delivered his sermon as one indeed possessed—possessed with the power of the truth he preached. There was an atmosphere of God about him—though he was removed by the diameter of infinitude from sanctimoniousness. You felt as you listened to him that God was to him a living, an intense, an absorbing reality. As he stood in the pulpit he seemed as one who had come from God with his message. He had such a living, vivid sense of the greatness of God, of the nearness of God, of the love of God—it was so wrought into his own soul that when he spoke men could not but feel it too. I think an infidel could not listen to Bishop Randolph without beginning to feel his infidelity thaw out of him, as the ice-locked rivers are opened by the genial sun of approaching spring—not because he proved the existence of God, but because God was such a living reality to him.

* * * If you ask what were the prevailing themes of his sermons, I think I will not be in error if I say that there were two great foci around which his preaching revolved—the Incarnation, as involving the one full, perfect and sufficient sacrifice for the sins of the world. Thus, in one of his sermons, he alludes to the incident in Bunyan's Pilgrim Progress that when Christian came in sight of the Cross his burden of sin rolled away; and then he goes on to say:

"For sixty generations that has been the experience of countless souls who have come to Christ with the burden of their sins upon them. Their sins have been taken away. The memory of them has been obliterated. You will remember your sins, perhaps, forever, and the memory will but quicken your sense of the love and the mercy that have redeemed you. But when you come to the cross of Christ, the guilt of your sins, the condemnation, the burden upon your conscience—that will be taken away." I may add that in his interpretation of Scripture he was not misled by the letter, by the superficial appearance—no, he penetrated beneath the surface till he found the real meaning. Of this I will give one very brief example from a sermon written many years ago; it happens to be most pertinent to our own time:

"Some good people, who think dimly, argue from texts like these that Christianity condemns war—war per se, war under all circumstances. But that is a mistake which would land us in hopeless contradictions. Christianity condemns the motives which lead to war—cruel ambitions, heartless rapacity, greed of gold, the invasion of peaceful homes by the lust of conquest. But Christianity's condemnation of a war of aggression involves its justification of a war of self-defense. Christianity would be the first to condemn you of cowardice if you submit to national wrong and violence, if you refuse to put your life in jeopardy to defend your rights and your homes from violence."

PRAYER BOOK REVISION IN CANADA.

The Rev. Samuel A. Wallis, D. D.,

The Rev. Dyson Hague, D. D., of Toronto, Canada, a prominent clergyman of the Church of England in Canada, and a member of the Prayer Book Revision Committee, has contributed a very interesting account of the successful issue of the work of this committee to the Record, the old organ of the evangelical party in the Church of England. The work of revision occupied a period of seven years, and, as Dr. Hague says, "after a prolonged debate carried on under the gracious control of the Spirit of God, without acrimony or uncharity on the part of any bishop, clergyman or layman, the Church of England in Canada in General Synod assembled during the month of September last, in Toronto, adopted as a National Church the Revised Canadian Prayer Book. It is the old Church Prayer Book unimpaired in all its dignity and power, adapted to the use of the Canadian Church, with its freer and more independent life, and beautified and enriched by many alterations and additions."

The three important features found in the revised book are these:

1. The Athanasian Creed is allowed for optional use, and it can be used as an alternative at any time for the Apostles' Creed.

2. No definite praying for the dead is authorized by the Prayer Book.

3. The accustomed Prayer of Consecration in the Communion Service of the Church of England remains unchanged. This has been in use since the revision of 1552. There was some discussion about the permissive use of the American or Scotch form of the Prayer of Consecration, but this was ruled out. Dr. Hague states that the introduction of the Oblation and Invocation of the Holy Spirit into the Canadian service was never really considered as a possibility by the General Synod. "So drastic and revolutionary a measure as even the permissive use of the American Prayer Book Form would have precipitated a cleavage that would smelt irremediable disaster for the Canadian Church. At the same time it would be impossible to describe the relief that was felt by a large number of the clergy and laity when this most momentous decision was announced by the Primate, nor can any one forecast what a reflex influence they may have upon the Church of England throughout the world." Dr. Hague's words appear very strong and decided on this subject, but they are no stronger on his side than those in our own Church who have held that the addition of the Oblation and Invocation have been the greatest boon that has been conferred upon our Communion Service, when compared with that of the English Church. In point of fact, the act of consecration in the English Church is just as effective as the fuller form used in our own, and from personal knowledge of the Canadian Church we believe that Dr. Hague's words quoted above with reference to the feeling of a large number of the clergy and laity against the addition is undoubtedly true. Still, so far as our Prayer of Consecration is concerned, it must be remembered that the Oblation and Invocation not only bring us into harmony with the ancient Eastern and Scottish offices, but are of the greatest value in maintaining the spiritual side of the act of consecration, through the power of the Word and Holy Spirit, yet after that the gifts are still Bread and Wine. Our own form of Consecration has emphasized this fact along true Protestant and Reformed lines by changing the wording of the Scottish form, which at this point reads "Vouchsafe to Bless and Sanctify with Thy Word and Holy Spirit these Thy Gifts and Creatures of Bread and Wine that they may become the Body and Blood of Thy most Dearly beloved Son." Ours after the words "bread and wine," has this significant change, "that we, receiving them according to Thy Son our Saviour Jesus Christ's holy institution, in remembrance of His death and passion, may be partakers of His most blessed Body and Blood." This important alteration from the words of the Scottish rite clears our service from any danger of false interpretation which might assert, or at least imply, a material change in the elements at the time of Invocation. The true sense of the act of consecration is the solemn setting apart of the bread and wine from its common use to a holy use. Our Church is careful in its service to hold fast to this meaning. Thus while we strongly affirm with Dr. Hague the necessity of having one fixed Communion service without an alternate use in the prayer book of any particular branch of the Anglican Church, we realize that our service teaches the same doctrine, and therefore does not depart from that of the Church of England in any essential point. It must, however, be admitted that the prayer of consecration of the English Church has the advantage of brevity, for it ends with the words of our first paragraph, "Do this as oft as ye drink it in remembrance of me." It then changes the Oblation into a prayer to which our one post-communion prayer is the alternate.

In another article we will continue the consideration of the article of Dr. Dyson Hague on the Revised Prayer Book of the Canadian Church with some notes thereon.

THE GROWTH OF AN IDEA—MERGER OF LUTHERANISM.

"Visions not only do not die, but they compel and command lives. Thirty years ago there was a small group of visionary young men in old St. John's Church, the mother of many Lutheran churches of New York. None were either well to do or sons of families famous in city or church. They saw a vision of united Lutheranism in America, and went about attaining it. They did not see very far. Their vision was not even on the sky line. It was merely a case of putting to use such grit and grace as they possessed, as means of gaining more grit and grace, and putting the light of the vision they saw upon a candlestick of material achievement.

In old St. John's, still vigorous even if far down town, these young men founded in 1888 the Luther League of America, and one of their number later became its first national president. Another determined to enter the ministry. He was Frederick H. Knubel, reared in a common school in down town New York. He put his grit and grace to the test in two ways. One was to propose that the Luther League stand for Church unity. The other was to go to the Seminary at historic Gettysburg to fit himself for service in holy orders without much idea where his support was to come from, or where he was to work, or how.

Returning from the Seminary at Gettysburg, young Knubel was made the Rev. Frederick H. Knubel. The group of St. John's young men joined him, and together they founded, in a very modest way, the Mission of the Atonement, in upper Harlem, Manhattan. And so Mother St. John's in Christopher Street became a mother again. The Atonement grew, and its first pastor is its pastor still. It is now one of the great Lutheran churches of New York and therefore of America.

The other day, when three Lutheran bodies united, the air castle of the St. John's young men of thirty years ago had a substantial base put under it. At the great merger meeting the banner of the Luther League held the place of honor by the side of a service flag which bore the striking statement, "215,000 Lutheran boys helped democracy to win." And the first President of the United Lutheran Church in America, who gave the closing and compelling address at the merger meeting, was the Rev. Dr. Frederick H. Knubel. Visions live, and compel men to live.

The Great Commission

Board of Missions: Mr. King's Statement as of November First.

To November 1st we have received from—

Parishes	$ 595,059.51
Individuals	165,433.13
Sunday-schools	189,572.73
Woman's Auxiliary	86,425.17
Junior Auxiliary	14,071.66

Total$1,050,562.20

These receipts are for the first twelve months of this year's fourteen months' business. Justice and fairness will not permit comparison with the same period of last year, for then was ended our fiscal year, and contributions in the last month usually are the greatest. Such was the case a year ago.

This year's apportionment, fourteen-month period, is$1,676,467.00
To date, twelve months, we have received..... 1,050,562.20

Balance due$ 625,904.80

To meet this balance means a daily average contribution of $10,260.00 from now to December 31 next. We will not humiliate the Church by asking can she do it? But, of course, it is a vast sum (we know this) and there are also many other appeals for fabulous amounts. So far, not two-thirds of it has been given.

Undoubtedly, a large factor in the present situation has been the change of date for closing the fiscal year from September 1 to January 1. Considerably over a half a million dollars of the reserve deposits have been withdrawn and spent to meet the contracts of the Board of Missions. These reserve deposits serve the purpose of carrying on the Board's financial business during what is called the "dry period." But the time has come fully to return them, else what will happen next year? And next year begins month after next! These are the facts. Pray God the Church will respond!

GEORGE GORDON KING,
Treasurer.

November 1, 1918.

St. Faith's House: Training School for Woman Workers.

Now that the war is over, many women who have been doing direct war work will be free to take other positions. Never was there greater need than now for their help in the work of the Church. During the last year of the war almost no new workers have been sent out under the Board of Missions. Yet the number of vacancies in the work of the Church everywhere has increased. Some of the women who would be available are already trained. Others will need special training for service in the Home or Foreign Mission field, in rural or city parish work, or as directors of religious education.

The Woman's Auxiliary can answer the appeals for funds more easily than it can respond to the calls for women who are free to take positions in the foreign or domestic field. Yet some of our best women missionaries were working in the Woman's or the Junior Auxiliary before volunteering for life work. Many more young women in our parishes (Sunday-school teachers or Junior leaders) would be ready to give themselves for the work in more distant fields if they knew the need and the course to take in preparation.

To meet this need, the New York Training School for Deaconesses is prepared to take in a special class on February 1, 1919. The training is especially planned to prepare women for all forms of Church work as well as for the office of deaconess.

The names of any young women who would be particularly interested in this opportunity are desired. For an answer to any questions about the course, write to the head of St. Faith's House, Miss Edith R. Hopkins, 419 West One Hundred and Tenth Street, New York City.

What is the Advent Call?

Let us begin by saying what it is not. It is not the work or responsibility of the Woman's Auxiliary, but of every woman in the Church. It is not a call which comes with every Advent season, but a special call here and now. It is not an academic or theoretical talk, but a definite, practical demand which the Church has, after due consideration, made upon her women.

The great challenge of this time of peace is clear and definite. We claim that we have been fighting this world war to protect the weak, to restrain the strong, to establish the reign of unselfishness and social justice. Do we mean this? Are we prepared to prove it by our deeds? If we do, then truly this year of grace 1918 is the acceptable year of the Lord. The Church is planning to send forth messengers from every congregation who will make a personal and individual appeal to every woman in their congregation to help on this coming of the Kingdom. Women are fond of saying, "I can't talk in public." These messengers will call on specific women and in strictest privacy will carry the message.

The Intercessors: As we believe in prayer we believe in asking God's blessing on this great undertaking, and so a specified number of women will be appointed in each congregation who will pray for the messengers as they carry the message.

What is the Message? It is an appeal for a fresh and vivid rededication of ourselves to God's service in order that we may make His Kingdom come.

How shall we express this purpose? First, by Sacrament; second, by prayer; third, by Bible reading.

Who is to carry the message, and when? Women from every Episcopal congregation in all the world, during the first week in December, from 1st to 7th.

Why is this Article Written? To bespeak your interest in the movement. To ask that such as are visited will receive the messengers as duly accredited agents of the Church specially appointed for this purpose. To ask that all who read this, whether men or women, will join with the specially appointed intercessors in earnest prayer for the immediate establishment of the Kingdom of Heaven.

Church Intelligence

Church War Commission.

The following communication has been received from the Adjutant General. It will explain itself:

The Rev. Henry B. Washburn, Executive Secretary, the War Commission of the Episcopal Church:

The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of the 18th instant, in regard to the appointment and assignment of chaplains, and in response you are informed that, under War Department orders, due to the cessation of hostilities, no more chaplains will be commissioned nor assigned to duty overseas.

E. A. BROWN,
Adjutant General.

Adjutant General's Office, Washington, November 20, 1918.

In other words, the War Department has issued an order that no more chaplains of any denomination will be commissioned. At the time of writing it is impossible to say what action the War Department will take in regard to the demobilization of chaplains who are already overseas or of our commissioned chaplains who are on duty in camps in this country. The War Commission will keep the public in touch with matters like this through the Church papers. The War Department has sent an approved list of civilian chaplains to a representative in Washington of the General War-time Commission of the Churches, who in turn have forwarded this list to the War Department. The War Department is holding this list inasmuch as it is not willing to publish any list until all the churches have furnished the names of their approved chaplains. It now looks as if the plan of the War Department were to approve of a comparatively short list of chaplains, to send the names of these men to the camp commandant and to allow the commissioned chaplains under such commandants to summon these men for occasional services as the commissioned chaplains may deem wise. In other words, a renewal of the former status of the civilian chaplain does not seem likely.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee, held on November 20, among the appropriations made was one of $5,000 to Bishop Tucker for a church building about to be erected at Hilton, Va., in the midst of the shipbuilding community.

Five thousand dollars were appropriated to Bishop Perry for the salary of the Rev. Arthur L. Washburn, war-time assistant at Holy Trinity, Paris, and for expenses incident to the work of that position, such work being principally among soldiers and sailors.

Seven thousand dollars to the General War Time Commission of the churches to be used for the purpose of meeting the current expenses of inter-church work, including the cost of the campaign of publicity, pending the time when funds will be available from the joint campaign and with the understanding that the amounts thus advanced will be credited in apportioning the total budget.

Six thousand eight hundred and fifty-five to the Girls' Friendly Society to finance their war work in part between the present moment and the time when further funds will be forthcoming after the appeal to the churches about the first of February.

King Albert's Personal Message to Christian America.

A message of gratitude from Albert, King of the Belgians, conveyed by Major Pierre Blommaert, Protestant Chaplain in Chief of the Belgian Army, has been delivered by him to the Administrative Committee of the Federal Council:

"To the Christian people of America I express my deep gratitude for all that you have done for my people, for the sympathy you have shown us in the relief of our dire distress and the material assistance you have rendered. But I am especially desirous that you feel my sincere appreciation of the great moral influences that have come from your association with us and the spiritual inspiration which you have given us."

A fitting reply was at once ordered cabled to King Albert.

Major Blommaert is under commission from his Government to make a speaking tour of the United States to interpret to the American people the spirit of the Belgians and to convey to them the gratitude of both King and people. He is accredited by the Synod of the Belgian National Church, which is the State Protestant Church, as well as by his army and Government. While in our country Chaplain Blommaert will visit the entire country under arrangement by the various local Federations of Churches.

A Message On Behalf of the Churches of Christ.

In this day of victory and of peace, the Christian Church recognizes and declares, in behalf of the nation, the deep gratitude of our people to Almighty God. It was God's hand which led our fathers across the seas to found here a new nation. It was His hand which enabled them to gain and to preserve our unity and our freedom. And now, it is His hand which has wrought this great deliverance, which has overthrown falsehood and wrong, and which has opened the way of liberty to mankind. Let us not boast of our great resources nor of our outpouring of men and wealth in the war. In grateful acknowledgment of the deeper sacrifices of others and of the clear vindication of the righteous rule of God in the affairs of men, let us thank the people who have suffered more than we and the Lord of Hosts for victory and peace. Yet, let us thank God also that we were accounted worthy to share in the great struggle and that in the day of need we did not falter nor fail. To God be all the praise.

And now we turn to the more difficult tasks of peace. "The morrow of victory," said Mazzinni, "is more perilous than its eve." "Gentlemen," said Clemenceau to the senators of France, "we are now coming to a difficult time. It is harder to win peace than to win war." The same God who brought us victory in the war alone can help us to win victory in peace, to conquer evil in our own hearts, to overthrow wrong and selfishness wherever they are met in our national life and to achieve God's righteous will in the redemption of human society.

It is the work of the Christian churches and of Christian men now as it has been their work in each new era of our national history to hold up the ideals of Christ for the individual and for the nation and to provide in Christ Himself as the Lord and Life of men the power needed for the present age.

In new and resolute purpose, with renewed faith in the sure sovereignty of God in the world and His willingness and power to work through men, let us take up the tasks of the new day in the face of its demands and of its dangers. Let us as Christian men heed the old appeal, "Be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, for as much as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

Military-Peace Celebration at Christ Church, Norfolk.

The port of Norfolk witnessed at Christ Church last Sunday, November 24, what was probably one of the most striking peace celebrations that this country has seen, and one semi-official in its character.

Six pews of wounded United States marines and sailors from overseas, with several uniformed Salvation Army "lassies" from the French front, were the guests of honor, and were all invited after the service to the homes of the congregation. The Assistant Secretary of War, admirals, colonels and other officers, State and Federal judges and officials, city officials and consuls of the Entente Allies were in attendance. Hung in the church, furnished by the local naval station, were flags fourteen feet long of our twenty-three allies against Germany: Belgium, Brazil, China, Costa Rica, Cuba, France, Great Britain, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Italy, Japan, Liberia, Montenegro, Nicaragua, Panama, Portugal, Roumania, Russia, San Marino, Serbia, Siam. An enormous United States flag covered entirely one of the Gothic panels of the church. A band from the Norfolk naval base, specially featuring trumpets, participated with the choir and the magnificent organ of the church in the music.

Bishop Gaylor, of Tennessee, who was to have been the preacher, was detained by illness, and the rector of the church, Dr. Francis C. Steinmetz, took his place, his eloquence rising to the signal inspiration of the occasion.

Bishop Beverly D. Tucker, of this Diocese, telegraphed his regret for his inability to be present and of his presence in spirit with the worshippers at the service.

An armed color guard was detailed to the service by the local naval station. The procession was headed by the cross, guarded by two United States sailors fully armed. After the boys and before the men of the choir marched a United States sailor bearing the American colors of the church, always carried in the procession and set in the chancel. The American colors were escorted by a guard of armed sailors. Then marched the Clergy, followed by the Belgian colors, borne by a veteran sergeant of marines, the French colors in the hands of a French soldier, and the flags of Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Greece and Brazil, borne by American sailors.

The service opened with the Marcellaise by the organ and band. After the processional Lemare's Te Deum was sung with all the flags presented before the altar. Following this the rifles of the armed guard were stacked at the chancel steps, crowned by a laurel wreath, where they remained until the colors were again presented before the altar when "The Star Spangled Banner" closed the service. Gounod's "Messe Solonelle," containing the beautiful "Sanctus," was sung complete, and the "Hallelujah Chorus" from Handel's "Messiah" was the offertory anthem.

Many stood through the service though the seating capacity of the large church was increased by two hundred chairs set in the aisles and the baptistry.

The Virginia Episcopal School at Lynchburg began its third session September 25, with a full enrollment and a waiting list.

Soon after the school was opened it had to be closed on account of an epidemic of influenza. Fortunately, there was only one case of pneumonia and no fatalities. The school was reopened on November 4, with every available place filled and a number of applicants on file. The present enrollment is eighty-one boys, three of whom are day pupils.

The spirit of the school is excellent and the outlook is full of promise.

St. Luke's Church and Sunday-school, in Powhatan County, sent one hundred and fifteen dollars to the United War Service Fund.

Woman's Auxiliary.

The annual meeting of the Virginia Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, which was postponed because of the influenza epidemic, is now called for Wednesday and Thursday, December 11 and 12, at St. James Church, Warrenton.

It is hoped that every Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary and of its Junior Department will make an earnest effort to be represented. Delegates will please send their names at once to Mrs. F. E. Bowman, Warrenton, Va.

The meeting will be preceded by an informal reception at St. James rectory on Tuesday evening.

There will be a celebration of the Holy Communion Wednesday morning at 9:30, at which the offertory will be for Woman's Work. This service will be followed by the business sessions and missionary addresses which are so necessary for the wise planning of our work in 1919.

Missions call for our best plans and for our best work.

Louisa T. Davis,
President, Virginia Branch.

An interesting meeting of the City Missionary Society was held in Grace Church Parish House on the night of November 25. Reports of the committees show that forty-two automobiles have been offered for the use of the Society during the past ten months, and forty-eight persons had assisted in furnishing music for various services. The report of the city missionary for ten months' work showed the following items: Public addresses, sermons and services, 338; visits to institutions, 369; calls on patients, prisoners and families, 977; attendance at Clericus, committee meetings, 70; number of institutions and hospitals visited, 31; individuals helped financially, 12; families helped financially, 13; families helped with groceries and fuel, 11; persons released from jail, 19; entertainments provided for institutions, 13.

The Rev. Berryman Green, D. D., of the Theological Seminary in Virginia, preached Sunday morning, November 24, in St. Paul's Church, Richmond, and on Monday morning gave an interesting talk to the Richmond Clericus at their regular meeting, for the most part discussing the subject of intinction. He believes that the taking of the wine through the medium of a wafer by dipping it in the cup is in conformity with Church usage, this wafer thus being used merely as a spoon. This is the method now in use at St. Paul's and Epiphany Churches, Richmond.

Death of the Rev. Dallas Tucker.

The Rev. Dallas Tucker, late rector of the Church of the Ascension, Hinton, died at the home of his sister in Charles Town, Friday, November 22, in the sixty-seventh year of his age. Mr. Tucker was ordained in 1872 by Bishop Johns, of Virginia, and began his ministry as assistant to the Rev. Charles Minnigerode, D. D., in St. Paul's Church, Richmond. He served parishes in Ohio, Bedford City and Bristol in Southern Virginia, and Charles Town and Hinton in this Diocese.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

Thanksgiving Service at Mt. St. Alban.

The service of thanksgiving for victory held at Bethlehem Chapel, Mt. St. Alban, on Sunday afternoon, November 17, was notable for the distinguished assembly of worshippers, and the impressive services and sermon by Bishop Harding. The size of the chapel limited the attendance to about five hundred. These included the President and Mrs. Wilson, Vice-President and Mrs. Marshall, members of the Cabinet, Supreme Court, ambassadors and ministers of the allied nations, members of Congress, officials of the American Red Cross, members of the various war boards, and officers of the army and navy of the United States and those of the nations with whom we have been co-operating, retired statesmen and men prominent in the business life of the country.

The Rt. Rev. Daniel S. Tuttle, D. D.,

Presiding Bishop, and the Rt. Rev. Frank DuMoulin, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of Ohio, were seated in the chancel. The service was read by the Rev. G. C. F. Bratenahl, D. D., and the Rev. William L. DeVries, D. D., who read the special prayers and thanksgivings authorized for the occasion. The American flag and the flags of the allied nations were prominently displayed in the chancel. The sermon was preached by Bishop Harding from the text, "And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters and as the voice of many thunderings saying, Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth." After an eloquent introduction, the Bishop reviewed briefly the events of the past four years and particularly the signal displays of Divine interposition on behalf of the allied armies during the past four months. He drew a striking comparison between the position held to-day in the eyes of the world by the leaders of the forces of righteousness and those of the late rulers of the central empires. In conclusion, the Bishop said:

"We had to wait and pray, and still wait and pray. The day was long and dreary. But the day of good tidings came, 'the day of vengeance of our God.' This wonderful experience should teach us the power of the united earnest prevailing prayer. And there is still need of such continued prayer. The ending of the war, while it brings relief and joy, brings us also face to face with a situation full of difficulties and perils. There is to-day confusion, threatened famine, the mutterings of anarchy in the defeated countries. The poison of the destructive teachings of the Bolsheviks is permeating Germany and other lands. The council to make peace has an enormous task before it. The fruits of victory may be imperiled. It is a time for prayer that God, who has given us the victory, may give to the assembled counsellors the spirit of wisdom, the spirit of love and sacrifice and of a sound mind, to the end that terms of real and abiding peace for all the nations may be made. All the forces of Christianity must unite in prayer that the Council to make peace may be guided by the principles of the Prince of Peace. We must pray that the new world 'may be so ordered by God's governance upon the best and surest foundations that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety may be established among us' and among all the nations for all generations.

"These are days when great words are on men's lips, but with very varying meanings. Freedom is one, very differently interpreted. To some it conveys license. Unlimited license is anarchy. True freedom is ours only through the service of God. 'His service is perfect freedom.' Progress is one of the catch words of to-day, but progress may be in two directions, progress up and progress downward. The way of bearing the cross of sacrifice, of love, is the way of Christ, the way of true progress in the road that leads to God. Brotherhood is much talked about, but there can be no real brotherhood that is not founded on the acknowledgment and the service of our common Father who is in Heaven. The mission of the Church of Christ is to promote true freedom, real progress, enduring brotherhood.

"Never was there a time when the forces of Christianity needed more to be unified by a common purpose. That purpose should be the making of a better world. But we can never have a better world without God. We must bring men to God through the power of the living Christ. We who believe and trust in Him, must show forth our faith not only with our lips but in our lives. We must follow in the footsteps of the Christ, in all loving service and sacrifice for others if we are to win the world for God and save the world. We must be living epistles known and read of all men—the evidence that God reigns over us. And in all times of our tribulations in all times of our prosperity let us hold in our heart of hearts, this voice coming down through the centuries, the voice St. John heard, 'as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying Alleluia; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth.'"

Death of the Rev. Thomas Duncan, D. D.

In the recent death of the Rev. Thomas Duncan, D. D., the Diocese of Washington has lost its oldest and a lovingly esteemed Presbyter, who was aged ninety-three years, and many relatives and friends feel the loss of so estimable a character. Mrs. Duncan preceded him to the grave more than two years, and at death was nearly the same age. Both suffered several years before death from a broken hip. Their patient endurance was wonderful. Two of their three sons died before them. The eldest, Mr. Murray Duncan, now lives in Ishpeming, Michigan, a prominent Churchman and a leading man in business, having also children and grandchildren. Dr. Louis Duncan, another son, who died more than two years ago, left his wife and three daughters and one son, all grown. The Rev. Dr. Milton, of St. James Church, Wilmington, N. C., is Dr. Duncan's nephew, and a niece, nee Miss Milton, is the wife of the Rev. Van R. Moore, of Emanuel Parish, Baltimore, Md.

Dr. Duncan's wife was one of five daughters of Commander Morris, United States Navy. Another was Mrs. Corcoran, wife of the late W. W. Corcoran, Washington's great philanthropist and devoted Churchman; another was the wife of Surgeon Coolidge, United States Navy; another the wife of Rear-Admiral Fox, United States Navy, and another was the mother of the Rev. Charles Morris Addison, the rector of St. John's Church, Stamford, Conn.

Dr. Duncan, while a young man, was in public office from Louisiana. He was a member of Trinity Church, Washington, and became so deeply interested in the spiritual conditions and surroundings of the many young clerks in office that he and another young Churchman of Trinity Church and a young Presbyterian of Smithsonian Institute, Washington, D. C., went to Boston, Mass., and secured the necessary literature for the founding of a chapter of Young Men's Christian Association, then recently come to this country from England. This Christian venture succeeded and continued to grow year after year until in fifty years' time it became the wonderful Y. M. C. A. of Washington to-day. He never lost interest in it, and as the last of its three founders was present at the unveiling of a portrait to his honor.

He was a graduate of the Theological Seminary of Virginia in the class of 1855, in company with Bishop Channing Moore Williams, of Japan; Julius E. Grammer, John Liggins, Thomas G. Addison, Richard T. Davis, Bishop Perry, of Iowa, and others.

Dr. Duncan's first parish was Leeds, Fauquier County, Virginia, where, in his rectory in 1861, he and his wife and little boys remained while the Confederate and Union cavalry fought in battle around them. Thence he took his family through the army lines to Georgetown, D. C., where they remained until the close of the war, while he himself entered the Confederate army as chaplain. After the war, Dr. Duncan entered parish work in Maryland, where he lived and worked for many years, principally in Howard and Montgomery Counties, where he built several churches and accomplished the conversion of many souls to Christ by his diligent and devoted service. He took a parish in Pennsylvania, then served as rector of Henshaw Memorial Church, Baltimore, for three years; then for a time in Epiphany Church, Washington, as assistant minister, and then finished his long ministry as rector of Norwood Parish, Montgomery County, Md., near Washington, when old age and ill health rendered him unable to minister further, although he still desired to serve.

He died at the residence of his late son, Mr. Louis Duncan, in Pelham Manor, New York, and was laid to rest in Oak Hill Cemetery, Georgetown, D. C.

Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop.

Colored Work: The Rev. E. L. Baskervill, Archdeacon for work among the negroes, issues an appeal for greatly needed funds for the support of the important work under his charge. The need is immediate and urgent for funds for the payment of stipends of missionaries and teachers. The colored work in this Diocese has been most successful under the administration of Archdeacon Baskervill, who believes thoroughly in industrial training for his race, and holds up for them a high standard, stressing thrift, honesty and race integrity. This appeal and the whole conduct of the work is strongly indorsed by Bishop Guerry. Contributions should be sent to the Bishop or to Archdeacon Baskervill, 54 Bogard Street, Charleston, S. C.

Rt. Rev. Jos. B. Cheshire, D. D., Bishop.

The Consecration of Bishop Delany.

In the presence of a large congregation, made up of people from Raleigh and many parts of the country, the Rev. Henry Beard Delany, D. D., Archdeacon for colored work in the Diocese, was, on Thursday, November 21, consecrated Suffragan Bishop of the Diocese of North Carolina. The exercises took place in the beautiful chapel on the St. Augustine grounds, which the students of that institution built to the glory of God. The presiding Bishop and consecrator was the Rt. Rev. Joseph B. Cheshire, D. D., Bishop of North Carolina. His co-consecrators were Bishops Beverly D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Southern Virginia, and Bishop Thomas Campbell Dorst, D. D., Bishop of East Carolina. Bishops Edwin G. Weed, D. D., of Florida, and Junius M. Horner, D. D., Bishop of Asheville, presented the candidate. Bishop Arthur S. Lloyd, D. D., President of the Board of Missions, preached the sermon. The Rev. A. B. Hunter, D. D., of Raleigh, was sub-registrar. The Rev. George F. Bragg, Jr., D. D., of Baltimore, acted as master of ceremonies, with Professor Charles H. Bover, as assistant. The litany was read by the Rt. Rev. E. Thomas Demby, negro Suffragan Bishop of Arkansas. The attending Presbyters were the Rev. E. L. Baskerville, of South Carolina; the Rev. James K. Satterwhite, of Raleigh; the Rev. J. E. King, of Charlotte, N. C., and the Rev. George F. Bragg, D. D., of Baltimore.

Bishop Lloyd took as his text 2 Cor. 5:17: "Old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." The preacher referred to the fact that we were living in a time when all were looking to a new age; that many old customs and traditions would pass away. He pronounced the occasion an evidence that the need of the colored race was above technical difficulty, and that such an experiment was for the high service to which God had called us all. He said that the negroes themselves must understand that their future in the Church was largely in their own hands; that while they could always count upon the sympathetic aid of their white friends, they must give a more substantial evidence of their interest for the Church than they had given in the past. Race prejudice was denounced as the result of ignorance and bigotry, which would never again be regarded seriously by intelligent people, and that its removal would make simple the task of the Church in a democratic age, the ideal of which was to leave not one unprotected citizen. Bishop Lloyd urged the colored race to justify the faith that was entertained of their capacity, and which had been so strikingly shown upon the battlefields abroad. High praise was given the colored Clergy of the Church, and the belief expressed that the negro race must and would enter more fully into the privileges and responsibilities of the new day, and that they would do great things for the Church now that it was more fully committed to their hands. The charge to the Bishop-elect was of the tenderest and most inspiring nature, through the strong words of encouragement there breathed the atmosphere of love which the saintly soul of Bishop Lloyd throws out.

The services at St. Augustine's Chapel are noted for their fervor and earnestness, but on this occasion, when Dr. Delany, who has given so much of his life to that institution, was raised to a high and holy office, it seemed that those who loved him, gave testimony of such esteem in rendering their Church's office with marked emphasis. All who attended the consecration, and the large chapel was packed to the doors with white and colored people, felt the deep note of religious inspiration which the well rendered hymns, prayers and praise evoked.

DELAWARE.

Rt. Rev. F. J. Kinsman, D. D., Bishop

The Rev. F. Alan Parsons was instituted rector of St. Philip's, Laurel, on November 3 by Bishop Kinsman. The rector of Laurel is in charge of three neighboring missions.

The Rev. C. H. B. Turner, D. D., of St. Peter's, Lewes, has been appointed civilian chaplain of the Naval Base, Lewes, by the Church War Commission. Chaplain Turner has been very active, and is very popular with the officers and men at the base.

Dover: On November 2, All Souls' Day, the Bishop consecrated the churchyard of Christ Church, Dover, and dedicated the wall and ivy-gate in memory of Mrs. Anne Ridgely du Pont and her daughter, Amella Elizabeth du Pont (Mrs. Eugene du Pont).

During the rectorship of Archdeacon Thompson, Christ Church has been enlarged and beautified in various ways, the improvements having been made possible by the 'generous gifts of the late Mrs. Eugene du Pont, of Wilmington, and her children.

St. Luke's Church, Seaford, has purchased a new rectory, the best in South Delaware, of which the rector and his family took possession in September. Bishop Kinsman held a brief service of benediction on the evening of November 3.

Delaware suffered severely from the influenza, especially the city of Wilmington. The city Clergy were all actively engaged in the care of the sick in homes and hospitals, and among the victims were the Rev. William H. Laird, D. D., rector of Immanuel; the Rev. R. W. Trapnell, rector of St. Andrew's, and the Rev. Robert Bell, vicar of Old Swedes. Although many of our own people suffered from the epidemic, there were few deaths.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. David H. Greer, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. C. S. Burch, D. D., Suffragan.

New York's Celebration of Peace: Noteworthy Addresses.

New York's celebration of war victory, beginning in the streets with the most remarkable demonstrations the city ever saw, continued over nearly two weeks. In it all the Church had conspicuous leadership. The Christian forces in the victory were recognized to the limit, and they were expressed through the Church in larger measure than in any other way. There was a service of thanksgiving at St. Patrick's Cathedral, and the new First Presbyterian Church, like practically all others, held victory meetings. The outstanding services, in which New York took most popular interest, were those at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, at Trinity Church, and at Columbia University.

At the Cathedral Bishop Greer planned a Diocesan service, and many rectors, members of standing and other committees, of vestries and of Diocesan organizations attended. A downpour of rain did not prevent the Cathedral being packed in every part. Bishop Greer was ill, and a short address from him was read by Dean Robbins. The address of the day was delivered by Elihu Root, formerly Secretary of State, United States senator, and now possibly to be peace commissioner. He reviewed the situation at the moment, but spoke little of the future. The outstanding emphasis of his address was the Christian character of the conflict—God directed it. The layman's emphasis upon the spiritual element was pronounced.

A second victory celebration was observed in the Cathedral on the Sunday next before Advent, with President Butler, of Columbia University, as speaker. Dr. Butler charged that the next sixty days are the most critical in the world's history, and that the brunt of the responsibility must be borne by the United States and President Wilson, the Congress and the Peace Commissioners. The future depends not so much on what the Germans do, only so they observe the conditions of the armistice, as on what we do. He was most emphatic in saying that God is in the councils of the nations, and that it is not nearly so important that America stress her faith that God is on her side, as that America make sure that she is on God's side. Like all speakers, he praised the character of American troops, their spirituality, their loyalty to justice, their willingness to die if need be.

Trinity Church's celebration brought in the organizations of the parish, the splendid banners that have been features of Trinity in public and in private since the war began, and many of the well known families of the parish. In his sermon the Rev. Dr. Manning enumerated the things for which America, its people and its Church, have cause to be thankful for. His list included loyalty to a high ideal, unity with Allies, the fine character of American boys, and the spiritual level attained. Other peace services were held, among the notable sermons preached was one by the Rev. Dr. John Timothy Stone, a foremost Presbyterian minister, who praised the boys of the Middle West, with whom he had served in cantonments, and said, as Elihu Root had done a week before in the Cathedral, that America is equal to the solving of the problems of peace. He said God is on our side, and that the wisdom which guided the Fathers of the Revolution is not less but more in evidence to-day.

The Thanksgiving Celebration at the Church of the Holy Communion was to take on this year a very unusual character. The choir numbered sixty voices, including twenty men in khaki. They chanted a Te Deum and rendered the Halleluiah Chorus. Instead of a sermon, an address was delivered by the Hon. George W. Wickersham on "The Allies of America." Directly after the service the Roll of Honor was unveiled and a new Service Banner unfurled. At 1 o'clock sixty soldiers and sailors were entertained at dinner and then taken to a popular matinee for which seats had been reserved. In the evening was held the formal opening of the Holy Communion Canteen.

ERIE.

Rt. Rev. Rogers Israel, D. D., Bishop

Civic Celebration of Peace.

The city of Erie will go down in history as being probably the only city in the country holding a distinctly civic religious service of thanksgiving before daybreak Monday morning, November 11, in which all religious bodies joined. The chimes of the Roman Cathedral had scarcely finished a hymn of thanksgiving at 4:15 A. M. when the bells of the Cathedral of St. Paul pealed forth the glad tidings to the sleeping city. City Hall Square was filled with people when, promptly at the time appointed, six o'clock, the mayor, standing upon the steps of City Hall and surrounded by the city officials and the representatives of the different religious bodies of Erie, opened the service with a short address of thanksgiving, and called on Bishop Gannon of the Roman Church to make the opening prayer. In the tense stillness that prevailed, the Bishop's voice could be heard far out over the vast crowd. Then, the Dean of the Cathedral of St. Paul read the Scriptures, using the Prayer Book Version of portions of the Psalms of Thanksgiving. Rabbi Currier, President of the Local Council of National Defense, delivered an eloquent address; and the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church closed the service with prayer. The bands struck up "The Star Spangled Banner" and "America," and everyone waved flags and helped to swell the grand chorus of song. This service was most inspiring, and has been spoken of by the citizens ever since as such a great improvement upon mere noise and parade.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. C. Whitehead, D. D., Bishop.

Drawing Room Missionary Meetings: On the week day evenings of the week, beginning November 17, the Rev. John Gillespie Magee, a missionary in Nanking, China, now home on furlough, gave a series of Neighborhood Missionary Talks at the residences of members of Calvary Church, Pittsburgh. Mr. Magee was baptized, confirmed and ordained in Calvary, and his salary as missionary is provided by the parish, so that he is their personal representative in that part of the missionary field. The meetings were well attended, and considerable interest was aroused in his work. During the succeeding week he is to give three such talks at the homes of parishioners of the Church of the Ascension, Pittsburgh.

SALINA.

Rt. Rev. J. C. Sage, D. D., Bishop.

St. Barnabas Hospital was in charge of the nursing of the boys at the Student Army Training Camp, Salina, during the recent epidemic, and the sisters and nurses did a valuable and efficient work in this connection, and in addition about a hundred cases were cared for in the town.

A great community patriotic peace service was held in Salina Sunday evening, November 17, arranged for by Bishop Sage, in the large Convention Hall. The speakers included Bishop Sage, the mayor of the city, representatives of the Chamber of Commerce, the County Council of Defense, the pastor of the Presbyterian Church, and the vicar of the Cathedral, the Rev. E. H. Rudd. The Cathedral choir was assisted by all the choirs of the city and the community band. The lesson was read by the President of the Ministerial Association and all the ministers of the city sat in a body on the platform.

A Conference of the Clergy was held Thursday, November 7, at the Cathedral. All of the Clergy were present except the Rev. Mr. Kain. After the daily offices in the chapel the Bishop celebrated the Holy Eucharist and addressed the Clergy. At noon intercessions were offered and the Clergy were the guests of the Bishop in the new Bishop's House. A general conference took place during the afternoon in the Bishop's study, when methods of work and opportunities for advance were discussed.

St. John's Military School, under Major Waldorf Ganssle, commandant, is having the largest attendance in its history. The school is filled to capacity, making it necessary to build two cottages, now under construction, to accommodate fifty more boys who will enter in the January term. The Rev. Edward H. Rudd, D. D., has assumed his duties as chaplain, and is now in residence.

The Rev. Alfred G. Miller has been appointed by Bishop Sage to serve as Secretary of the Convocation and Registrar of the District in place of Rev. L. W. McMillin, resigned. Mr.

Miller's appointment is until the meeting of the Convocation, January 12-13.

LOUISIANA.

Rt. Rev. Davis Sessums, D. D., Bishop.

Victory Service.

A most impressive victory service of praise and thanksgiving was held on Sunday afternoon, November 17, in Trinity Church, New Orleans. Every pew in the church was filled and many people stood in the gallery. The services began with the singing of Hymn 516, after which the Star Spangled Banner was sung. Appropriate Psalms and prayers were read, and America and the national airs of England and France were sung. A patriotic address was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Capers, who is in charge of the church during the absence of the rector in France.

KENTUCKY.

Rt. Rev. C. E. Woodcock, D. D., Bishop.

Grace Church, Paducah, the Rev. Custis Fletcher, rector, has recently been enriched and beautified by the placing of a window "to the glory of God, and in loving memory" of Miss Mary Morton. It is of English workmanship, and the exquisite design is a representation of Faith.

The Advent Call: Every effort has been made to make the Advent Call a success in this Diocese. A letter, urging every woman in the Diocese to do her part to carry it through, has been sent out by Miss Nannie Hite Winston. The motto chosen is Romans 12:12: "Rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation, continuing instant in prayer."

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. E. G. Weed, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Weed has been ill, and is now recuperating with his brother in Connecticut.

The Rev. Melville E. Johnson is now assistant at St. John's Church, Jacksonville, succeeding the Rev. J. H. Webber-Thompson, chaplain in the army.

The chancellor of the Diocese, Mr. W. W. Hampton, has all three sons in the service, and his son-in-law, Dr. W. J. Buck. Mr. Hampton is widely known here for his championship and liberal support of the Church's missions.

The Rev. Dr. Frazer, of St. Mary's, Jacksonville, has been very successful in his men's club work, greatly increasing the attendance at that church.

The Church of the Good Shepherd, under the able rectorship of the Rev. Milton R. Worsham, has put in a new church house, with temporary place of worship, as well as a new organ. Mr. Worsham's work among the young people has been phenomenal. His brother was recently killed leading his company in France.

The Rev. William Brayshaw has completed the Mayport Church a second time. It was destroyed just after construction last spring by a cyclone.

Special thanksgiving services have been held in all churches of the Diocese commemorative of November 11.

The new Treasurer of the Diocese is Mr. George W. Thames, Jr. The old Treasurer, Mr. Telfair Knight, is now an artillery officer.

The Rev. Allen Judd resumed his work at Green Cove Springs November 15.

The Rev. M. M. Fryer is doing splendid work in reviving Church life at Cedar Key. He has had large congregations and many baptisms.

The Rev. S. W. Creasey conducted a mission in Holy Trinity Church, Gainesville, the Rev. Bernard Campbell, rector. He was very helpful, and the offering was given to his work in Fort Hall, Idaho.

DALLAS.

Rt. Rev. A. C. Garrett, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. H. T. Moore, D. D., Coadjutor.

Victory Service at Fort Worth.

"Regardless of creed or church" was the phraseology of invitation to "soldiers and civilians" of Fort Worth, with the aim of making the victory service in St. Andrew's Church, November 17, a community thanksgiving. Consequently the church was packed to overflowing even with all available seats from the adjacent parish house in use. The proportion of civilian men was especially remarkable. The rector, the Rev. Fred. T. Datson, choir, and congregation of Trinity parish united with their sister church for this occasion. A service, arranged by the rector of St. Andrew's, the Rev. Edward Henry Eckel, with the approval of the Bishop, provided the medium by which, with wonderfully impressive accord and hearty participation, the great mixed congregation expressed religiously their thankfulness for victory and peace. Bishop Moore officiated in the specific "Thanksgiving After Victory" of the Prayer Book.

The Rev. Lyman P. Powell, D. D., LL. D., president of Hobart College, who has been campaigning in Texas for the United War Work during the past month, after a year in France, preached most impressively on the moral issues of the war. The offerings were devoted to the War Work Fund.

Another large congregation, completely filling the nave and north aisle, was present in the evening, when Maunder's "Song of Thanksgiving" was sung for the first time in Fort Worth.

MISSOURI.

Rt. Rev. D. S. Tuttle, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. F. F. Johnson, D. D., Coadjutor.

Meeting of Auxiliary.

The regular quarterly meeting of the Diocesan Auxiliary should have been held in October. But because of the influenza quarantine it was postponed to November 19. Pledges were asked for amounting to about $900. On the day following the meeting the Treasurer announced that the pledges had reached $1,300, and were still coming in. It is another indication of the fact that carrying on for the war has been good for the Church.

The meeting was an all day meeting with the parish of the Holy Communion. Bishop Johnson celebrated the Holy Communion, assisted by the rector, the Rev. John Borden. Bishop Thomas, of Wyoming, told the story of the Church's work in that mission (Continued on page 20.)

STAR SHELLS.

In a recent speech on reconstruction Premier Lloyd-George used a very striking and effective simile when he called the attention of his hearers to the use of star shells at the front. When these shells burst they produce such a brilliant illumination, that even the darkest and most excluded spots in the surrounding landscape come under a close observation. The Premier went on to say that we must use star shells in our national life so that every part of it shall be illuminated, and shall be in a condition to stand illumination. He went on to say that the housing problem was one that was worth the attention of the whole nation.

This is just as much true in the United States as it is in England.

One reason that we are now seeing such horrible outbreaks of Bolshevism is because these things have been neglected. If in peace times we would give more attention to housing problems, minimum wage questions, industrial protection and matters of a like nature, these terrible outbreaks would not occur.

If an engineer allows his safety valves to become closed and his machinery to get dry for the want of oiling an explosion or a serious break is sure to be the result when any unusual strain is put on the engine.

It is because democracies give more attention to the rights and comforts of individuals that they are less liable to these sort of explosions, that have taken place in Russia, and now seem about to occur in Germany.

There is little danger of the same sort of thing happening in the United States, but the certain way to prevent it or anything like it is to give heed in times of peace as well as in times of war to the great social problems that surround us on every side, and the Church should be the leader and not a follower in such movements.

BUILDING AFTER THE WAR.

We cannot begin too soon to consider the many home problems that are arising now that peace has come, and so offer the following thoughts from the United States Labor Department, Children's Bureau:

That thousands of children in rural and small town communities are being deprived of a fair chance for normal development is the assertion of the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor in a report just issued on conditions which tend to juvenile wrongdoing in the country.

One hundred and eighty-five New York State children who were implicated in some sort of wrongdoing and who came from one hundred and forty-four different families were carefully studied, and their family surroundings were scanned in an effort to discover what had led them astray. Most of the children were of normal mentality, although about one-fourteenth were noticeably deficient. But lack of opportunity for moral and mental training, for recreation, and lack of variety of interesting occupations with promising futures led these children of normal mental power into delinquency. All these conditions were found to be accentuated in the subnormal child who, in addition to the opportunities of a normal child, needs to be provided with some adequate means of diagnosis and appropriate treatment.

The twenty-one New York State communities described show a type of social life that, as the report points out, can "unfortunately be matched in many places." Vivid, detailed descriptions show how the families and communities of these one hundred and eighty-five little children failed to safeguard them from early temptations to wrongdoing which will doubtless lead, in many instances, to wasted, stunted lives. Although in nearly half the cases the child lived in its own home with its father and mother there was a lack of control on the part of the parents and a disregard on their part for the rights of others which must have contributed to the child's misdeeds.

The attempt is made to analyze the offenses of the children, which range from mere mischief or general waywardness to serious offenses against property and to sex delinquencies. The purposeless mischief often develops because the loneliness of the open country and the "deadness" of the little town "give the child a stupid denial to answer his search for sociability." Without wise leadership the youthful energy is all too likely to run the gamut of small mischief and then degenerate into serious misdeeds.

What were these twenty-one typical communities doing to save themselves from the moral and financial burden of caring for the misdemeanants their lack of foresight had produced? Prisons for criminals are admittedly an expensive way to safeguard the moral fabric of a community.

In searching for social factors which make for the child's sound development the investigators looked first to the district school with its honored tradition of useful service. The report shows how "pitifully inadequate" the tiny educational unit in the back country, with its isolation and slight equipment, usually is to meet modern demands. The Church, the report states, holds a real and valuable place in the socializing of the country, but it was found to be making most unequal use of its opportunity.

What is there to care for the child who has been called to account by the community for his offenses? The justices of the peace, under whose jurisdiction many of the children considered in the study came, were generally found to give but cursory attention to the children's needs, and to be ill-informed as to how their cases should be handled. Local influence conduces in many instances to lenience where sterner treatment would have been for the child's better interest. The report adds to the evidence which favors a separate court for the treatment of juvenile offenders. The impracticability of securing skilled probation officers and juvenile court judges, however, for each small community leads to the recommendation of a county juvenile court, and the extension of the powers of such courts where they now exist, in order that the court may reach the remotest corners of each county—that a "probation officer may be available in every inhabited section of rural as well as urban communities."

NATION'S CHURCHES ASKED TO CELEBRATE BRITAIN'S DAY.

We take pleasure in publishing the following notice, sent us from New York:

For almost five years prayers have been offered up in the Christian churches of America for peace. The service flags have hung at their doors and their walls ever since America entered the war, and the stars on the white field meant some Christian boy fighting that the world might be free to live and to love God as its conscience might dictate. One by one the gold stars came out, to mark the passage of a Christian soul, gone to its God on the battlefield. And now we have peace! The world is thankful. America is thankful. And while she is thankful she is not forgetful of her great ally, Britain, who has done so much to bring about a peace with honor and justice.

There are many instances of wounded soldiers, taken from the hospitals where they have received their first treatment after serious wounds, into the home circle of a loving British family, and there nursed back to health by British women. The British home has been responsible for many good influences for the boys from America, thousands of whom have recuperated there.

Without the British navy how would the way to France have been kept open for the constant stream of American fighters? Splendid co-operation was the chief cause of the splendid results realized by the allied navies and in this co-operation Britain was the leader. Throughout the war she has not once faltered in her duty. She has borne her burdens with Christian fortitude and on December 7, 1918, American churches of all creeds, social institutions, schools, business organizations, whole States and whole cities will bow their heads in tribute to Britain. The outburst of appreciation to Britain on the part of America has been so universal in America that thousands of letters from all parts of America have come to the Britain Day Committee headquarters in New York City, with declarations of interest and news of the manner in which the day is to be observed.

It always comes—God's help to human need,
In measures often that our hopes exceed;
God's answer to the prayer our lips repeat
In common blessings, or surprises sweet.
Does He not see how doubtful the heart is,
How fearful ever the hand we reach to His?
As if to us His presence were not near,
Nor could be found. Yet it is always here!

Wednesday and Thursday morning He spent in Bethany and possibly Olivet's gardens, in retirement, preparing His disciples and Himself for the great sacrifices. Thursday evening He goes with them to Jerusalem; celebrates the Passover, institutes the Lord's Supper, and speaks the comforting words St. John records.

The Coming of His Feet.

In the crimson of the morning, in the whiteness of the moon,
In the amber glory of the day's retreat,
In the midnight robed in darkness, or the gleaming of the moon,
I listen for the coming of His feet.

I have heard His weary footsteps on the sands of Galilee,
On the temple marble pavement, on the street,
Worn with weight of sorrow, faltering up the slopes of Calvary,
The sorrow of the coming of His feet.

Down the minister-aisles of splendor, from betwixt the cherubim,
Through the wondering throng, with motion strong and fleet,
Sounds His victor tread, approaching with a music far and dim,
The music of the coming of His feet.

Sandaled not with shoes of silver, gilded not with woven gold,
Weighted not with shimmering gems and odors sweet,
But white-winged and shod with glory in the Tabor-light of old,
The glory of the coming of His feet.

He is coming, O my spirit! with His everlasting peace,
With His blessedness immortal and complete.
He is coming, O my spirit! and His coming brings release:
I listen for the coming of His feet.

For the Southern Churchman.
St. Andrew and the Scotch Thistle.

L. A. Nash.

I was walking home on a little mountain trail, overgrown on either side with summer greenery. I felt violent pricks on my ankles, and looking down I spied a group of thistles, bristling with prickles and crowned with their bright mauve bloom.

My first thought, "next time I come here it will be with a stick to break them down!" My next one was—how in a flowerless fall I was out with my tiny grandson, and how he enjoyed a play with the "picks-picks," as he called them. I gathered some with their pretty bloom, pulled off the prickles, for him to take home to his mother. They made, too, such a lovely bouquet on our mantelpiece that they helped us to forget that we were so near to winter. I replaced these with another bouquet of the white down, garlanded with green.

How strange it seems that Bonny Scotland should have chosen the thistle for her insignia. It must have been the prickly variety, for it bears the Keltic name Ard, signifying a point. It was during a period of much trouble and fighting towards the end of the fifteenth century. It merits the motto, which the Scots attached to their nation's emblem, "No one touches me with impunity," or the Highland rendering "Ye maun't meddle wi' me!"

But even the thistles have their compensations, as I found in the beauty of my autumn and winter flowerets. There are some varieties in Scotland that are spineless.

Five hundred years earlier than this, when on the eve of a fierce battle with Athelstane, the Anglo-Saxon King, it is said that St. Andrew appeared in the heavens to Adhaius, King of the Scots, and at the same time to Hangus, King of the Picts. Becoming victors over their foes, they went barefooted to the "Kirk" dedicated to St. Andrew, making a vow to adopt him as their patron Saint.

They considered that the thistle-pain represented what St. Andrew had endured ending in martyrdom in Achala. The first Disciple and Apostle, he preached the Gospel of Christ his Master in Asia Minor, Greece, and in Russia. In the last he has been the patron Saint of the Kings and their families.

The Cross of St. Andrew's is two oblique lines crossing in the center. This placed on a blue ground, signifying the Blue of Heaven, is the National Banner of Scotland. The old Scottish "Order of the Thistle" is now called the "Order of St. Andrew."

FAMILIAR HYMNS.

Ken's Morning and Evening Hymns.

Under the familiar name of the Long Metre Doxology, the great stanza, "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow," is known and sung in every civilized land. Used sometimes in connection with other verses, sometimes alone, it has stood for two and a half centuries as the very epitome of Christian worship. Because it first appeared at the end of Bishop Ken's beloved morning and evening hymns, it is here properly treated as a part of those compositions, which, though less familiar, are almost as beautiful as the doxology itself.

Thomas Ken, who was an English bishop, was a great lover of holy music. Though under the rigid rule of Cromwell, organists and choristers were forbidden in the Church, this hard measure was circumvented by the formation of musical societies, which satisfied their harmless longings in private houses. In one of these praiseworthy organizations Ken played the lute.

Before he became Bishop he was chaplain to Charles II, a post that we can well imagine was a trying one. It testifies to the sterling character of Ken that he kept his robes unsullied in the court of that most profligate of kings. He steadfastly refused to countenance the royal offenses and rebuked his sovereign without fear or favor. Strange to record (yet not so strange, since baseness frequently bares its head to dignity and worth), Charles loved the austere prelate. "I must go now and hear Ken tell me of my faults," he used to say. The hearing, alas! had but small effect; yet it was the same faithful counsellor who stood beside the monarch in his last hour and tried to help him die as he had tried to help him live.

Under Charles' successor there was danger of a swingback to popery, and Ken, resisting, was one of the famous seven bishops tried at that time for treason, and acquitted. When three years later the throne changed hands again, once more the valiant old Churchman suffered for his conscience sake. He had sworn allegiance to James, and deemed that he could not in honor break his oath: the upshot was that he lost his bishopric.

A poor man now, and in the world's eye dishonored, he retired to his home in Somersetshire, and there lived peacefully for twenty years. On his deathbed he made the request that he should be buried without pomp, and that six of the poorest men of the parish could bear him to his grave.

This bright star in the dark sky of an unlovely age still shines gloriously for us in the Doxology and its two companion hymns. These compositions, which he wrote for the students of Winchester College, were contained in his Manual of Prayers.

"Be sure," he adjures the young men, "to sing the morning and evening hymns in your chambers, devoutly remembering that the Psalmist, upon happy experience, assures you that it is a good thing to tell of the loving kindness of the Lord early in the morning, and of His faithfulness in the night season."

Lack of space prevents our giving both hymns in full, but a few verses will readily recall them to lovers of the Hymnal. "All praise to Thee, my God, this night has an unforgettable sweet simplicity, and the morning hymn might be called the believer's spiritual reveille. The magnificent Doxology is well worthy of the sturdy old Christian who allowed neither powers nor princes to turn him from higher things.

Awake, my soul, and with the sun
Thy daily stage of duty run;
Shake off dull sloth, and early rise
To pay thy morning sacrifice.

Redeem thy misspent time that's past,
And live this day as if thy last;
Improve thy talent with due care,
For the great Day thyself prepare.

Wake and lift up thyself, my heart,
And with the angels bear thy part,
Who all night long, unwearied, sing
High praise to the eternal King.

All praise to Thee, my God, this night,
For all the blessings of the light:
Keep me, O keep me, King of kings,
Beneath Thine own Almighty wings.

Forgive me, Lord, for Thy dear Son,
The ill that I this day have done;
That with the world, myself and Thee,
I, ere I sleep, at peace may be.

Teach me to live that I may dread
The grave as little as my bed;
Teach me to die that so I may Rise glorious at the awful day.

O may my soul on Thee repose,
And may sweet sleep mine eyelids close;
Sleep that shall me more vigorous make
To serve my God when I wake.

Praise God, from Whom all blessings flow;
Praise Him, all creatures here below;
Praise Him above, angelic host:
Praise Father, Son and Holy Ghost.
Amen.

The Sign Said "Closed."

American Front, Sept. 30.

For two weeks the American offensive in the St. Mihiel sector had been on. The roads, in spite of shell holes and debris of wagons and camions that have been smashed by direct hits, were incessantly alive with moving men and vehicles.

And for two weeks the two Red Cross men in A. R. C. Outpost No. 2 had forgotten what it was to sleep except for an occasional nap snatched in odd moments. Stray soldiers and groups of soldiers had drifted in and out, lost from their companies. Signal Corps men who had been out, night after night, keeping alive the line of communication, would come in gray with fatigue and go out looking revived after a great bowl full of steaming chocolate from the ever-ready kettle and a cheese sandwich from the never-empty cupboard.

Officers, bringing their men back from the front line trenches, would ride ahead to find out if the outpost could furnish chocolate and sandwiches for 100, or 300, or 500 hungry chaps, planning to march the boys right past without a stop unless they could be assured that there was enough for every one. And the two men at the outpost always said, "Bring them in; we'll take care of them."

There came a momentary lull one day, when the two men looked around at their outpost and noticed for the first time that there were dishes piled everywhere, that there were corners that hadn't been swept for quite a while and floors that needed scrubbing.

"Guess we'd better close up for an hour," suggested Lieutenant Ashley Pond, and Lieutenant Lowry agreed with him that it might be wise.

A sign was posted on the door and a wire attached to the knob to keep it shut while the two men, with sleeves rolled up, pitched in. They had barely started to work when the door was jerked open and two boys stuck their heads in the door.

"Any chance to get a little writing paper?" they demanded, and the Red Cross men glared at them.

"Can't you chaps read?" they demanded. "Get out."

"Aw, say," begged one of the boys. "We've been wandering around for a week now, trying to find someone to report to. Lost our company the first day of the offensive and have been roughing it ever since. I sure would like to write home."

The paper was produced and the men hurried out, while Pond and Lowry, fastening the door again, continued their work. Again the door was jerked open and two more soldiers walked in.

"Give us something to eat, will you?" they asked, and Pond turned on them sharply.

"Get out of here," he ordered, and was shutting the door, when one of the boys broke down and began to cry.

"Well, boy, what's the matter?" and the youngster, still shaking half hysterically, told them that he had been out in No Man's Land for a solid week on nightly wiring parties. For three days he had missed out on mess and had had only tinned rations.

"Guess we can take care of you," said Pond, and going to the stove he fried up several eggs, made fresh coffee and got out bread and sardines from the cupboard. When the boys left they had remembered how to smile again, and Pond started to close the door when an officer appeared.

"I have 200 men coming down the road," he began. "They're pretty tired and hungry. Can you give them chocolate?"

"Oh, sure," said the Red Cross men, and, going to the door, they jerked down the sign. "We're open now."—Red Cross Bulletin.

The Paradox of Age.

As we descend the hill of life and the years snow more thickly upon us, we are amazed and almost terrified at the rapidity with which they seem to pass. It is as if we were afloat upon a river that was approaching some vast waterfall. The flood deepens and moves more silently and with an ever-increasing speed that is appalling when we test it by the passage of the swiftly crowding objects on the banks.

The explanation of the hurry of the fleeting years is, of course, alas! that they are more empty. Perhaps there are just as many things to fill them, just as many varied incidents to weave the parti-colored tissue of our lives; but the incidents seem less important than they did in the golden days when a toy or a kiss shone out like a star. Bright stars now seem hardly more than toys. In consequence, there is little to remember, and the years are gone irrevocably before their trifling contents are even registered.

But the most curious paradox of age is that while the years go ever faster the hours go more slowly. The years are indistinguishable because there has been so little to fill them, and for the very same reason the hours are ponderous, heavy-footed and interminable. The days of youth are crowded with action and the nights with hardly snatched slumber. But the days of age are dull with thought, and its nights sometimes ache because it has not thought enough to while their tedious length away.

The best remedy for this creeping decay of the unescapable hours is to allot them systematically. For any age in any place there are always plenty of possible occupations. Consider them and make your choice. Then set apart a fixed portion of the day for each one, planning to accomplish if possible a little more than you or anyone can accomplish. You will find that the day is not long enough, and that the hours, instead of dragging heavily, are gone before you know it.

Above all, do not weight time with its own emptiness. There was once a very charming French lady who lived ninety years in constant dread of ennui. She passed her whole life in a shudder of horror how she was to pass the rest of it. Never fill one minute with anxious thought of what can fill the next. There is richer stuff to make any existence of than that. Learn to occupy the lagging hours with those casual, abounding pleasures the presence of which brings forgetfulness and their absence no regret.

November.

The winds are chill and leaden gray the sky;
Against it stand, outlined, the leafless trees,
Gone are the song birds, silent is the wood,
Save for the mournful sighing of the breeze;
Yet there is beauty in the leafless trees,
Unseen, when summer's leafy robe was green;
And solemn music through the forest rolls,
As from an organ touched by hands unseen.
Though the bright tints of summer are all gone,
November days have beauty all their own.

And so, sometimes, life's gray November days
Bring to us friendship, warm and strong, and true,
Which we had ne'er suspected in the time,
When over us the sunny skies were blue.
E'en though life's summer brightness is all gone,
The dreary days bring blessings all their own.
—Margaret H. Barnett, in Presbyterian of the South.

Dogs and the Soldier.

"We'll take a dog first. If we can't get a dog we'll take a goat, or a cat, or a pig, a rabbit, a sheep, or, yes, even a wildcat. We'll take anything for a trench companion—but give us a dog first."

Lieutenant Ralph Kynock, of the Gordon Highlanders, was, speaking, says the London Letter in the New York Herald. He has been at the front since the war started and has seen fighting in all its phases. He was warm in his praises of the dog as man's companion in lonely places. He merely echoed what every other soldier thinks.

"People who haven't been at the front don't know what a little companionship means to a man on patrol duty, or in a dugout, or what a frisky pup means to a whole company. Dogs were created to be man's companion, and I'm blessed if I don't think the dogs know it better than we do.

"It doesn't seem to matter what kind of dog it is. You'll find highly bred animals at the front and you'll find dogs that wouldn't be admitted to any self-respecting dog show when it comes to looks. But for loyalty and devotion the thoroughbreds don't outclass the mongrels. They all seem to have the same spirit. The dogs know the dangers of the trenches. Some of the mascots have been there since the war started. They have seen hundreds of men killed and other dogs laid out by shell fire.

"The pups know when a barrage is on where they can find safety, and they go there, unless the man they look to as master is going somewhere else. Trust the dog to stick hard by, no matter whether it is in the danger zone or not.

"They'll hang around till doomsday if they are allowed to do so. And when the master is killed the dog sticks around, and sometimes it is a long, long time before he picks up with some one else.

"Take it from one who knows, the life of a soldier would be far more lonely if it were not for the dogs. And other animals are worth having, too. Some of the boys train birds and chickens and even rats. The laddie who's got a fine Airedale or a Scottish terrier is the happiest soldier on the line, though."—Our Dumb Animals.

The Flames.

I watched a log in the fireplace burning.
Wrapped in flame like a winding sheet,
Giving again with splendid largesse
The sun's long gift of treasured heat;

Giving again in the fire's low music
The sound of wind on an autumn night,
And the gold of many a summer sunrise
Garnered and given out in light.

I watched a log in the fireplace burning—
O if I too could only be Sure to give back the love and laughter
That life so freely gave to me.

—Sara Teasdale, in Harper's.

A Prayer.

We thank Thee, dear Father,
With hearts glad and free,
For the kind, loving parents
Given to us by Thee.

For the dear little playmates
We meet every day;
Make us kind to each other,
Dear Father, we pray.

Her Portraits.

My mamma has a watch of gold,
It tells the time of day, I'm told,
And in the front where she can see,
A little picture is of me.

She has more pictures in a book,
That the photographer man took,
When I was two and three and four:
And when I'm five there'll be one more.

But you don't know how I was s'prised,
When I looked in my papa's eyes
To see as plain as plain can be
Two little pictures there of me.

The Real Princess.

Once on a certain time, in the kingdom of Far Away, there lived a king and a queen who were very sad because they had no child. At first, however, they decided that, if they could find a little maid who could prove that she would make a real princess, they would adopt her as their daughter.

So word was published throughout the kingdom that at 3 o'clock on every Monday throughout the year their majesties would receive before them any child who believed that she could be a real princess.

And what lovely children came! Some were short, some were tall; some brown-eyed, some blue-eyed; some dark, others fair. Week after week they appeared at the palace gate and were admitted by the gatekeeper to the presence of the king and the queen; and week after week, as they went away, their majesties sadly shook their heads, for they were learning that it is a difficult matter to find a real princess.

But one Monday there appeared at the usual time a little girl of wondrous beauty. When the queen saw her, her heart was glad. "For here," she thought, "must be a real princess. Such a face must indicate a lovely heart."

"Do you think, my child, that you could become a real princess?" asked the queen.

The little maid curtsied and replied: "Yes, Your Majesty."

"And why do you think so?" again asked the queen.

The child smiled until she showed her dimples and snowy teeth. Then she answered:

"Because, Your Majesty, I like only the best of everything. I must wear silk hose and dainty gowns or I am most unhappy."

The queen's face was now quite sober, as she inquired:

"And how does your father furnish you with such fineries?"

"I have no father," replied the child, with a toss of golden curls and a rustle of silken skirts, "but my mother is the washerwoman for the duchess and so earns much gold."

Then the queen shook her head sadly, and the king signed for the child to be led away; for again they were deeply disappointed.

So it went, until the year was nearly gone. Just as their majesties thought they had found one who would be a real princess, it was discovered that she would not do at all. On the last Monday of the year, greatly discouraged, the king and the queen sat as usual in the great reception hall. Although it was long past the hour, no child had come, and they were about to retire when a page rushed forward.

"Your Majesties," he said, "there stands without a child named Wanda who seeks audience with you. But she is ragged and unkempt, and I dare not let her enter."

But the king and the queen, unwilling to pass by a single child, bade him admit her. So before them presently appeared the little girl. Her dress was torn, and her hands and face were scratched and soiled. Moreover, of all who had come, she seemed most lacking in beauty. But she curtsied low as she entered the great hall and knelt before their majesties.

"I ask pardon," she said sweetly; and they marveled at her voice, which was like the sound of running water. "I should not have been late. But I heard only yesterday of the audiences that you have been holding; and my home is far beyond the great forest. But as I hurried through the great woods I found a rabbit caught in the bushes and stopped to free him; and a little farther on I passed the cottage of one who was old and ill, and I could not leave her without help; and then I stopped to help an old man who was gathering fagots for his fire. So at last, after many delays, I reached the palace gates."

She paused an instant, and the queen asked the usual question:

"And why, my child, do you believe that you could become a real princess?"

At this the little maid smiled; and the queen caught her breath. Nowhere, she thought, had she seen such beauty. And yet this was the same child, ragged, dirty, plain.

"I do not think so, Your Majesties," she responded. "But I come to tell you of one who would. She is poor, but very beautiful and all that a princess should be. To see her is to love her. And though 'twill break my heart to part from her, I would that she might be your choice."

"But who is she?" asked the queen. "And why came she not here to plead her own cause?"

"She is my sister," replied the little maid, "and as she is very lame she could not walk so far. She would not have me come; but I slipped away unnoticed. Oh, Your Majesties, she would indeed make a real princess!"

Then the king and queen bade her rise and approach them. And the queen took her hand and drew her to herself.

"My dear," she said, "we have already found the real princess. She is sweet of voice, and so kind of heart that the love shines through and lights her eyes. She has thought for all in need, which is as it should be with a princess; and she is of a rare unselfishness. But she may have a sister—a little lame girl, who has perhaps some of the princess's lovely qualities.

"So come you to the palace, little princess, and we will send for your sister. For there is room in our hearts for two."

So to the palace and to the hearts of the king and the queen came Wanda and her sister and filled their lives with sunshine and happiness. For their majesties had made no mistake. They had indeed found the real princess.—

The Croaker.

Once by the edge of a pleasant pool,
Under the bank, where 'twas dark and cool,

Where bushes over the water hung,
And grasses nodded and rushes swung,
Just where the brook flowed out of the bog,

There lived a gouty and mean old frog,
Who'd sit all day in the mud and soak
And do just nothing but croak and croak,

Till a blackbird whistled: "I say, you know,

What is the trouble down there below?
Are you in sorrow or pain or what?"
The frog said: "Mine is a grewsome lot!
Nothing but mud and dirt and slime
For me to look at the livelong time.
'Tis a dismal world!" So he sadly spoke,
And voiced his woes in a mournful croak.

"But you're looking down!" the blackbird said,

Look at the blossoms overhead;
Look at the lovely summer skies;
Look at the bees and the butterflies.
Look up, old fellow! Why, bless your soul,

You're looking down in a muskrat's hole!"
But still, with his gurgling sob and choke,
The frog continued to croak and croak.

And a wise old turtle, who boarded near,
Said to the blackbird: "Friend, see here;
Don't shed your tears over him, for he
Is wretched just 'cause he likes to be!
He's one of the kind who won't be glad.
It makes him happy to think he's sad.
I'll tell you something—and it's no joke—
Don't waste your pity on those who croak"

How Alice's Canary Came to Her.

Annie A. Thomas, Aged Eight Years.

"Alice, do you mind coming over here in the garden to pick some roses for Mrs. Jones?" called Mrs. Smith from her porch. She had been to the hospital recently and couldn't walk, and Mrs. Jones had been so kind to her. And now that Mrs. Jones had sprained her arm, Mrs. Smith wanted to do something for her. Alice said she would be glad to do it, so she ran home and told her mother what she was going to do. And then she went back in Mrs. Smith's flower garden and picked a beautiful bunch of red and white roses and carried them to Mrs. Jones. Mrs. Jones was delighted to get the flowers, and she put them in water and kept them a long time. Mrs. Jones asked Alice would she like to have a little canary bird. Alice said she would be delighted to have one, so Mrs. Jones gave Alice the little bird, and Alice took it home with her and kept it a long, long time. And whenever anybody thought of Alice they said what a nice little girl she was.

Tom and the Clock.

Winnie and Tom were spending a delightful three weeks with grandma. They had never been in the country in the winter time before, and everything was new to them. Such fun as they did have. And how fine it was to go sleighing and coasting with Uncle Jack, who lived a mile away!

"There isn't a single thing I don't like," confided Winnie to Tom as they sat talking one day. "Only just one; I do hate having to go to bed at eight o'clock."

"So do I, and I think it's mean to make us when we're visiting," declared Tom.

"Last night I was right in the middle of a most exciting game with Lucile, and I had to put the poor dear down without undressing her because it had struck eight about a minute ago," said Winnie.

"I know," said Tom gloomily. "Wasn't I reading the finest story when I had to stop? It's all right for girls to go to bed early; but I'm a boy and most twelve, and you're only nine."

"You are not most twelve," cried Winnie, indignantly. "You were just eleven last month. Besides, if I am a girl, I'm not afraid of the dark any more than you, Tom Price."

"O, well," said Tom, "maybe you're not; you are tolerable brave for a girl. But say, Win, I do want to stay up to-night, because Fred Warren told me he was coming over about eight. Wouldn't it be awful if I were in bed?"

Winnie nodded. "Tell grandma," she suggested.

But Tom shook his head. "She doesn't like Fred; never has since the time he showed me how to play shooting buffaloes with Spotty and her new calf."

"Well, the calf died," said Winnie soberly.

Tom was silent. The two children stood looking out of the dining-room window. They were all alone, for grandma was upstairs taking a nap.

"O," said Tom presently. "I know something splendid to do."

"What? O. Tom, dear Tom, please tell me," cried the little girl.

"Cross your heart you won't tell?" Solemnly Winnie complied with this demand.

Tom leaned closer that he might whisper. "I'm going to set the clock back an hour."

There was a little gasp from Winnie, then a frightful silence.

After a minute Tom spoke: "I know just how. I see grandma wind it up every night. Watch." Pulling out a chair, he climbed on it and reached the clock which stood on a high shelf. Carefully he moved the hands. When he climbed down again and pushed back the chair, it was two o'clock instead of three. He looked at Winnie triumphantly. "What did I tell you?" he exclaimed.

But Winnie was frightened. "I wish you hadn't," she said, her blue eyes full of trouble.

"Pshaw! Whose a 'fraid cat now?" cried Tom. "I can fix it back whenever I like."

Just then there was a ring at the door. Grandma had finished her nap and immediately came down the steps to receive the note which the messenger handed her. "Why, children," she said, smiling, "this is from Aunt Mary. She wants you to come over at four o'clock. There's something jolly going on, but I'm not to tell. Why, what are you looking so sober about? Don't you want to go?"

"Yes," said the children faintly. Grandma looked puzzled, but she did not say anything more. She glanced at the clock. "Dear me, I thought it was late. Well, you've plenty of time. I'll get you to wind a ball of yarn for me until it's time to get ready."

Winnie looked as if she were ready to cry, and Tom glanced despairingly at the clock. O, how much easier it is to do a wrong thing than to undo it. Mamma had always told him that; but then it had not seemed such a real thing, while now—O, how dreadfully loud that clock did tick.

Presently grandma spoke. It's time for you to go now, dearies; and, dear me, how dark it is for the time of day! Well, run along and have a good time. I guess Jack will bring you home."

The two children fairly raced all the way. At the kitchen door Aunt Mary met them.

"Why, children," she said, "what makes you so late? I thought you weren't coming. You see, I invited the minister's children to come over, and I made candy for you to pull; but I had to let them do all the pulling, as you didn't come. Then Uncle Jack happened in and took them for a little run in his new sleigh. I do wish you had been here. Why didn't you come."

The children did not know what to say. They ate a few of the doughnuts which Aunt Mary provided, but somehow they did not taste good. Aunt Mary was puzzled. Pretty soon the children said good-by.

"I hope grandma hasn't found out about the clock," said Winnie as they went slowly over the hard, frozen fields, "because I want to tell her."

"No, let me," cried Tom, "because I'm never, never going to do a thing like that again."

But grandma knew, and she had known all the time.—Christian Observer.

Riddle.

Riddlemaree, round and white,
Very little and very light;
One by itself is weak and small,
But O, when it comes with its brothers all,
They fill the street and they crowd the lane,

They push at your door and your windowpane;

They tickle your neck and tag your face,
And trip you up in the smoothest place.
Yet one by itself you can scarcely see—
Who can read this riddlemaree?

Answer to last week's riddle: Eyes.

Reader's Riddle.

Anne Tunstall, Aged 10, Norfolk, Va.

Riddlemaree, yellow, gay,
It grows on the ground by night and by day,
Sometimes within it's so yellow and bright

That it scares you to death if you see it at night.

Put on your thinking-cap and see
If you can guess my riddlemaree.

A Soldier Lesson.

Edgar was drilling Company A of the First Regiment—Fido, Emily and some tin soldiers—and, just as he called "Attention, company!" his foot slipped, and down he came with a sprained ankle.

Mamma Sater said he must go to bed.

"I don't want to go to bed; I want to go and be a soldier," cried Eddy.

"But if your ankle is not bathed, and you are not put to bed, you will be a very lame, sick little boy," said Uncle Caspar, who was an old soldier, whom Eddy loved and admired.

"I don't care," whined Eddy. "I don't want to go to bed."

"I thought you were playing soldier," said uncle. "What does a real soldier do?"

"He marches and he drums," said the boy.

"Is that all a soldier does?"

"He doesn't have to go to bed."

"But sometimes he gets hurt badly. He is shot in battle. Then what does he do? Does he howl and cry? No, he goes to the hospital. There he is as brave as when he drums and marches." Edgar wiped his eyes.

"Now I'm going to be a good soldier," said the boy.

"That's a brave Eddy. Now play it does not hurt and go to sleep."

Uncle Caspar hung up Eddy's flag, gun, drum and soldier cap where he could get them when he awoke. The next day Edgar went into camp on the sofa. He had learned how to be brave. —Buds of Hope.

The Gift to Mother.

What are you going to give your mother for Christmas this year?" asked Florence of her little friend, Betty.

"Oh, I'm giving her a big silver spoon."

"Of course she'll be proud of it," replied Florence.

All she had for mother's Christmas was half a dozen neatly stitched holders, which she had made all by herself.

But when Christmas morning came, mother was delighted with the holders. "My dear little girl," she said to Florence, "you could not have pleased me more if you had given me a diamond necklace. Here are hours and hours of your dear work and your dear thoughts. Every little stitch is a thing of love. And they will keep my fingers from the heat, and save my hands from the rough and hurtful places."

So after all, maybe Florence's little gift was better than the silver spoon, which money could so easily buy.

A Domino Puzzle.

Do you ever play dominoes? You can puzzle your friends very much in this way. Then the dominoes out on the table, and, unseen to any one, take double one.

Now say, "I am going out of the room. You arrange the dominoes in a line, matching the ends just as if you were playing them. You must use the whole set. Then turn them over, so that I can only see the backs, and when I come in I will tell you what the numbers at the two ends are."

You have kept the domino that you took away in your hand or your pocket, and the two numbers at the ends will be those on that domino.—Selected.

Planting Bulbs for Indoors.

The first frost that puts an end to the blooming of flowers in the garden is the time to put bulbs in the ground for outdoor blooming next spring, and at the same time bulbs may be prepared for growth in the house. The housewife who is to grow flowers in this latter manner has several possibilities open to her. She may grow many of the bulbs in soil in window-boxes or pots, in moistened fiber or moss or among pebbles, and may grow hyacinths in water alone.

An Agricultural Department bulletin gives the following directions for planting bulbs for the house:

If soil is selected for the growing medium, the boxes or pots should be provided with a layer of coarse drainage material, such as pebbles and broken pots, and then filled with light soil. After planting, the box or pot in which hyacinths or narcissi are planted should be placed out-of-doors and covered with about four inches of ashes or sand. The bulbs so planted should be left out-of-doors for from three to six weeks until a quantity of roots have formed. If it is considered more desirable, the pots or boxes may be placed in a dark, cool room or in a cellar without covering, and left until the bulbs have formed a mat of long roots. If they throw upshoots from two to three inches high before the roots are formed, they have been kept too warm. The soil must be kept well moistened, but not over-moist. After the root-forming period is past, the pots or boxes may be taken to a light, moderately warm room for flowering. If the room is too warm the stems will be long and weak. If cool, they will be short and strong, and make more attractive plants.

If the bulbs are to be grown in bowls or pebbles or moss, or in water, they should also be set in a cellar for root formation to take place before being taken to the room in which they are to bloom.

Alliums, scillas and the like need to be kept in a light, warm place from the time of planting. Tulips are hard to grow in the house, and should not be attempted except by experienced plant-growers after receiving special instructions.—Home and School.

The Dread of Insomnia.

Thousands of persons live tormented because they cannot sleep or cannot sleep sufficiently. They go to bed nervous and anxious for fear they are not going to sleep, toss and turn wearily through long hours of the night, resort to all manner of devices to produce slumber, yet succeed in achieving only a small portion of it, either too early or too late. They arise convinced that some disaster is coming because sleep has been denied them, that their nervous systems must be giving way, or are likely to give way; and they often bring about the result they dread largely by the mere dread of it.

It should be recognized at once that sleep is nature's restorative for worn-out nerves; that a certain amount of it, varying with the individual, is necessary; and that difficulty in obtaining that amount does imply fatigue and overstrain or something abnormal in the habit of living. At the same time recent scientific investigation tends to show that the necessity for sleep may easily be exaggerated. Infants are universally supposed to require a very large amount of sleep. Yet numerous cases are recorded in which babies have slept only three or four hours a day for long periods and have continued in the most robust and vigorous health. Also, many of the strongest minds and greatest workers of the world get along with a very limited amount of sleep. Napoleon rarely slept more than four hours. John Quincy Adams did not usually much exceed that amount; yet he lived and worked to extreme old age. One of the first of modern men of science asserts that four hours' sound sleep is enough for any healthy person.

What the body does require is abundant rest. The mistake made by many who suffer from insomnia is that, when they find they cannot sleep, they will not remain quiescent, but insist upon reading, or playing patience, or, if they wake early, getting up and fatiguing themselves by an undue amount of exercise.

Learn to be quiet. Go to bed peacefully, without thinking whether you are going to sleep or not; relax the muscles, control the nerves, turn the mind as far as possible to pleasant, tranquil, far-off things. Sleep, at any rate as much sleep as is really needed, will come at length, and will come with practice more and more readily.

We must not suppose that as soon as God forgives us we escape at once from the painful and just consequences of our sins. The sins may be forgiven, and yet many of the penalties which they have brought upon us may remain. There is a certain alliance between the laws of nature and the laws of righteousness, and there is a similar alliance between the natural laws of society and the laws of righteousness. No Divine act arrests the operation of the natural laws which punish the penitent for his former drunkenness. There are vices, such as flagrant lying, gross treachery, deliberate dishonesty, which involve a man heavy social penalties. He does not escape these penalties when he repents of the vices and receives the Divine pardon. He is maimed for life. His chances are lost. He will recover with difficulty the confidence even of kindly and generous men. Positions of honor and public trust will be closed against him. He will be excluded from many kinds of usefulness.—R. W. Dale.

Take Nuxated Iron
In This Country Alone
For Red Blood, Strength and Endurance

"To help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron," says Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital. Nuxated Iron often increases the strength and endurance of the weak, nervous, run-down people in two weeks' time. It is conservatively estimated that Nuxated Iron is now being used by over three million people annually, and it has been used and endorsed by such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, former Secretary of the Treasury and ex-Governor of Iowa; former United States Senator and Vice-Presidential Nominee Chas. A. Towne; General John L. Clem (Retired), the drummer boy of Shiloh, who was Sergeant in the U. S. Army when only 12 years of age; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson of the Court of Claims of Washington, and others. Nuxated Iron is dispensed by all good druggists everywhere.

Morning in the Heart.

Morning in the heart is a more wonderful thing than morning the heavens. God can give daybreak along the horizon to anybody. Indeed, day succeeds night with such clock-like regularity that we lose sense of the wonder of it. But morning in the heart is a still greater thing. It may come at midnight and amid pain. Sometimes pain is God's call-boy to "stab our spirit wide awake." But whenever it comes God always gives it. He may use human ministrants, but He is the renewer of the morning of the heart. Thank God for day, whether it comes over the hills of difficulty, or mirrored in the river of doubt, or flashed back to us from the eyes of our friends. Morning in the heart is a miracle. There are few greater that God can give.—George Clarke Peck.

The Power of Love.

It is this desire of the happiness of those whom we love which gives to the emotion of love itself its principal delight by affording to us constant means of gratification. He who truly wishes the happiness of any one cannot be long without discovering some mode of contributing to it. Reason itself, with all its light, is not so rapid in discoveries of this sort as simple affections, which see means of happiness and of important happiness where reason scarcely could think that any happiness was to be found, and have already by many kind offices produced the happiness hours before reason could have suspected that means so slight could have given even a moments' pleasure.—Thomas Brown.

Shaped into beauty by secret and invisible fingers, the flower develops we know not how. But we do not wonder at it. Every day the thing is done; it is nature, it is God. We are spiritual enough at least to understand that. But when the soul rises slowly above the world, pushing up its delicate virtues in the teeth of sin, shaping itself mysteriously into the image of Christ, we deny that the power is not of man. A strong will, we say, a high ideal, the reward of virtue, Christian influence—these will account for it. Spiritual character is merely the product of anxious works, self-command and self-denial. We allow, that is to say, a miracle to the lily, but none to the man. The lily may grow; the man must fret and toil and spin.—Henry Drummond.

"I Gave Them Myself."

Said a mother to me one day: "When my children were young I thought the very best thing I could do for them was to give them myself. So I spared no pains to talk to them, to read to them, to teach them, to pray with them. to be a loving companion and friend to my children. I had to neglect my house often. I had no time to indulge myself in many things which I should have liked to do. I was so busy adorning their minds and cultivating their hearts' best affections that I could not adorn their bodies in fine clothes, though I kept them neat and comfortable at all times. I have my reward now. My sons are ministers of the gospel; my grown-up daughter is a Christian woman. I have plenty of time now to sit down and rest, plenty of time to keep my house in order, plenty of time to indulge myself, besides going about my Master's business whenever He has need for me. I have a thousand beautiful memories of their childhood to comfort me. Now that they have gone out into the world, I have the sweet consciousness of having done all I could to make them ready for whatever work God called them to do."—Life and Faith.

GEORGIA BRYAN GRINNAN.

In the death of GEORGIA BRYAN GRINNAN, on October 5, 1918, St. Paul's Memorial Church and the University community have sustained an irreparable loss. A valiant spirit has passed to her reward. During the three years she lived among us she impressed herself upon all as one ever ready to serve. Service was the keynote of her character—service of a high, intelligent order—and the most difficult task found her eagerly ready to give herself to its accomplishment.

The Sunday school, the Woman's Auxiliary, the church Guild and the Red Cross all claimed her and will be sadly crippled by her absence. Faithful and courageous, full of high hope in all she undertook, her unquenchable spirit far outran her frail strength, and, in spite of our own loss, we feel she rests well from her too ardent labors.

At a meeting of St. Paul's Guild, of which she was the newly elected president at the time of her death, the foregoing tribute of love and esteem was ordered recorded on the minutes.

IN MEMORIAM.

MRS. ELIZA MADISON SCOTT was born in Tallahassee, Fla., seventy-eight years ago, the daughter of Robert Jackson Hackley and Mary Strong, his wife. In 1865 she married the late Edward Scott, Esq., of Manakin Farms, Powhatan County, Va. She died on June 2, 1918, after a long illness patiently and cheerfully borne. The end came unexpectedly, for she seemed to be gaining in health and strength. On June 4th, in the presence of a large concourse of sorrowing friends and relatives, she was laid to rest in the attractive yard of Manakin Church amid a profusion of flowers, fit emblems of her sweet and saintly life.

She is survived by the following children: John L., Nannie L., Robert H., Samuel and Lucia P. Scott, all of Powhatan County, and many grandchildren. Not only her family, but her many friends mourn her loss. She asked life and God gave her length of days for ever and ever.

Mrs. Scott was an earnest and devoted Christian gentlewoman, refined and cultured; possessed of beauty of face, natural sweetness of disposition and charming manner, all of which she retained to the last. She had been a communicant, worker and Sunday school teacher in Manakin Church for more than fifty years, giving faithful, ready and efficient service. She was interested not only in her church and community, but in general affairs. Pure in heart, she served her God and gave needed love, sympathy and help to her fellowman, and especially to the poor. She was always a most engaging and thoughtful hostess, dispensing old Virginia hospitality.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

field. The Rev. Dr. Phillips, of St. Peter's, St. Louis, spoke on behalf of general missions. In the afternoon, Mrs. E. F. Cushing, of Emmanuel parish, Webster Groves, made a telling address on the purposes of the Advent Call. There was a box luncheon, the ladies of the Holy Communion parish serving tea and coffee.

Captain A. R. Skinker.

The parish of St. Michael and All Angels, St. Louis, has attached a gilt star to its service flag for a fine fellow of the younger generation of Churchmen of the city, Captain Alexander Rives Skinker. He fell in the service of his country in the battle of the Argonne September 26-29, and was buried near the spot where he fell. As captain of Company I, 138th Infantry, Captain Skinker manifested great heroism against heavy odds in the fierce struggle which cost him his life. The reports that have reached St. Louis all agree that he died in the very front of the battle, at the head of his men, leading them without thought of consequences to himself in an attempt to outflank a machine gun nest about two miles east of the Argonne forest. His comrades write that "he left with his comrades a reputation for efficiency, courage and lovable qualities second to no officer in the regiment, and his death is spoken of by all with feelings of deepest distress and regret." Captain Skinker was the son of Thomas Keith and Bertha Rives Skinker, of St. Louis, and his young wife was Miss Caroline Rulon-Miller, of Philadelphia. A memorial service was arranged for the afternoon of Sunday, November 24, in St. Michael and All Angels Church, the Rev. George E. Norton, rector.

NEVADA.

Rt. Rev. G. C. Hunting, D. D., Bishop.

Prohibition Secured by Action of Churchmen.

In the address of the Bishop of Nevada to Convocation in 1916 he urged upon the Convocation the inauguration of a movement looking to putting on the statute book a prohibition law through the initiative. He asked for the full discussion of this matter by the Convocation, for the co-operation of every Churchman in the State, and for a committee willing to give time and effort during the next six months to the accomplishment of this much desired enactment. "There is no doubt," he said, "where the Church stands on this important matter. The only question is how hard will the individual Churchman work to better conditions in the State of Nevada. The passing of this law would do more for the best interests of every resident than anything else. Your efforts can be expended to no better purpose surely. I am sure you will put this Convocation on record as standing unqualifiedly for improvement in the liquor situation."

Convocation considered the matter and passed the following resolution: "Resolved, That we favor the submission to the voters of Nevada of an initiative petition providing for State-wide prohibition, to be sent by them to the legislature for enactment."

The petition and bill were drawn up by a Committee of Convocation, Hon. George S. Brown, Rev. Lloyd B. Thomas and Robert C. Withers, Esq. The petition was duly circulated and over 8,000 signatures put on it, instead of the 3,000 needed. It was presented to the Legislature of 1917, which refused to pass the law. A campaign of education was begun in which many took part. The bill was placed on the ballot this month, according to law, and was carried by a majority of 5,000. The law goes into effect December 16, 1918, and is bone-dry in the driest measure.

Rt. Rev. James B. Funsten, D. D., Bishop.

The Bishop has issued a Thanksgiving and Advent Pastoral, calling upon his people to emphasize Thanksgiving Day in recognition of the mercies of God to our country and the sacrifices of those who have fought for the great victory which has been won; and urging that the season of Advent, begun with sincere repentance, should be marked by a special prayer that the earth may be prepared for the new and blessed day which seems to be ready to dawn.

MONTANA.

Rt. Rev. W. F. Faber, D. D., Bishop.

The Bishop appointed a special service of thanksgiving to be used throughout the Diocese on Sunday, November 17th, or as soon thereafter as possible. The following is the Collect authorized:

Collect of Thanksgiving.

O God, who has promised that Thy Son shall keep the simple folk by their right, defend the children of the poor, and punish the wrong doer; We give Thee thanks and praise for the fulfillment of Thy word, as it is this day; humbly beseeching Thee to guide the nations into the way of peace, to heal the wounds of war, and to establish order and justice, freedom and brotherhood, in all lands; through the same Thy Son, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen.

There are over 1,000,000 communicants of the Protestant Episcopal Church. 950,000 of them never read or look inside of a church weekly. Think of your own parish? How many subscribe to any church paper?

We believe that a number of people in every parish would subscribe if they were approached in the right way.

We will pay well for a good representative in every parish to secure new subscribers and to attend to the renewals each year.

The Rev. Charles Ewell Craik, Jr., of Louisville, Ky., was advanced to the priesthood at Christ Church Cathedral on Thursday, November 14 by the Bishop of the Diocese. The sermon was preached by the Rev. John R. Atkinson, rector of Christ Church, New York City, under whom the candidate had served as curate.

Particular sentiment attached to this service for the reason that the grandfather and father of Mr. Craik have continuously served this parish for seventy-five years. The Very Rev. Dean Craik is dean emeritus of the Cathedral, and presented his son.

In St. James' Chapel, Howe School, Howe, Ind., on Thursday, November 7, the Bishop of Michigan City advanced to the priesthood the Rev. Lucien Frank Sennett, the Rev. George Harrie Richardson, and the Rev. Edwin E. Smith. At the same service, Mr. Earl Thomas Jennings was ordained deacon. Bishop White was the preacher as well as celebrant. Mr. Sennett and Mr. Jennings were presented for ordination by the Rev. John Heyward McKeenzie, D. D.; Mr. Richardson was presented by the Rev. Edward W. Averill, and Mr. Smith by the Rev. R. Everett Carr. Mr.

He has been assigned to charge of St. Gabriel's Mission, Titusville, and Grace Mission, New Smyrna, under the oversight of Arch-deacon Cresson.

Deaths.

The Rev. W. Fenwick Bachman, minister-in-charge of St. Alban's Church, Indiana Harbor, Ind., died of influenza-pneumonia at Mercy Hospital, Gary, on November 10. The funeral services took place from his parish church on Tuesday, November 12, and interment was at Grand Rapids, Mich.

Look Forward.

'Tis weary watching wave by wave,
And yet the tide heaves onward;
We climb, like corals, grave by grave,
That pave a pathway sunward.
We're driven back, for our next fray
A newer strength to borrow;
And where the vanguard camps today,
The rear shall rest tomorrow.

Though hearts brood o'er the past, our eyes

With smiling features glisten;
For, lo! our day bursts up the skies!
Lean out your souls, and listen!
The world is following freedom's way,
And ripening with her sorrow.
Take heart! Who bears the cross today
Shall wear the crown tomorrow.
—Gerald Massey.

A certain British soldier's letter runs thus: "I am sorry I cannot tell you where I am, because I am not allowed to say. But I venture to state that I am not where I was, but where I was before I left here to go where I have just come from."—Punch.

LETTERS FROM RHEUMATICS

Possibly you have imagined that you could never get your own consent to write a testimonial letter, but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of Rheumatism you can at least appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking the Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring at Shelton, S. C. This water overcomes many diseases, including Indigestion, Gout, Uric Acid Poisoning and Liver and Kidney diseases, but no patrons of the Spring are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water than those who have been relieved of their Rheumatism. Hundreds of letters like the following have been received by the Management:

Dr. Cosby, a South Carolina physician writes:—"I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes:—"I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began to use Shivar Spring Water and in a short time was cured."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes:—"Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were cured of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes:—"The water has done more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes:—"My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely cured of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes:—"Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

If you suffer with Rheumatism, or with any chronic disease, accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the Shivar Spring.

Box 64 F, Shelton, S. C.

Gentlemen:

I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons of Shivar Mineral Spring Water. I agree to give it a fair trial, in accordance with instructions contained in booklet you will send, and if it fails to benefit my case, you agree to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return promptly.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

"Faith is the great liberator."

"No nation has ever survived the loss of its religion."

Time writes no wrinkle on the deeds of sacrifice.—George Matheson.

Our reaching upward is only our answer to Christ's reaching downward.

The habit of reckoning on Christ is the key to a restful life.—F. B. Meyer.

No man who heard Jesus speak could declare that His preaching was better than His carpenter work.

If Jesus is right in His teaching about the Divine Fatherhood, immortality follows as a matter of course.—Selected.

Thy light upon our evening pour!

So may our souls no sunset see,

But Death to us an open door

To an eternal morning be.

Unto death "relates not so much to the measure of the duration of time as to the degree of the power of endurance to the death point."—J. Vaughan.

Once take firm hold of the great truth of the coming of the King, and it affords a bright outlook along every avenue of life, and brings gladness to the weary heart.—G. C. Morgan.

Reason cries, "If God were good He could not look upon the sin and misery of men and live; His heart would break." The Church points to the cross and says, "God's heart did break."

General Foch recently said to an American visitor, "We cannot maintain the ideals of liberty and justice, whether in war or in peace, without faith in Christ, for He was the great giver of freedom to men."

The most unique feature of Christ is His claim to be a hiding place from wind and a covert from the tempest. While many a voice offers a home for the quiet hours, Christ alone has promised to be our covert in the storm.—G. Matheson.

The Divine Spirit, who guides into all truth, has not finished teaching us; the Lord, who had many things to say, has not ceased to speak; former times were not "able to bear" all His utterances, and our own time and future times will hear more and more of His words.—Selected.

"Not new opinion, but renewed devotion to known duty, is what is needed for the impoverished life of a professed disciple of Christ. This is what was meant by the Old Testament prophet, who said: 'Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls.'"

Christ is in the world. He is about us, within us, going through all things, moving onward in all. Heaven does not make a noise when it works, and yet it works. And so the gospel works, the progress goes on, a grand mighty progress, and there is really no retrocession. No river runs to the sea more certainly than the great salvation for man runs to conquest and a kingdom.—H. Bushnell.

In all real troubles and sorrows God is very near us, nearer, if I may venture to say it, than at other times. The very cloud that shades the sky is full of gracious rain. Our Pentecost is, as it were, close upon us, with fulness of blessing.—Bishop Moberly.

For all Thy manifested grace and power;

For all the witness of Thy pardoning love;

For all Thy succor in temptation's hour;

For mercies winged with gladness from above;

For gentle hints of larger service asked;

For tender chidings when the work was done,

Because our duty had not fully tasked

The talent given us; for victories won;

For open doors that swung at Thy command;

For doors as quickly shut 'gainst evil's snare;

For lessons learned that made us understand

That Thou art blessing everywhere,

We thank Thee, Lord, and lift our song of praise,

For all Thy love and care throughout the days.

—Record of Christian Work.

There was, once upon a time, an old lady who rented a furnished villa for the summer, and with the villa a large dog also went.

In the sitting-room of the villa there was a comfortable arm-chair. The old lady liked this chair better than any other in the house. She always made for it the first thing. But, alas! she nearly always found the chair occupied by the large dog.

Being afraid of the dog, she never dared bid it harshly to get out of the chair, as she feared that it might bite her, but instead she would go to the window and call "cats."

Then the dog would rush to the window and bark and the old lady would slip into the vacant chair quietly.

One day the dog entered the room and found the old lady in possession of the chair. He strolled over to the window and, looking out, appeared much excited and set up a tremendous barking.

The old lady arose and hastened to the window to see what was the matter, and the dog quietly climbed into the chair.—London Opinion.

Christ is in the world. He is about

A Stable Loft Communion in France.

The distant boom of great guns could be heard and the shells came screaming over and broke with a mighty bang upon the hills close by. Overhead could be heard the put-put-put of the guns where contending squadrons fought for aerial supremacy, while behind me the whip-like crack of the anti-aircraft guns that sought to take part in the fray. Our own artillery, parked under tines and along the hedges, added to the din of battle and hurled steel defiance to the enemy that were battling to cross the Marne.

It was in such a scene and with meditations easily imagined that my Sunday morning reflections were interrupted by a hail from an orderly down on the road.

"Say, doctor, there's some of the boys and staff officers who want to see you in the attic."

Coming down to the old farm building, which was stable, granary and residence combined, I climbed up into the attic to find a group of earnest men, officers, non-coms and privates, waiting for me.

"Well, what's up, fellows?" I inquired.

"It's like this, doctor," spoke up one of the officers. "This regiment has been so much on the move, and we've not been able to get together, that a few of us wondered if we could have a communion service."

"And we have to report at ten," said another.

"I can get you everything you need," volunteered the mess sergeant.

Looking into the earnest faces of these men, who sought to express their faith in this holy act of devotion, there could be but one answer.

"Meet me in the back room in ten minutes, and bring any of your friends."

And so it came to pass that at the appointed time and place eighteen soldiers met in an upper room in this old building in France. A table had been found and covered by the "Y" man's silken flag. Overhead were the great wooden rafters draped by spiders for many generations. In the corner was a pile of oats. Dormer windows cut through stone wall roof admitted a soft light upon this holy scene. Jerusalem—France, we could not help but make the comparison.

Before the "Y" man was grouped officers, non-coms and privates; Baptist, Episcopalian, Methodist, Congregationalist, Presbyterian, Lutheran, Catholic and Jew, together with several who had never known church membership, but were attracted by the One who said, "I will draw all men unto me."

When the bugle called at ten each was in his place strengthened for his duty.

I felt impelled to put my arm over the shoulder of my Jewish friend who evidently lingered for the purpose to the last.

"Dick," I said, "you know that you were welcome, but if you are willing, tell me why you were there."

"I knew you would ask, doctor," he said, speaking tensely, "but you know that I believe in a loving Heavenly Father, and somehow it all seemed so appropriate and to me so necessary, that while it was far from the forms to which I am accustomed, yet to me He seemed so near."

Together we went to our appointed stations, some never to come back, for ere a second sun had set a storm of iron hail fell upon us and beat us down with pitiless power.

Not until eight days had passed and the enemy had been driven back across the Marne and our glorious dead had been buried, was it possible to re-enter that "Upper Room."

There stood the rough table, nearby the overturned benches, and the pile of oats still lay in the corner. Overhead the great wooden rafters, spider draped and unchanged, while through the windows came a cool, soft south wind and the shining light of the sun. That little company—no more would they meet until the final "Over There!" Softly we stole out from that place of sacred memories—memories of Him who made the supreme sacrifice for a world, and of brave men who had made the supreme sacrifice for freedom.—Association News

Faith in God, Man's Greatest Motive.

Man masters nature until the forces that used to scare him obey him; in society he labors tirelessly that his children may have a better world. Wars come, destroying the achievements of ages; yet when war is over man rebuilds, his cities, recreates his commerce, dreams again his human brotherhoods and toils on. Many motives, deep and shallow, fine and coarse, have sustained him in this tireless work, but when one seeks the fountain of profoundest hope in mankind's toil he finds it in religious faith. To believe that we do not stand alone, hopelessly pitted against the dead apathy of cosmic forces which in the end will crush us in some solar wreck and bring our work to naught; to believe that we are fellow-laborers with God, our human purposes comprehended in a Purpose, God behind us, with us, ahead of us—this incomparably has been the master-faith in man's greatest work.—H. E. Fosdick.

Why Should I Be Baptized and Confirmed? Because—

Christ commanded a public confession of Him. Matt. 10, 32, 33.

Christ required it when on earth. Mark 2:14; 5:30-34.

Christ provided a visible Church for it. Matt. 28:19.

St. Paul taught it. Rom. 10:10.

Apostles and deacons showed the way. Acts 8:12, 14-17.

The Visible Church is here for our use. Eph. 4:11, 12; Col. 2:12.

Christ commanded the use of the Lord's Supper. Luke 22:19.

Confession, baptism and confirmation open the way to the use of this Supper.

Commands to use these Sacraments are plain. Acts 2:38, 42.

By neglecting I live in wilful disobedience to these.

By obedience, I enter into right relation to my Saviour and His Body. Eph. 1:22, 23, 4:11-16.

By obedience, I fulfil one of the conditions for having my prayers answered. 1 Jno. 3:22.

By obedience, I can show my thankfulness for His mercies to me. Psa. 116:12-14.

—K. J. H.

When alone, you are not alone, because the Father is with you; and in the midst of the crowd you are not in danger, because the Father Himself loveth you. What a blessed word is that—"the Father Himself loveth you!" Go and live as His children.—Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon.

What do you suppose the Church is for but to stand by one another. It is not only, behold the man we were meant to be; but behold the man we can be; behold the man we were to help one another to be. That is the point. The Church of Jesus Christ was meant to be the most glorious brotherhood the world had ever seen. The Church exists to help one another to be the men we were meant to be.—A. F. Winnington-Ingram.

Watching.

Some day, I know not when, our Lord shall come;
And when He comes I know He'll take us home.
So keep us trusting, Lord, whate'er befall,
And make us ready when we hear the call.

It may be He will tarry through the night,
Or it may be He'll come with morning light;
But whether it be day or night, He'll come.
And when He comes I know He'll take us home.

But if His coming is not very near,
And if He wills that we shall tarry here,
Of this one thing I'm sure—I know it well—
It will be heaven just to do His will.

Dear Lord, we long to see Thy blessed face;
Our feet are often weary in the race,
We wait Thy coming, when each day is done;
Lord, tarry not, oh, tarry not, but come.

Undiscovered and Undeveloped Elements in Character.

Happy is the man who acts the part of a Columbus to his own soul. In the domain of the immortal soul lies a whole continent of undiscovered and undeveloped character. This continent of indescribable possibilities should lure onward and upward. It is a quest worthy of the most ambitious and the daring. We have read somewhere that in Scotland is a battlefield on which natives of the soil and the Saxons once met in terrible conflict. But no monument marks the scene of the bloody fight. All over the field grows the beautiful Scotch heather—except in one spot. There a little blue flower grows abundantly. No flowers of equal beauty are to be found for many a league around. The reason assigned is the following: Just on the spot where they grow the bodies of the slain were buried, and mother earth was saturated with the blood and the remains of the unfortunate victims. The seeds of these flowers were there before. As soon as blood touched them, they sprang up. They developed. And every blue flower on Culloden's field, as it bends to the mountain breeze, is a memorial of the brave warriors who dyed that heathery sod with their crimson gore!

Even so, there are seeds lying dormant in the human heart that need but the passionate touch of holy purpose, determined effort, to make them germinate and grow and develop into elements of strength, of heroism, or it may be of crime; that will add symmetry to character or mar its beauty, according to the moral character of the clumbering seed. The shed blood that saturated the soil of that battlefield brought the seed into activity, and as a result the beautiful blue flower decorates the field of blood. Benedict Arnold was for many years a patriot above reproach. But, alas! in an evil day he sold his birthright for a mess of pottage, and his name is held in execration. Character shall survive

What seems to grow fairer to me as life goes by is the love and grace and tenderness of it; not its wit and cleverness, and grandeur of knowledge—grand as knowledge is—but just the laughter of little children, and the friendship of friends, and the cozy talk by the fireside, and the sight of flowers, and the sound of music.—John Richard Green.

So wulde I praie

Grant me but grace

A Brief For the Church.

Thoſe critics of the Church and of the miniſtry who have deplored the "decadence" of organized Chriſtian religion, and who have aſſerted that the Church has been tardy in developing and carrying out great reform movements, do not ſeem to comprehend that the Chriſtian religion mothered them all. They forget that Chriſtianity muſt perforce be as a great ſpiritual fountainhead in order that the channels for humane, moral and ſpiritual works may be kept fluſhed; that without the fountain there can be no rivulets and rivers.

Thoſe who would have the Church converted into a Red Cross organization, a Y. M. C. A., a Y. W. C. A., a Knights of Columbus order, a Hebrew aſſociation, ſeem to forget that millions of dollars are backing theſe organizations, and that the Church muſt, being the fountain from which moſt of theſe movements ſprang, remain at leaſt not conſtantly mobile. To a very vital degree the Church muſt be as a ſanctuary, as a citadel of ſtrength for all ſouls where they may gird themſelves for life's battles; as a ſtrong fortreſs from which ſoldiers of God may paſs to do battle with the evil forces of life. Conceivably it is ſcarcely the part of the Church to cart ſandwiches and chocolates to fighting men at the front when organizations for that purpoſe have been created. Nor can any reckoning be made of the work of the Church in the conflict juſt ended in the injection of morality and ſpirituality. The churches ſupplied the chaplains, and the Y. M. C. A. was born of the Church of God; and the Red Cross ſprang from the everlaſting mercy of Jeſus Chriſt.

Hence there ſhould be a huſhing of theſe critiſis who ſeem to have blinded themſelves to the moral and ſpiritual values.

Critics who ſuppoſe the churches are not playing their part in the world make a ſorrowful blunder, becauſe moſt of them are keenly alive and quick and ſerving in many ways. Bat it might be intereſting to theſe critics, if they looked underneath the ſurface of things to diſcover why this Church or that Church ſeemed inactive, to find that the miniſters were not only living on reduced rations, but were being ſtarved intellectually through poverty.

For, albeſt the Man of Galilee had no place whereat to reſt His head. His friends looked well to it that He did not lack for food and raiment.

Theſe miniſters whom we are quick to criticize, although few of them deſerve criticism, have the ſame human needs that other folk have. They cannot feed and clothe their families on half or two-thirds pay and ſtill retain their old ſweetneſs and enthuſiaſm. They drive and point toward the Kingdom of God. They lead us in the paths of righteouſneſs. But ſimply becauſe they have ſtripped their minds of the mania for owning things, ſhall the laymen and pariſhioners forget that they are human beings with human needs?

The ſalaries of our paſtors ſhould be increased, and they ſhould be increased now. Let that be a part of our work of reſtruction.—Birmingham, Ala., News.

Jeſus went into a mountain apart to pray. We wonder how a grand outward miniſtry can be ſuſtained. The answer is ſimple. Every outward miniſtry that is maſſive, life-taxing in its fierce demands upon the miniſter, is ſuſtained by mountain-climbing, ſolitary communion with God, the nursing of old gentle Mother Nature, and ſoul-fellowſhip with the Father of all life. The inward man muſt be renewed day by day; we muſt deepen the ſoil if we would enrich the crop. If the Maſter could not do without lonely prayer, the ſervant ſurely cannot diſpenſe with ſecret devotion. It is not enough to pray aloud, nor is it ſufficient to pray in company in the language of common prayer; we muſt know the agony, which is joy, of ſpeechleſs communion, and the exquiſitely tender gladneſs of ſecret fellowſhip. We muſt be cloſeted with God.—Joſeph Parker.

The average man has very ſimple ideas of religion. To him it means unſelfiſhneſs, generosity, ſincerity, cleanlineſs of ſoul, a genuineness and ſtraightforward honeſty that deſpises cant and is chary of anything in the way of religious profeſſion, an abiding faith in goodneſs as he has ſeen it in his own wife or mother, a very real humility, becauſe of his own defects—a humility which we are quite juſtified in calling penitence—and a readineſs therefore to forgive the defects (or as we ſhould ſay ſins) of others; with it all, a general conſciouſneſs of God, of whom he is rather vaguely aware and about whom he finds it almoſt impoſſible to ſpeak eaſily and naturally.—From "The Experiment of Faith," by Biſhop Fiske.

Lord! Thou art with Thy people ſtill; they ſee Thee in the night-watches, and their hearts burn within them as Thou talkeſt with them by the way. And Thou art near to thoſe that have not known Thee; open their eyes that they may ſee Thee—ſee Thee weeping over them, and ſaying, "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life"—ſee Thee hanging on the croſs and ſaying, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do"—ſee Thee as Thou wilt come again in Thy glory to judge them at the laſt. Amen.—George Eliot.

It is part of the miſſion of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt to ſhow us that even a perfect life muſt be a pilgrim life, ſubject to change, to loſs, to ſorrow.—W. G. Horder.

PREPAREDNESS FOR THE CHURCH

Never in the history of the country has the Church's responsibility in upholding the ideals of the nation been so great. In rendering its share of the essential work, its buildings should provide for maximum efficiency in every department. Consult the leading specialists in all branches of church improvement, construction, alteration, etc.

Designs will be prepared indicating how contemplated changes, etc., can be effected. Local labor will be availed of when desired for the constructive work, the artistic and elaborate enrichment being executed under the supervision of our New York artists.

Send for photographs of church interiors showing changes and improvements that have been accomplished, with memorial gifts included as a part of the scheme.

MISSIONARY RESERVE CORPS.

Readers of the Southern Churchman have been kept informed as to the condition of the Missionary Treasury of the Church and the large deficit which is facing us. This deficit is due to the war-time conditions through which we have been passing. Last year the dioceses and parishes failed to meet their apportionments by an amount which in the aggregate was considerable, and this year it is feared that there will be another shortage on that account to be added to the deficit brought over. The Board think this was largely due to the thousands of Churchmen absent from their parishes and business in the army or in other government employ. It would be strange if this had not affected our missionary offerings in many places. In addition, the war has added tremendously to the costs of the Board in carrying on its work, raising all expenses and especially those connected with the mission in China. The good round sum of $650,000 is needed to clean up the slate and put the Board in a position to push forward its great work in behalf of the Kingdom of God in the new day of after-the-war, with its tremendous opportunities and demands. Shall we enter the new era trammelled with this debt, crippled in resources perhaps for years to come, unable to meet the occasion and enter the open doors, or shall the Church pay off this debt along with other war expenses and stand ready for the call of the future opening before her?

The Board of Missions has not been unmindful of these conditions, we may be sure, or of other considerations which were involved in attempting to meet them. It is needful that the ordinary machinery for raising the Church's offerings should not be over-taxed nor the regular inflow of contributions be stayed. Unusual means must needs be adopted to meet an unusual condition. Plans to this end have been in the making for some time, but it was thought best that they should not be announced until perfected and, indeed, put in operation. The ban is now lifted, however, and we are at liberty to speak of the Missionary

Reserve Corps to be enlisted for this extraordinary service, to hold this gap and "turn the battle at the gate."

There are wanted for this duty 2,700 volunteers, staunch, able and courageous Churchmen, who will contribute this amount during this month of December.

200 Reservists giving $1,000
each	$200,000
500 Reservists giving 500
each	250,000
2,000 Reservists giving 100
each	200,000
	$650,000

That is, the Board of Missions, speaking for the Church whose accredited agent it is, have singled out a class or contingent who are able and willing to do this necessary thing and put it up to them. The great missionary army meanwhile, heartened and inspired by their liberality, is to "carry on" with its regular and unfailing flow of contributions, so that the onward march against the hosts of darkness and spiritual bondage may be uninterrupted.

This movement is not a "drive." It is sought to accomplish this really great undertaking quietly and unobtrusively. Not every Churchman will be asked to join this selected company, though no volunteer will be refused. And this feature will add to the dignity and worth of this service to which they are called to whom God gives the ability and the willing mind.

The following characteristic clarion call comes from dear old Bishop Tuttle, and is put forth as the first bulletin to the M. R. C. from the Headquarters of the General Staff, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York (George Gordon King being Treasurer):

From Our Commander-in-Chief.

They call me commander-in-chief of our missionary forces at home and abroad.

If yes, I want to send an order along the line.

"They shall not pass," was said some time since against enemy invaders by brave home defenders.

"They shall not pass," be it said in heart and soul now against invading enemies, six hundred and fifty thousand dollars strong, threatening to go over and into the column of debt for the next year.

I call a halt. "They shall not pass." I call for reservist recruits who, before New Year's Day, shall make good the will that indeed the six hundred and fifty thousand of the enemy forces "shall not pass."

Put me down as one recruit in the sum of $500.

DAN'L. S. TUTTLE,
Presiding Bishop.

St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 25, 1918.

In the meanwhile the whole Church has still an excellent opportunity to make good its deficiency on the apportionment for this year. December is a perfectly good month for this purpose, and there are still remaining the usual complement of four Sundays to say nothing of Christmas Day. Surely our patriotism, worthy as it is, should not so overrun our religious obligations that we should have surpassed every demand made for the country and failed on the modest sums assigned us for the Church's warfare. We could almost hear the Master say, "These ye ought to have done, and not to have left the other undone."

The Committee on Missions of the Province of Washington, which Province had paid to November 1 only a little more than two-thirds of its apportionments, has issued a letter to the Clergy stressing the importance of special effort to meet these obligations. They say:

"The need is great and we urge that every part of your parish machinery, which may be required, be brought into play and at once to secure whatever may be lacking of your apportionment.

"Get your men and women, your boys and girls to work on this matter—our people are leaders, they have shown what glorious things they can do for the war loans and Red Cross drives and all other war agencies—get them to work for Christ's own work, His schools, hospitals and churches throughout our mission fields. Call your vestry and your congregation for consultation, prayer and action"

THE REUNION OF THE CHURCHES.

One of the great subjects before the universal Church to-day is Church Unity. But a little while ago it was looked upon as a harmless fad of a few, chiefly Episcopalians, and was hardly to be considered seriously by practical minded people. Now it is a live if not a burning question throughout at least the Protestant branches of the Christian Church, and is being more earnestly discussed by our brethren of other names than by ourselves. The conditions existing in these times, the conviction that a divided and discordant Church cannot fulfil its mission to a world which is learning the value in its own affairs of unity and concord, a growing sense of the futility of our continued separations, or rather, let us say and believe, a mighty impulse of the Spirit of our God Who is "not the author of confusion but of peace," is urging this matter as one of immediate and vital importance.

It is a difficult and many-sided problem. It needs to be approached without prejudice or prepossession but with an humble, open and intelligent mind. Our lay-people especially should be informed as to the issues involved and the methods proposed to meet them, so that the weight of their influence, be it much or little, may be wisely directed. Some of them think that unity is a thing impossible. Others imagine that it could easily be brought about if God's people were sure that it was desirable, but are obsessed with a musty notion that the present order is best. Both are vastly mistaken. There is need for wide discussion of a subject so full of interest and fraught with such splendid possibilities, and for the exercise of the most thoughtful intelligence upon it.

We call attention to an article from The Canadian Churchman to be found in another column, as a sane and reasonable presentation of one phase of this discussion in regard to which there is no little confusion of thought in many minds.

BISHOP JAMES BOWEN FUNSTEN, D. D.

In the death of Bishop Funsten, the news of which comes to us almost as we go to press, the Church has lost one of her oldest, most consecrated and most efficient Missionary Bishops and a leader whom, from our human viewpoint, she could ill afford to spare. After a most useful ministry in his native State he was called to serve in a difficult and isolated field where for nearly twenty years he has labored with both energy and enthusiasm and with marked success. He was truly wedded to his work, which he accepted at much personal sacrifice, and having undertaken it, "he never changed, nor wished to change, his place." He has been indefatigable in labor, a true shepherd of his flock and a builder upon sure foundations. Genial, affectionate, whole-hearted, a constant friend, a strong and wise leader, a sympathetic, evangelical preacher, he has left the impress of his strong personality and godly character upon the Church in a wide field where it will long remain a source of blessing and a norm of service to those who shall follow him.

Here and There

The changed conditions in England stand out more in this news item than in anything we have yet seen:

LONDON, ENGLAND (Wednesday) —Herbert H. Asquith, Liberal leader and former Premier, will be opposed for his seat from the East District of Fifehire in the coming elections by Mrs. George E. Hope. Mrs. Hope is running independently of any party, and one of her planks is a demand that William Hohenzollern be brought to England to be tried for murder.

When the war began English women were struggling for recognition at the polls, now one is contesting a seat in Parliament with an ex-prime minister.

Transatlantic airplane mail service is now being considered by a Parliamentary committee, according to a statement of Lord Morris, who says that already daily mail service by airplane is maintained between France and England.

The shrinkage of the world is emphasized by the action of the University of Athens (Greece) in conferring upon President Wilson the degree of Doctor of Laws. Prominent men today no longer remain the property of one nation. They become world citizens.

A presidential boom for General Pershing has been launched in Ohio by ex-Senator Charles Dick and fourteen other Republicans. Every war the United States has fought has produced its President. Some may think this a trifle early, but Ohio is a State in which the naming of men for the presidency is never thought premature. General Pershing has not been heard from on the subject of late. It is a fact, of interest again just now, however, that in August, 1917, he declared publicly that his whole training had been that of a soldier, and that he had absolutely no other ambition.

As soon as the Florida House of Delegates follows the example of its State Senate in ratifying the prohibition amendment to the Federal Constitution, it will make fifteen States that have acted affirmatively. John Barleycorn had better be putting his affairs in order, for his last gasp is not far distant.

Thanksgiving Day saw a new precedent established in the serving of a dinner in the air. It took place over one of the government aviation fields and will go down in history as the first meal served in the air. No doubt the time will soon come when a dinner in the air will attract no more attention than one on a dining car does today.

The Chinese delegates to the peace conference have started on their long journey. They will not arrive in time for the opening session, but will be able to participate in part of the deliberations.

Book Notices

(All books reviewed at any time in this column may be ordered at the publisher's price given, plus postage 15 cents, from the book department of the Southern Churchman.)

Good and Evil. A Study in Biblical Theology. By the Rev. Loring W. Batten, S. T. D., Professor of Literature and Interpretation of the Old Testament, General Theological Seminary, New York. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. Pp. 224. $1.25. (The Paddock Lectures, 1917-18.)

We have read this book with more than usual interest. The author's purpose was to study all the theories of the age-long problem of good and evil that are propounded in the Scriptures. They are found chiefly in the wisdom books, both canonical and apocryphal, where the subject is directly treated, but other portions of the Old Testament, and the New Testament to some extent, are drawn upon for example and illustration. The field is almost a new one, and Dr. Batten's twenty-five years' work as a teacher of the Old Testament has well fitted him for its systematic exploration. Though learned, his style is clear and simple, making his book a delightful one to read, even where one cannot readily accept all of his conclusions in the sphere of the Higher Criticism.

One's disappointment in the book comes at the point where the author leaves off. The last ten pages are a summing up of some of the results gained—side lights as it were on an indissoluble problem, with especial reference to the pains of the great war, and they are excellent. But the reader feels that a scriptural discussion of a subject so close to the human heart should not end without a larger reference to the consolations which are afforded the suffered in God's Word. There is another aspect of the question beside the merely academic problem. The supporting presence of God with His suffering saints, saving them from reckless despair by His comforting grace, is one phase of the matter as presented in Scripture which cannot be overlooked. And another which the author barely touches upon is the human and, therefore, the suffering Christ as the revelation of God, and the only true one we have after Job and Koheleth and the rest have done their utmost by wisdom to find Him out. Surely the biblical material on the problem of evil is not exhausted until Calvary has been reached and explored.

The Passion and Exaltation of Christ. By the Rev. Francis J. Hall, D. D., Professor of Dogmatic Divinity in the General Theological Seminary, New York. Longmans, Green and Company, New York. 1918. Pp. 323. $2.00 net.

This is the seventh of the series of ten volumes which Dr. Hall promises on Dogmatic Theology. We doubt not it will be found to be one of the most valuable of the series, which has a recognized place in the theological literature of the day. The central doctrines of the Christian faith, based upon the death, resurrection, ascension and heavenly priesthood of our Divine Lord, are here dealt with in the precise, but lucid and thoroughly intelligible style of which Professor Hall is master. Modern theories of the atonement and resurrection are sufficiently examined and criticized; but the old-fashioned evangelical theologian will find himself quite at home in these pages, for the learned author is that kind of a theologian himself so long as he is dealing with these fundamental verities which must be proven by the certain warrants of Holy Scripture.

Papers and Addresses of the Thirty-Fourth Church Congress in the United States, Cincinnati, Ohio, October 23 to 26, 1917. New York. Edwin S. Gorham, 11 West Forty-fifth Street. Paper. Pp. 201.

This belated Record comes with a note explaining the long delay in publication, due to accidents and to war conditions which other publishers, at least, can understand. The subjects discussed at the Congress embraced The American Home, Continuity in the Ministry, Religious Problem at American Universities, Christian Marriage and Divorce, Moral Values in the United States, Luther and Religious Conditions in the Middle West.

Letters to the Editor

In this Department the Editor will at all times welcome communications expressing opinions on the various topics which are engaging the attention of the Church. But the Editor will not hold himself responsible for such opinions.

No "Letter to the Editor" will appear in our columns except over the signature of the writer.

IS THERE DANGER OF CONTAGION FROM THE CUP IN THE HOLY COMMUNION?

(Abridged.)

Mr. Editor: This is an age of change. Nothing is safe from the hands of the Iconoclasts. One would suppose that a venerable and sacred institution such as the Lord's Supper ought to be safe, even in such a time of universal restlessness and dissatisfaction; but nothing is safe.

In the Mother Church, the question at the head of this letter has already been met. A number of the leading medical men of the Church of England investigated and discussed thoroughly the matter, and decided that the risk was practically nil. This should satisfy everybody, but does not.

Some years ago, one of the prominent life insurance men of our country asked me whether I knew that ministers of the gospel lived longer, on the average, than any other class of men. I answered that I had for a very long time so understood. He then said: "I will now tell you something that you do not know. The Clergy of the Episcopal Church live longer, on the average, than the ministers of any other denomination." And yet the priests of the Church are the men who, after few or very many have communicated, drain the remaining wine from the chalice. Could there be any more indisputable proof than this that there is absolutely no danger from contagion in the cup?

What is the proposed substitute for a method that has stood for nineteen centuries? "Intinction," borrowed, perhaps, from the Greek Church. A recent scribe has suggested that, after the wafer has been dipped in the wine, it should be put "into their hands"—that is, those of the communicants.

With the general scrupulosity against waste of any of the sacred elements, can you not see the devout communicant, after placing the submerged wafer in his mouth, carefully licking his hands? And all this mussy mess in the name of twentieth century hygiene.

Why "into their hands"? So as not to violate the rubric, of course. The present writer has always been a stickler for the rubrics, and believes many of the Clergy to be shamefully disobedient in the liberty, or rather license, they use with regard to these same rules. The compilers aforesaid may not have been inspired; but they came pretty near it, since they were able to pack so much wisdom into their directions.

But how about the rubrics, regulations, commands of the Lord Jesus, the Founder of the feast? He said: "Eat," that is, masticate. He said: "Drink." Christ said: "Do this"—not something else—in "remembrance of me." Why will not men steadfastly adhere to the teaching and practice of our Divine Redeemer, in their sublime simplicity?

Will you permit me to tell of the practice in one parish church, where it has prevailed for years? Of course it may be done in other parishes, and doubtless is. Before the rector places upon the altar the wafers, he, although there was careful ablution of the hands just prior to the opening of the service, dips his fingers, not simply his finger-tips, into a lavabo and dries them thoroughly, but not ostentatiously, on a napkin; for he has been handling the service book and a more or less ancient manuscript for about three-quarters of an hour, and those hands must be somewhat soiled. When it comes to administering from the chalice, he takes it in his right hand, and a purificator, opened, on his left hand; and, after one has communicated, and while passing it into the hands of the next communicant, he deftly wipes the chalice at the point of contact, both inside and out. He uses half the formula for each communicant; and he gives a twist of his wrist in passing from one to another, so that no successive communicants touch the chalice at the same point. Indeed, because of the width of his cleansing sweep with the purificator, it is probable that the chalice is wiped four or five times before any communicant touches the place against which the first lips were pressed. As to the purificator, while the cup is in the hands of any communicant, the administrator turns it a little; so that the cup is not touched twice in the same place until it has been wiped three or four times. A purificator, say nine inches by nine, can be used along a whole railfull of communicants without change, leaving the entire clean center for wiping around the chalice, inside and out, three or four times, when it is carried to the altar. This method does not take any longer than the ordinary careless style of administration.

Will you let me, for a moment only, advert to another unseemly practice at the Holy Communion? No one invited to a banquet in any home would simply eat to his satisfaction, and immediately retire, leaving host and fellow-guests without so much as a farewell word. It would be an insult. At all events it would be impolite. At the banquet given by the King, should we not be, at least, as courteous? At the institution, "when they had sung a hymn, they went out." Our hymn is the Gloria in Excelsis. Till that is sung, no one should leave.

This is my swan song. Perhaps it is not a sweet one; but I had to sing it, in the name of my gracious Saviour. In all probability, before this letter is placed in cold type, I shall have passed into the immediate presence of the glorified Christ. I thank Him that, as I leave this place of service, this Church, as a whole, is loyal in the manner of its observance of that inestimable blessing—the Second Sacrament. May she remain so!

R. MARSHALL HARRISON.
Bellingham, Washington, November 16, 1918.

BISHOP RANDOLPH.

II.

As a Theologian.

Rev. Randolph H. McKim, D. D.

4. Let me next speak of Bishop Randolph as a theologian.

Fortunately he has left us in his own printed volume, the Paddock Lectures of 1901, ample material for a judgment of his theological position on the great questions that have agitated the mind of the Church during the last half century. The title of the book is "Reason, Faith and Authority in Christianity," and, in my judgment, it possesses permanent value in the realm of rational theology as applied to the problems of the latter half of the Nineteenth Century.

As to the Bishop himself, these lectures exhibit, in the first place, his broad culture and his wide reading in the fields of history, theology, philosophy, science and literature, including both poetry and fiction. They show, also, the acuteness of his mind and the penetration of his intellect. With the rapier of truth he pierces many of the sophisms and logical fallacies which have flourished under the protection of illustrious names. We see here a mind open to all truth—"come whence it may, cost what it will"—but at the same time watchful against error, jealous of pretenders, ready to challenge the credentials of every new doctrine before granting it admission into the sanctuary of God. However pleasing, however plausible, he halts them at the threshold and submits their claims to the acid test of reason and Scripture.

We are impressed, also, with Bishop Randolph's intellectual courage. He is a perfectly fearless champion of the truth. Strong in the faith and armed with the good sword of a trained intellect, he does not hesitate to challenge the conclusions of the most famous writers when his reason and his conscience are convinced they are in error. The glamor of reputation and authority do not dazzle him. He is not intimidated by the shadow of a name, however great. When God's truth is at stake no man's name or authority counts. Once convinced that the giant is challenging the armies of the living God, Alfred Randolph fears not to meet him, though only armed with the sling and stone of Divine truth and reason. This is his slogan: "To the law and to the testimony! If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

Bishop Randolph stands out in these lectures as a truly rational theologian, and yet a theologian whose beliefs are rooted in Holy Scripture—and whose theology is the theology of the Cross.

He lived through the controversies of Darwinism, Materialism, Socialism, Puseyism, Romanism, Mediaevalism, the Higher Criticism, Liberalism, and he met the questions they raised with an open and a fearless mind, but with unfailing loyalty to the truth of God. He saw "no ground in the inspired writings of the New Testament for the supposed antagonism between reason and faith," nor did he recognize any real antagonism between religion and science. He says: "The reasonable faith of the Christian world has long ago settled the question that astronomical theories have no connection with Christian morality or Christian doctrine." He held that "the revelation contained in the Bible had never been in peril. The battle had been fought over its interpretation." He repudiated any theory that "tended to divorce authority from reason, or to conceive of them as antagonistic forces."

As to his formal faith, like Phillips Brooks, he gloried in the doctrine of the Trinity. It was not to him a burden, but a joy and a light. The Deity of Christ was the very cornerstone of his faith; and so, like Brooks, he found fountains of refreshments in the Nicene Creed. He saw that the doctrines, and the ethics of Christianity stand or fall together. Christian morality is rooted in our relation to God in Christ. "To isolate the Sermon on the Mount from the Gospel of Christ is to render it unintelligible and impossible." In Bishop Randolph's theology the Incarnation held the central position. The Incarnation is "the authoritative and central revelation of Christianity." "Christ reveals in His personality the Divine and the human—He unites God and man." "If we undermine the truth of the Incarnation, we undermine Christianity." He had a true and profound conviction of the crucial importance of the Nicene definition of the Person of Christ, God and man. He quotes, with satisfaction, the story of Thomas Carlyle's change of view on this subject; how, in his earlier years, he had spoken contemptuously of the Athanasian controversy, of the Christian world "torn to pieces over a diphthong," and then how, in later years, "he perceived that Christianity itself had been at stake. If Arius had won, it would have dwindled away to a legend."

I cannot forbear quoting here a passage of great power and penetration on this vital theme. He says: "The phrase 'dwindling to a legend' has a prophetic significance. The religious bodies of Christendom which have modified and finally excluded divinity from the conception of the Person of Christ have gravitated toward humanitarianism as that truth has been obscured, and with them Christianity has literally dwindled to a legend. Their power as churches and their hold upon human life have progressively failed. Their religion has evaporated into a vague philosophy, their numbers have fallen away, and they are being left to themselves, away from the forces that move the world, powerless to help men, without appreciable influence upon their generation. This is the solemn lesson of history. Human nature, self-confident, self-centered, possessed by the world-spirit, turns from the Incarnation, the manifestation of God in the flesh; it is the last thing it will believe. It will say its Creed, but that is only a courtesy to religion, and an imagination of God afar off. To really believe in the Incarnation is bringing God too close. The world-spirit says, this world is our own territory. We do not want it invaded. God must keep in His place, and we are willing to acknowledge His greatness and glory afar off * * * But a God who links Himself to my nature, an incarnate Saviour who claims to rule my conscience, my thoughts, my daily life, my business, my family, my politics, my money, my all—the world cannot stand this. It is the reality of Christianity, and between this and the world spirit in human nature conflict is inevitable; but the result will always be the same. Jesus Christ uniting God and man will be more and more seen as this authority—the King of men, the central light, by which the Word of God is interpreted, testified to by the ever-deepening experience and consciousness of the Church of the living God, the pillar and ground of the truth."

But Bishop Randolph not only held with profound conviction the doctrine of the Incarnation—he saw that this doctrine was rooted in the historic facts of Christianity. Holding thus with profound conviction to the historic fact of the Incarnation, it was inevitable that he should come into conflict with Martineau, that most gifted writer in the ranks of modern Unitarianism, when he taught that Christianity was independent of the historic facts treasured up in the Creeds.

For the same reason the Bishop challenged the argument of Lessing against historic Christianity, which Dr. Martineau accepted, and showed that the unbelief of Strauss and Baur and the Tubingen School was the legitimate fruitage of Lessing's teaching. With keen analysis and with masterly argument he exposes the fallacy of the positions of this school of thinkers. He stands forth throughout the volume as the immovable champion of historic Christianity. These are his words: "The history from the very first was the basis of the experience and the faith of the Church." "Christian ideas which have changed the world are not self-evolving and self-sustaining, cut off from the Divine sources from which they originally sprung and by which their strength is continually renewed." "The retrogressions of the Church and the world are co-incidental with the corruptions of the historic faith of Christianity."

One who held this position could not but consider the denial of the supernatural birth of Christ, and of the reality of His resurrection from the dead, as subversive of the historic faith and destructive of Christianity. It was but a corollary of this to write as the Bishop did: "An accredited minister of any Church who discredits the beliefs of that Church and uses his office to pull down its Creed is a person whose ethical position the conscience of any community that deserves the name of Christian would repudiate as one who carries a lie in his right hand! Dishonesty disintegrates far more than doubt."

Nevertheless, this champion of the Creeds did not hold that they were infallible in their forms of statement. He admitted that these forms in which our essential beliefs are clothed might conceivably be reconsidered by the Church. But he denied the necessity of such revision. "The forms of the great Creeds through which we worship exhibit no decay and no inadequacy to hold the living principles of the Gospel." * * * It must not be supposed that in his strong insistence on the doctrine and fact of the Incarnation Bishop Randolph overlooked or minimized the doctrine of the Atonement—the saving power of the death of Christ. No, his reason and his heart turned to the Cross of Calvary as the Fountain of Peace and Hope for a sinful world. He says: "This Jesus was sinless, and He died for sinners. He was the Son of God and the Son of man, as no other being in the universe is or can be. Hence, He is the reconciler of man to God. His death is the atonement for the sins of the world. On His Cross He draws all men unto Him. They turn and they look to Him and they are changed. They can never look toward God as they did before. They can never conceive of God and feel toward Him as they did in the days of darkness, before the day-spring from on High arose. He has changed everything." "That mysterious Cross sweetens all the world's bitter waters." (To be continued.)

RE-ORDINATION.

The Rev. W. G. Boyd, M. A., in The Canadian Churchman.

* * * Corporate reunion postulates some external nexus, a polity, a constitution. The part which it has occupied in the past history of the Church and its present wide prevalence compels the belief that this will ultimately be found in the historic Episcopate.

It has been said that "the objection is not to episcopacy in itself, but to implications which seem to some to be involved in it." A Presbyterian said to the writer the other day, "We believe that we have all that is to be had in a ministry." To admit that Episcopal ordination could give him anything that he had not already received would be, he felt, to attribute to the Anglican minister a superiority not substantiated by the facts.

In meeting this difficulty it is very important that we keep in mind two different conceptions of ministry, the priestly and the prophetic. According to the first conception the minister is the official representative of the Church. His chief function is to act as "steward of the mysteries." He is the man duly authorized to lead the Church in her corporate worship and to administer the sacraments. If an officer of a society has been duly appointed his acts are "valid," i. e., they are legally the acts of the society which he represents. From the point of view of the priestly, the official conception of ministry it is clear that the value of the acts of a minister depends upon the regularity of the method of his appointment. If he is rightly ordained his sacramental ministry is "valid."

But there is another conception of the ministry, the prophetic; and, speaking generally, this is the dominant conception of the ministry in the Protestant churches. The minister is the exponent of the Word of God. He is the man with a message. The value of his ministry depends upon the measure of his spiritual endowment. The proof of his ministry is in the fruits of his preaching. Ordination is, from this point of view, of secondary importance. In some denominations it is merely congregational in character. In some it hardly exists. Even in those churches which have been strict in the past there seems to be a readiness to admit into their ministry without ordination preachers from other, even the least organized, denominations.

These two kinds of ministry may find embodiment in two distinct classes of men. In the Middle Ages the prophetic ministry was largely in the hands of the preaching orders, and there was considerable friction between them and the official parochial Clergy. At the Reformation many causes, political as well as ecclesiastical, combined to emphasize the official element in the ministry of the Church of England. The suppression of the free, prophetic spirit had much to do with the divisions that ensued. On the other hand, the two conceptions of ministry are not mutually exclusive, and, speaking generally, in existing Christian ministries they are combined. The Anglican priest is called to preach, and the Methodist preacher administers the sacraments. But the emphasis placed on one or other aspect of the ministry is not the same, and words are used and understood in different senses by men who have in mind mainly one or other conception. The Presbyterian, who resents the idea that episcopal ordination can give him anything which he has not received, is thinking in terms of the prophetic ministry and refusing to acknowledge that the preachers of his own Church manifest less spiritual power than those who have been episcopally ordained, an implication which was in nowise in the mind of the other. On the other hand, if the proposed reordination is considered from the point of view of the official conception of the ministry, it may be fairly claimed that something is given, viz., a new official position, a jurisdiction not possessed before. Episcopal ordination gives to the ministerial acts of the recipient a validity, an authorization, in the Anglican Church such as they had before in the Presbyterian Church. This is just a simple statement of fact, and in no way depends upon any supposed superiority of one system over the other. It would be equally true if an Anglican became a Presbyterian minister. He would thereby receive a fresh official position, an additional jurisdiction.

Two things, then, a minister needs: (1) Divine grace to live the life and to fulfil the work to which he believes that he is called; and (2) Divine authorization to render legal and valid his official acts. It is part of our Christian faith that God gives to His people the grace which they need for the work to which He calls them, and a Christian minister will naturally think that his own prayers and those of the people on his behalf on the occasion of his ordination will be effective for his upholding in the responsibilities then laid upon him. The authorization which is given him by his Church in his ordination he will rightly believe to be of God, for the Church in which he serves he believes to be no mere human society; the Anglican, because his Church is one by historic continuity with the Church of Apostolic times; the Presbyterian or Methodist, because he believes that his Church, too, had its origin in a movement of the Holy Spirit and an apprehension of truth. These are claims that neither side need question, but they do not make the jurisdiction conveyed by the two churches respectively the same; for the churches are not one, but two. Their constitutions are divergent, and what makes a man an officer in one does not make him an officer of the other. We believe that the same Holy Spirit, who, in other circumstances and other times, because of the hardness of men's hearts, permitted and used the divisions of the Church, is now moving us towards a union which He can use yet more effectively, and we are endeavoring to find means by which it can be brought about.

It is possible that it may be by some other process. But if reordination is to form part of the process, what is needed is some plan by which it is made clear that a man in accepting reordination is not thereby depreciating his previous ministry.

One method which has been suggested is that of "conditional ordination." Many have declared that for the sake of unity they would gladly submit to reordination (if it may be so described), provided that some such words as "If thou art not already ordained" preceded the words of ordination, the suggestion being that the ordinand himself is thus saved from admitting any deficiency in his previous ordination. But what is needed is something more than this, viz., a definite recognition on the part of the ordaining Church of the worth of the past ministry of the candidate for reordination. Conditional baptism is used where there is doubt of the fact of baptism having taken place. Here there is no question as to the external fact, and no desire to question the spiritual endowment conveyed.

Dr. Orchard, in his recent book, "The Outlook of Christianity," has a better suggestion. Amongst many pieces of sound advice which he administers to the Anglican Church, he says: "Let there be a special ordination service for those coming from other denominations, recognizing and extending their orders." It was in this sense that the Rev. R. J. Campbell understood his ordination by the Bishop of Birmingham after twenty years of distinguished ministry in the Congregational Church. Canon Adderley, preaching on that occasion, said: "To deny the work of the Holy Spirit in your former ministry would be for me, at least, to risk the commission of the unpardonable sin." And Dr. Campbell writes: "No more than Canon Adderley did I think of it (his reordination) as the confession of the invalidity of my past ministry. . . . My action in submitting to reordination was no slight upon non-conformity in general, nor my own twenty years' previous ministry in particular. . . . That ministry was what it was, had its own value, and nothing that any ecclesiastical authority could say or do could make it different. To put the matter on the lowest ground, I was now receiving authority to minister in the Church of England, and that authority was conveyed by the laying on of hands." The recognition of previous ministry, which in this case was only given in the sermon preached at the time, might well be in some more formal way embodied in the ordination service, as Dr. Orchard suggests.

From the violence and rule of passion, from a servile will, and a commanding lust, from pride and vanity, from false opinion and ignorant confidence; from improvidence and prodigality, from envy and the spirit of slander; from sensuality, from presumption and from despair; from a state of temptation and a hardened spirit; from delaying of repentance and persevering in sin; from unthankfulness and irreligion, and from seducing others; from all infatuation of soul, folly and madness; from willfulness, self-love and vain ambition; from a vicious life and an unprovided death, good Lord, deliver us.—Jeremy Taylor.

The Great Commission

One Day's Income Plan.

On December 1 the One Day's Income Plan was over $134,000. This eclipses the final total of the Plan for the last fiscal year—and it has been accomplished in about one month's less time.

There remains but December in the current fiscal year. The Board of Missions is hoping to see a still further substantial increase in the Plan before the thirty-first comes. These offerings are doing invaluable work in helping to meet the extra expenses which war prices have entailed upon the Board and for which the apportionment to the Church does not provide.

Women in the Church: Bishop Lloyd Heads Committee.

Shall the women who have been doing war work so effectively have the chance to know of the opportunities for similar work in the Church? This was the question discussed by a self-appointed committee which met at the Bryn Mawr Club in New York on Tuesday evening, November 26. Bishop Lloyd, President of the Board of Missions; Dr. Gardner, of the General Board of Religious Education; Deaconess Goodwin, candidate Secretary of the Board of Missions; Miss Grace Lindley, of the Women's Auxiliary; Miss Edith Hadley, of the Girls' Friendly Society; Miss Margaret Hobart, of the Churchman Editorial Staff, and Miss Adelaide Case and Miss Grace Hutchins, of St. Faith's House, constituted the committee.

They recognized the fact that women who have run canteens, organized branches of the Red Cross, supervised civilian relief, and reconstructed villages in France, will not be content to do small things in a small way. Many of these workers are Churchwomen. If we believe that the Church is infinitely greater than any man-made organization and has received the greatest commission ever given, then we believe that she has work to offer the most capable and the most gifted of her members. It is only a question of making known to the right women the positions which they may fill. If the Church is not there to make known the challenge of important work to be done, then the women will turn to organizations that seem to them more effective.

In order to help rectors and other leaders who wish to answer definitely questions about work for women in the Church, this self-appointed committee, with Bishop Lloyd as chairman, is preparing a leaflet on Women's Opportunities for Service in the Church. The leaflet will soon be ready, and may be ordered from the Board of Missions.

Why should we not expect that hundreds of women who have done big things will consecrate their ability in the service of God and His Church?

The way to be patriotic in America is not only to love America, but to love the duty that lies nearest to our hand, and know that in performing it we are serving our country.—President Wilson.

Praying for Unity.

Mr. Gardiner is in receipt of the following letter from distracted Russia, among others of like import:

To Robert H. Gardiner, Secretary of the World Conference on Faith and Order:

Beloved Brother in Christ: I thank you with all my heart for your kind letter. I shall always fervently pray, at the time fixed by you, for the reunion of Christians, the more so as, from my early youth, I have always prayed for it. At present, in these troubled times when the enemies of Christ are attacking Him with special zeal, it is more necessary than ever for us faithful brethren to unite as much as possible to defend the Christian faith.

Invoking upon you the benediction of our Saviour, I beg you to accept my sincerest regards.

Your brother in Christ,

Bishop Triphon.

The Church War Commission.

The date set for the appeal for funds for the ensuing year is Sunday, February 9.

The following information has been received from Bishop Perry, overseas representative of the War Commission: "With regard to the office of the Red Cross Chaplains Bureau and of the War Commission in Paris. The order from the War Department by which the hospital chaplains service is taken over by the army has been so modified that the Red Cross chaplains, who do not accept commissions, will be allowed to continue their service regardless of the actual termination of their term of enlistment. This provision allows the Red Cross Chaplains Bureau to retain the services of between twenty-five and thirty of our personnel. It is understood that the overseas representative has his residence in Paris, with permission from the commander-in-chief to visit all troops of the A. E. F., wherever his services may be needed for confirmations, etc. The appointment of the Rev. Arthur Washburn as special member of the Clergy staff of Holy Trinity Parish, Paris, for war-time work will be made on behalf of the War Commission and upon the nomination of the overseas representative of the Commission."

"The following Red Cross chaplains, who are Episcopalians, have received commissions as chaplains in the regular army: The Rev. Messrs. R. B. T. Anderson, J. H. Chapman, L. C. Kelley, M. E. Peabody, H. W. Smith, F. M. Wetherill, W. L. Wood and A. W. P. Wylie."

Chaplain Barrett P. Tyler, recently rector of Church of the Redeemer, Morristown, New Jersey, at present chaplain of the 325th Infantry, has been seriously wounded in action. He is, however, now considered out of danger.

Service at St. Paul's Church, Richmond, for Call to Prayer Messengers.

Monday morning is usually considered by women as their busiest time. Especially is it so considered by housewives, who in setting the domestic machinery of a new week going are "cumbered with much serving."

But on Monday, December 2d, hundreds of Richmond's Marthas suddenly became Marys. As the hour of ten approached they could be seen moving in all directions, in street cars, in automobiles and on foot, toward old St. Paul's Church. Each wore over her heart a bit of purple ribbon, bearing a white cross, and they were going to take part in a special service of consecration for the "messengers" selected to carry the Advent Call to Prayer.

And what an inspiring service it was! Every woman who attended it was enabled to feel that she was literally sitting at her Master's feet. The messengers assembled in the Sunday school room, from which, when they had been grouped according to the churches they represented, they marched in a long column, two by two, into the church. Bishop Gibson, surrounded by the rectors of most of the Episcopal churches of the city, conducted the service, delivered a solemn charge to the messengers, and, assisted by the clergy, administered the Holy Communion.

The Bishop was never more impressive than in his brief, simple, heart-to-heart address. In the beginning he asked that the messengers show their commissions, and from every pew hands went up displaying the authoritative little document which reads, as follows:

Diocese of Virginia.
Messenger's Commission.

To Whom It May Concern:

I hereby certify that _____ is a Woman's Auxiliary messenger of the Diocese of Virginia for proclaiming to the women of the Church the Advent Call of the auxiliary to special prayer and service, and the date of her commission is December 1, 1918.

(Signed)

ROBERT A. GIBSON,
Bishop of Virginia.

(Signed) _____ Rector of _____ Church, Richmond.

The Bishop then explained the movement to mobilize spiritual power for the aid of our government at this time when it is engaged in an effort to make the world better and happier, and to bring into being real democracy throughout the earth. He emphasized relation of good government to righteousness and cited, among other countries which had deteriorated by reason of bad government, ancient Palestine, of holy association. He also dwelt upon the specific things for which Christian women were to be asked to pledge themselves to work and pray during the difficult reconstruction days which are upon us, not forgetting to give thanks for the blessings of victory and peace.

At the close of the service many of the messengers started out to begin their visits—each taking to each woman visited a card bearing a pledge to be signed promising to pray for these specific things daily, and to read the Bible systematically, and also leaflets upon which are suggested prayers and Bible readings as helps in the fulfillment of the pledge.

The knowledge that every woman member of the Episcopal Church in this great country is taking part in the Advent Call to Prayer makes each individual messenger realize that she is one of a vast army seeking to bring spiritual power to bear upon the work of building a new and purer world upon the ruins of the old, and the privilege of attending such a service at St. Paul's must help to strengthen her for this high task.

Funeral Services for Miss Mary Custis Lee.

Funeral services for Miss Mary Custis Lee, the eldest daughter and last surviving child of General Robert E. Lee, were held at the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., at 4 o'clock on Monday afternoon, November 25th. A very large attendance of representatives of the various Confederate societies from Washington, Virginia and elsewhere, both of men and women, with a fair sprinkling of old veterans who followed Lee, whose number is so fast diminishing, filled the body of the church. The honorary and active pall-bearers, who were men in high position in Washington and the South, among the number being the Chief Justice of the United States, Secretary Daniels and Colonel Hileary Herbert. Dr. McKim was the officiating minister, accompanied by another representative chaplain of the Confederate societies. The members of the immediate family were all present.

The service in the church was rendered with a solemn impressiveness which harmonized with the feelings and thoughts of the large congregations. The hymns were General Lee's favorite hymns, "How Firm a Foundation, Ye Saints of the Lord," and that inspiring Easter hymn, "The Strife Is O'er, the Battle Won." Among the floral decorations there was a wreath from President and Mrs. Wilson.

The remains were taken to Lexington, Va., in care of her nephew, Colonel Robert E. Lee, and Professor Henry D. Campbell, of Washington and Lee University.

They were met on their arrival in Lexington shortly after eleven o'clock on Wednesday morning by the officers, faculty and student corps of Washington and Lee University, and representatives of Lee-Jackson Camp of Confederate Veterans constituted an escort to the Lee mausoleum, with the family and many other friends and the officiating clergyman, the Rev. Dr. Samuel A. Wallis, of the Theological Seminary in Virginia.

The procession moved to the Lee Memorial Chapel with the university band playing the solemn strains of the funeral dirge. On arriving at the outer door of the crypt, the remains of Miss Lee, wrapped in the Confederate flag, were taken within and reverently placed in the niche of the vault reserved for them, immediately above those containing the remains of her father and mother. Dr. Wallis, standing in the inner doorway of the crypt, read the full committal portion of the Burial Service, and before the benediction, "How Firm a Foundation, Ye Saints of the Lord," was impressively sung.

The day was one of the most beautiful of the late autumn. The solemnity of the march to the chapel and the services in the crypt touched the hearts of all who were privileged to be present, and they felt that they were participating in an historic event, which would forever linger in their memories.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary, which was to have been held in Warrenton, December 11 to 12, has been again postponed on account of the fresh outbreak of influenza.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. R. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thompson, D. D., Suffragan.

Meeting of Woman's Auxiliary.

The twenty-sixth annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary was held in Christ Church, Roanoke, Va., November 22-23.

The evening of November 20 the delegates and visitors were welcomed to an informal "get together" in the beautiful new Parish House by the officers of the Auxiliaries of St. John's and Christ Church, assisted by the rectors of both churches and their wives. The meeting on Thursday was opened with the Holy Communion, administered by the Rev. Messrs. J. Cantey Johnson and G. Otis Mead. The President, Mrs. John Letcher, presided at the business meeting. She made an appeal for the "Center Fund" to meet running expenses. Mrs. Loving read an interesting article on the origin and work of the Little Helpers. Mrs. Castle, Custodian of the United Offering, being unable to be present on account of sickness, sent a message to be read. The Educational Secretary, Mrs. Hobart, spoke of the importance of every branch having a study class during the year.

In the absence of Miss Jane Neely, Box Secretary, Mrs. Murr gave a report on the boxes sent out. Miss Aurelia Davis, the new Box Secretary, asked that the branches of the Auxiliary communicate with her, in regard to whom boxes should be sent. Her address is, Miss Aurelia H. Davis, No. 215 Harrison Street, Lynchburg, Va.

The Rev. George Floyd Rogers, of Lynchburg, head of the Covington Home for Boys, gave an interesting talk on the Boys' Home and the progress being made to divert the activities of the boys in the Home into proper channels.

Deaconess Williams, of Dante, spoke in behalf of her own mission, also that of Mrs. Binns, at Nora, Dickenson County, who was detained at home nursing sick patients. The mission at Wilder is closed on account of Miss Sutton's absence in Canada, there being sickness in her family. Workers are needed at Fremont and Morse. Deaconess Williams asked that the women of the Auxiliary would try and induce some of the returning war workers to take up mission work in Southwest Virginia. She especially appealed for volunteer workers through the summer. Her present assistant, Miss Mabel Hix, was sent from St. Faith's School, New York, as part of her training and becoming interested in the work remained to help her.

Deaconess Adams, of Keokee, showed a picture of her church that was part of her own home. She told how her people at Keokee had packed two large boxes for the Belgians and how the farmers had loaned their wagons that they might be hauled to the railroad station.

Thursday afternoon the Rev. Joseph Dunn, D. D., of Lynchburg, conducted the "Quiet Hour," at which time he held the close attention of the convention during his talk on Power of Prayer.

Dr. Harry Taylor, spoke Thursday evening of his medical work in China. Dr. Taylor also spoke during the session Friday morning. He said there were infinite possibilities for spiritual work among the natives, the Chinese being a receptive people. There should be a woman to talk to the patients, the doctors having so little time. Dr. Taylor asked the prayers of all the branches of the Auxiliary for his work. The hospital needs about $2,300.00 to equip it more fully for its work. The Rockefeller Foundation offers to give three-fourths of this amount if the other one-fourth can be raised outside. The Southern Virginia Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary promised through its President to raise one thousand dollars for two isolation wards for infectious diseases in Dr. Taylor's hospital within the next year. Dr. Taylor was followed by his mother, Mrs. John Taylor, in a most unique address. Her appeal was for something definite to be done towards getting men and women to go to China.

Mrs. Darling gave a short talk on the work of the Juniors.

Mrs. John Loyd next gave a very interesting little talk on missions. She was followed by Mrs. Lindsay Patton, of Lexington, who spoke of using the modified prayer cards.

Mrs. Moore, of 703 Boissevan Avenue, Norfolk, Va., spoke in the interest of the Church Periodical Club, asking that magazines not more than six months old be sent to chaplains at the front to help fill the vacant moments of the boys; and that magazines, The Spirit of Missions and Southern Churchman, be sent to Alaska to Archdeacon Stuck that his people might have some reading matter for the long six months of night. Everything must be sent there between the months of March and June.

Miss Davis told of the wonderful progress that had been made in the last three years at St. Peter's in the Mountain, Franklin County. They now have at one school building three teachers and eighty pupils. The school is provided with a domestic science room, where they have a machine on which the children are taught to sew.

The missionary to the Amherst Indians, Miss Wagner, gave a very interesting talk on her work among these people. So far the Episcopal Church is the only one which has taken up this work. They come to Sunday service from a radius of twenty-five miles.

The Convention was adjourned at noon to partake of a most inviting lunch in the Parish House. In the afternoon an automobile ride was given to the visitors.

In a talk given by Bishop Tucker to the women he urged that an effort be made to return to the old life instituted by our fathers and mothers that every household should have family prayers and the reading of the Bible to the children. That the people should come to a realization that the Church is the home of the soul and a person is dependent on regular services of the Church to feel the nearness of God. He asked that we make the Church a large part of family and individual life. The Auxiliary must labor as never before to show the need of bringing the heathen and all to God, so there will never again be such a war as this last. The time has now come when every woman should bring back by prayer and service every one to the Church. We must now endeavor to rebuild that that has been destroyed. God is going to call many of the men who served their country to the ministry, and the women must pray that these young men may accept the call.

The Convention closed with a mass meeting at eight o'clock in the church, with an address from Bishop Tucker.

The Rev. J. Alfred Figg, who during his diaconate has been in charge of St. Luke's, Clover, Christ Church, Mt. Laurel, in Halifax County, Grace Church, Drakes Branch and Ascension, Keysville, Charlotte County, with residence at Clover, was ordained to the priesthood in St. Luke's Church, Clover, by Bishop Tucker on Tuesday, November 26.

Bishop Thomson visited Christ Church, Roanoke, on Sunday, November 24, and confirmed a class of fifteen. That afternoon he drove over to Montvale and confirmed three. Both classes were presented by the Rev. G. Otis Mead.

The Story of the Good Shepherd Chapel, Lynchburg.

Coming back to my native State, and reading the touching appeal of Archdeacon Russell and Bishop Tucker in behalf of the Good Shepherd Chapel in Lynchburg, it occurred to me that a sketch of its origin might add to cause, now so pressing, of saving the home of a work so full of sacred and prayerful memories.

To the rectory of Grace Church, Lynchburg, a negro man, almost blind, came to ask if Mr. Lloyd would not "come over to Macedonia" and help the colored folk of Lynchburg by giving to them the ministry of the Episcopal Church, of which he had been a lonely member many years. The interview ended with prayer for work to be begun. The same week a colored Baptist woman came to the rectory and made the same request. At this woman's house the following Sunday met a little company of colored brethren, Mrs. Edley Craighill and myself. And this was the beginning of this good work for our negroes of Lynchburg. The congregation increased in numbers and interest until a hall had to be secured. This again was exchanged for even better accommodations. As Dr. Lloyd had already a service at the chapel across the river in Amherst, the work was carried on by lay service and teaching. Young Peyton Craighill, then a layman, came to the work and helped us. Bishop Randolph came, and laid his hands upon the heads of the first class for confirmation, and the service made a deep impression on the regular attendants as well as those who came as visitors. It was evident that a church and a "parish work shop" were the pressing needs of the work. Accordingly, a public school teacher of valued service for some years, offered herself to Dr. Lloyd to teach a parish school, giving up her good salary to teach without pay. And so the cause commended itself to both white and colored friends, and the result was the purchase of a good lot on which was built the "work shop," and in which seventy-five children (of kindergarten age and older) became pupils of this sensible and well equipped parish school. The Bishop knew of the work and saw the teacher was paid for her sacrifice. About this time the Amherst Chapel was closed, the members being transferred to the Lynchburg churches, when Dr. Lloyd began his afternoon services at the Good Shepherd. A choir of twelve boys and girls were drilled and vested. Many were the baptisms and earnest evidences of deepening Christianity, and "God saw that it was good." Mrs. Dillard, the domestic science teacher in both white and colored schools of Lynchburg, gave her valuable teaching to the parish school, generous friends helped in putting on additional rooms for domestic science, and a service was held each year and diplomas given by Dr. Lloyd, thus teaching the true "Bread of Life" to a flock who made bread by their daily work.

Looking back over the years of struggle, sacrifice and success, miracles could be seen in the lives of some of those members of the Good Shepherd Mission; souls were quickened and the fruits of the Spirit were seen in the lives of men, women and children. It was a shock to come back to find many gone and decay and debt instead! Would it not be a "tribute to whom tribute is due" that the work marked by so much faithful, loving and prayerful service could now be renewed, by saving it first from the probable sale, and so cheering the hearts who are trying to redeem it, and of those who knew and loved the founders? Clear the work of debt and infuse new life and hope for our colored brethren in these days of approaching peace.

MRS. J. J. LLOYD.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop

Trinity Church, Takoma Park, D. C., has been celebrating its twenty-fifth anniversary, beginning with the Sunday next before Advent. On Sunday morning the sermon was on "The Record and Opportunity of the Parish." At the evening service there was read by Mr. William C. Bech a paper on "The History of the Parish."

On Tuesday at eleven o'clock the service of the consecration of the church by the Rt. Rev. Alfred Harding, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, took place. The Rev. Henry Allen Griffith, first rector of the parish, was the preacher.

This marks the end of the first stage of this very important parish, and its place in the community is now securely established. It is bound to be one of the great churches of the Diocese. The rector, the Rev. Christian M. Young, has only been in charge a short time, but he has already manifested here the same splendid qualities which made him a leader for many years in the Diocese of Pittsburgh.

The Church of the Ascension is planning to build a memorial chapel and adjoining rooms, which are greatly needed and will be a great help in the more efficient doing of the work of the parish. They are also engaged in a successful effort to pay the church debt.

St. Mark's Church is making a successful endeavor to pay its church debt, and we hope to hear soon that their aims have been accomplished.

Norwood Parish, in the suburbs, has been making a drive to eliminate their parish debt, and the money has been pledged already for this purpose. This marks the end of the efforts, begun within the last four years to build a new church and rectory. This parish is located in the northwest suburbs of Washington, is now firmly established as a self-supporting organization, and its future growth will keep pace with the rapid growth of the neighborhood.

Plans are completed in the Diocese for the services to be held under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary, and the "Advent Call" is awakening a widespread interest.

There will be a "Week of Prayer" in the Washington churches beginning with the first Sunday in Advent.

KANSAS.

Rt. Rev. James Wise, D. D., Bishop.

The Spanish influenza has swept Kansas just as it did the rest of the country, and all institutions were closed for weeks and some still are—with others being reclosed. It crippled the church work which had begun to take on new life after the terrible heat of the summer which sent many of our people away for a longer time than usual.

The Clergy were very fortunate in escaping; only two were sick; the rectors of St. Paul's, Kansas City, and Grace Church, Chanute. In spite of the discouragements the men are fighting hard to make up the lost time and get in some good work before winter.

Bethany College, our girls' school at Topeka, under the leadership of the new principal, Miss Davis, has opened up with an increased enrollment, and with a decided churchly atmosphere about the institution.

Chanute: The Bishop spent four days with the Rev. R. Y. Barber, the rector of Grace Church, Chanute, recently helping him with an Every Member Canvass, and also attending an Advent Call Conference for the Southeast Deanery. The influenza prevented the women delegates from coming, but most of the Clergy were present a part of the time. The Conference work was done under the leadership of Miss Nellie Smith. An important part of the Every Member Canvass was the men's supper. Forty men gathered at the residence of Mr. Floyd K. Spielman and had a sociable time as well as listening to two good talks by the Rev.

W. E. Warren, of Independence, and the Bishop. The results are not all in, but the returns to date show over $2,000 for the parish and $800 for missions. The missionary pledges are about eight times as much as the parish has been giving on extension work.

Newton: The Bishop spent the week of November 17 to 24 at Newton with the Rev. F. C. Rufie, conducting a mission. By this method the Bishop hopes to get his people to understand him and his plans for the future of the Diocese.

Eldorado: Some of the friends of the Rev. A. W. Pannell have given him a Ford to assist him in the work of that growing oil city.

Woman's Auxiliary: Plans are being worked out under the leadership of Mrs. W. B. Buck, Diocesan President, for the carrying out of the Advent Call work throughout the Diocese.

Rt. Rev. C. S. Burch, D. D., Suffragan.

Thanksgiving in New York; International Service at St. John the Divine.

Thanksgiving Day this year was one of the greatest days the Cathedral of St. John the Divine has ever known. More people were turned away, unable to gain admittance because of numbers, than could be admitted, large as the seating capacity is. The occasion was an international service, when there were present the Assistant Secretary of the United States Navy, who is a Cathedral trustee, the mayor of New York, who is a Roman Catholic, high French officials and representatives of Belgium, Serbia, Costa Rica, Italy, Portugal, Great Britain, Bolivia, Liberia, Nicaragua, Peru, Roumania, and a hundred or more consuls and vice-consuls of almost every country.

Service flags of twenty-six nations were borne in the procession, made up of men from the United States Navy. The music was elaborate and beautifully rendered. The addresses were made by Bishop Greer and Bishop Lloyd. The former mentioned tenderly those who may not come back from the war, since they lie in heroes' graves, but he dwelt with strong emphasis upon God as a Paymaster—paying penalties for those who break His laws. Bishop Lloyd warned that human nature is much the same today as it was a hundred years ago, and there are many yet whose chief obligation, in their own mind, is to save themselves, and not give much thought to others. He pleaded for the missionary spirit. In the long procession were representatives of the Greek Church, besides the Cathedral trustees, and many Clergy of the Diocese.

At the Church of the Holy Communion there was an unusual service, with Hon. George W. Wickersham, formerly attorney-general, as the speaker. Throughout the city tens of thousands of soldiers and sailors were entertained at dinner. One of the greatest of canteen dinners was given by Grace Church, which charged no fee and fed all who came. So many came that parishioners helped out by taking men to their homes. It was the greatest Thanksgiving Day New York ever knew.

Reception to Chinese Church Students and Communion Service in Chinese.

The Committee on Higher Education of the Diocese of New York, acting on suggestions from the National Student Council, gave on November 22nd a reception to the Chinese Episcopalians and graduates from Episcopal colleges in China who are studying in New York City. Thirteen Chinese gathered in the Undercroft of Synod Hall to meet Bishop Greer, Bishop Courteney and two other members of the Diocesan Board of Religious Education, who are on the student committee; the Dean of the Cathedral and the Rev. Paul Micou, the President of the National Student Council. The Bishops made addresses of welcome, Dean Robbins explained the nature and work of the Cathedral, and Mr. Micou told how the National Student Council of the Episcopal Church is co-operating with the Board of Missions in the care of the Church students from missionary districts. Revs. F. G. Deis and W. P. Roberts, missionaries, and Deaconess Goodwin, of the staff of the Church Missions House, also spoke.

The Diocesan Committee is planning visitations by the Chinese students of the chief New York City churches and the offices of the Board of Missions and the General Board of Religious Education, as well as other receptions. The number of Chinese Churchmen or graduates of Chinese Church colleges in New York City is about twenty.

Most important of all is the monthly Communion service for the Chinese in the Oriental Chapel of the Cathedral. The first of these was celebrated on November 24 in Mandarin, with Rev. F. G. Deis and Rev. Ernest Kau as celebrants. Six Chinese and seven Americans were in attendance.

Similar plans are being made for the Japanese students who number about ten.

TEXAS.

Rt. Rev. G. H. Kinsolving, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. C. S. Quin, D. D., Coadjutor.

Southwest Convocation of the Diocese.

The fall meeting of the Southwest Convocation of the Diocese of Texas was held in St. Mark's Church, Bay City, on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, November 19, 20 and 21.

The Rev. Charles Clingman, rector of Trinity Church, Houston, was the preacher at the opening service on Tuesday night; on Wednesday night the Rev. Peter Gray Sears, D. D., rector of Christ Church, Houston, was the preacher; and at the closing service on Thursday night Bishop Quin preached a splendid sermon on "Reconstruction." There was an early celebration of the Holy Eucharist on both mornings. Litany and sermon on Wednesday morning, and Morning Prayer and sermon on Thursday completed the public services of the Convocation.

Miss Baker, of Trinity Church, Houston, conducted the Institute for Women on the Advent Call, Bishop Quin closing the institute with some very helpful advice as to how to get results from this Week of Prayer and Thanksgiving.

The subjects discussed at the Round Table Conferences for the Clergy were: "Parochial Visiting," "How to Improve the Work in Our Missionary Field" and "Parochial Finance."

St. Mark's Parish, Bay City, has about one hundred communicants, and the community has a population of about four thousand people. There is a beautiful brick church, a comfortable parish house and rectory, all on the same plot of ground. This parish has been vacant since the first of the year, but a priest has been called to take charge of the Church's work in Bay City, which presents a great opportunity.

During the Convocation large congregations were present at all of the services, which were hearty and responsive. The choir of St. Mark's, under the able direction of Mrs. George E. Serrill, organist, rendered the music.

There were present at the Convocation the Bishop-Coadjutor, and the Rev. Messrs. John Sloan, Peter Gray Sears, Charles Clingman, J. Cross Gray and S. Moylan Bird, the latter being the dean. Hospitable homes of the parish entertained the Clergy.

The time and place of the spring meeting of the Convocation will be announced later on by the dean.

ELITE

Rt. Rev. Rogers Israel, D. D., Bishop.

Te Deum of Thanksgiving.

That the citizens of this community are grateful to Almighty God for the late victory has been shown in many ways. According to the ancient custom, the Cathedral announced a "Te Deum of Thanksgiving" for Sunday morning, November 17. The choir, preceded by the crucifer and three color bearers carrying the flags of the entered the Cathedral singing "Ancient of Days." There were eight other color bearers carrying flags of the United States, France and England Allies. The Cathedral was packed as at an Easter service. The service was very hearty, and the whole congregation joined in the Te Deum and the hymns of thanksgiving.

The influenza epidemic which has disorganized the whole Church work of the Diocese is dying slowly and hard. The city of Franklin, where Dr. Aigner, President of the Standing Committee, has become chaplain of the Emergency Hospital, is still under the ban and the number of the sick are increasing. New Castle has had another "flare up," and a stricter quarantine has been necessary. Here the Rev. Bruce Reddish, because others could not be obtained, took the place of a sick orderly at the Emergency Hospital and has rendered most helpful ministrations to the sick and dying. The Rev. E. H. Edson, vicar of the parish of Smethport, has been hard at work as a chief Red Cross worker, going wherever he is sent to relieve distress.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop.

There was a double Thanksgiving service in most of the parishes on the third Sunday in November, as all had been closed for two Sundays on account of the epidemic, and the first Sunday that the churches were allowed to have regular worship fell on the Sunday after the signing of the armistice, so all were doubly grateful. Though there are yet some cases throughout the State, churches are maintaining regular services. During the epidemic several of the Clergy held the Communion Service on Sundays and during the week, notifying a few of their parishioners to come to represent the congregation.

St. Peter's Church, Talladega, the Rev. C. K. Weller, rector, has been presented a pair of Eucharistic candlesticks, as a memorial to his granddaughter, by Mr. J. S. Graves, who was for many years senior warden of the parish. They will be used for the first time on Christmas Day.

The congregations of the Diocese have signified their unwillingness to have a Coadjutor-Bishop, at this time. In his address to the Council of the Diocese last May, the Bishop asked that arrangements be made to give him much needed help by the selection of a Coadjutor.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese held their annual meeting in St. Paul's parish, Selma, on November 19 and 20. With a few exceptions all the officers were re-elected, the reports of various branches showed a marked increase in interest in missions, and a goodly increase in offerings.

The Rev. Carl Henckell, of Grace, Birmingham, and the Rev. C. K. Weller, of Talladega, are rejoicing in the receipt of news from their sons since the armistice. Both of these boys have been with the Alabama regiment in the Rainbow (42) Division in France for over a year, and both been wounded, but not seriously.

MISSOURI.

Rt. Rev. D. S. Tuttle, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. F. F. Johnson, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Rev. Arthur Brittain died suddenly at St. Luke's Hospital, St. Louis, Wednesday evening, November 20. He had attended the Clericus on Monday, and the all-day meeting of the Diocesan Auxiliary on Tuesday. Wednesday he officiated at the burial of a member of his parish in the afternoon. The cause of death was heart trouble and bronchial pneumonia. Mr. Brittain had been in the Diocese for twenty years, coming here from England. He was for two years in rural missionary work; for some years he was head of the staff of workers in hospital missions, St. Louis, and for the past eight years rector of St. John's Church, St. Louis. He was also chaplain of the Episcopal Orphans' Home and of the Griswold Home for Boys. The burial was largely attended from St. John's Church on Saturday, some twenty of the Clergy of the city being vested in attendance at the service.

The Rev. Dr. Z. B. Phillips, rector of St. Peter's, St. Louis, and the Rev. Benjamin Young, pastor of Union Methodist Church, St. Louis, were members of a team which traveled extensively about Missouri in the interests of the United War Work Campaign.

OHIO.

Rt. Rev. W. A. Leonard, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. F. Du Moulin, D. D., Coadjutor.

The "Allied Churches" of Cleveland.

Old St. John's stone church, corner Wall and Church Streets, Cleveland, on the West Side, was erected in 1836, and still stands the downtown district similar to St. Paul's, Philadelphia, on Second Street, or old Trinity's, New York. It was once an aristocratic church, with many wealthy members, most of whom have died and their families moved away, and is now surrounded by factories, saloons and tenements. The Sunday-school is made up largely of children of foreign parentage, only one or two of whom have parents who are communicants of the church. The Thanksgiving Day services were held in this church as usual on Thanksgiving Day, but on the eve of Thanksgiving, Wednesday, November 28, the rector, the Rev. Frederick (Continued on page 20)

MEN OF GOD.

"Leaders raised up by God" is a favorite expression of Old Testament writers, but we do not realize how appropriately it applies to our great leaders of to-day until we examine the religious life of some of these men who have guided us to victory.

Of course, we all know that President Wilson is the son of a Presbyterian minister, but we do not all appreciate that he is also the grandson of a minister, and so has had the teachings of our Saviour ever before him, both by environment and through heredity.

Premier Lloyd George is a deeply religious man, and his speeches are full of quotations from the Bible.

Perhaps, however, the most impressive evidence of God's inspiration is to be found in our great soldiers.

Our own beloved and admired general, John J. Pershing, has been confirmed by Bishop Brent since going overseas, and he issued a general order to the rapidly arrived stream of American boys which should send a thrill to the hearts of all godly people, for rarely has trust in God and belief in Christ been recognized by a commanding general as it was by Pershing when he said to his troops: "Hardship will be your lot, but trust in God will comfort you. Temptations will befall you, but the teachings of our Saviour will give you strength."

When we go still higher up and examine the character of the man who has so successfully directed the operations of the greatest military machine that the world has ever seen we find that this brilliant French military genius is as deeply religious as were Oliver Cromwell or Stonewall Jackson.

The Literary Digest of November 30 contains an article on this subject that is so interesting and brings into such vivid contrast the religion of Marshal Foch and of William Hohenzollern that we shall quote it in full:

The religion of William Hohenzollern has been one of the active topics of the whole war. It has only been in his very latest utterances that the former German monarch has not coupled Gott with himself as an equal, an abettor, or perchance a servant. One picture of the Kaiser sent out by the watchful Boswell, Karl Rosner, showed William in the act of communion, and we are distinctly told that in that Belgian church with a waiting audience of German officers the worshipper never bent the knee. There is a strong contrast between him and the figure the Los Angeles Times draws of his conqueror, General Ferdinand Foch—"the Gray Man of Christ." "This has been Christ's war," says The Times. "Christ on one side, and all that stood opposed to Christ on the other side. And the Generalissimo, in supreme command of all the armies that fought on the side of Christ, is Christ's man."

Least readers think this a "strange statement for a secular newspaper to make," The Times brings forward the reminder that "it is the business of a newspaper to get at facts," and "if the facts are of a supernal nature, it is still the business of the newspaper to get at them and to record them." When this was written the full span of General Foch's achievement had not been covered, but the end was then clearly in sight. We read:

"The deeper we question as to who Foch is, the clearer is the answer that in every act of his life and in every thought of his brain he is Christ's man."

"If you were to ask him, 'Are you Christ's man?' he would answer 'Yes.'"

"It seems to be beyond all shadow of doubt that when the hour came in which all Christ stood for was to either stand or fall, Christ raised up a man to lead the hosts that battled for Him."

"When the hour came in which truth and right, charity, brotherly love, justice, and liberty were either to triumph or to be blotted out of the world, Christ came again upon the road to Damascus."

"Whoever does not realize this and see it clearly as a fact, he does but blunder stupidly."

"There will be a crowding company of critics when the war is ended and they will all be filled with the ego of their own conclusions. They will attempt to explain the genius of Foch with maps and diagrams. But, while they are doing so, if you will look for Foch in some quiet church, it is there that he will be found humbly giving God the glory, and absolutely declining to attribute it to himself."

"Can that kind of a man win a war? Can a man who is a practical soldier be also a practical Christian? And is Foch that kind of a man? Let us see."

The secret of where Foch used to go for "strength and magical power to bring home the marvelous victories" was surprised by a California boy. It was not published by any organ of France, to show the world how "religious" its leader was:

"A California boy, serving as a soldier in the American Expeditionary Forces in France, has recently written a letter to his parents in San Bernardino in which he gives, as well as any one else could give, the answer to the question we ask."

"This American boy—Evans by name—tells of meeting General Foch at close range in France."

"Evans had gone into an old church to have a look at it, and as he stood there with bared head satisfying his respectful curiosity, a gray man with the eagles of a general on the collar of his shabby uniform also entered the church. Only one orderly accompanied the quiet, gray man. No glittering staff of officers, no entourage of gold-laced aids, were with him; nobody but just the orderly."

"Evans paid small attention at first to the gray man, but was curious to see him kneel in the church, praying. The minutes passed until full three-quarters of an hour had gone by before the gray man arose from his knees.

"Then Evans followed him down the street and was surprised to see soldiers salute this man in great excitement, and women and children stopping in their tracks with awe-struck faces as he passed."

"It was Foch. And now Evans, of San Bernardino, counts the experience as the greatest in his life. During that three-quarters of an hour that the Generalissimo of all the Allied armies was on his knees in humble supplication in that quiet church, ten thousand guns were roaring at his word on a hundred hills that rocked with death."

"Millions of armed men crouched in trenches or rushed across blood-drenched terraces at his command, generals, artillery, cavalry, engineers, tanks, fought and wrought across the map of Europe absolutely as he commanded them to do, and in no other manner, as he went into that little church to pray."

"Nor was it an unusual thing for General Foch to do. There is no day that he does not do the same thing if there be a church that he can reach. He never fails to spend an hour on his knees every morning that he awakes from sleep; and every night it is the same."

"Moreover, it is not a new thing with him. He has done it his whole life long."

"If young Evans could have followed the general on to headquarters, where reports were waiting him and news of victory upon victory was piled high before him, he would doubtless have seen a great gladness on the general's face, but he would have seen no look of surprise there."

"Men who do that which Foch does have no doubts. When Premier Clemenceau, the old Tiger of France, stood on the battle-front with anxious heart, one look at the face of Foch stilled all his fears. He returned to Paris with the vision of sure and certain victory."

"The great agnostic statesman doubted, but the Gray Man of Christ did not doubt."

"The facts, then, in the case are that when the freedom of the world hung in the balance the world turned to Foch as the one great genius who could save it against the Hun; and that Foch, who is perhaps the greatest soldier the world has produced, is, first of all, a Christian."

"Young Evans, of San Bernardino, just an every-day American boy from under the shadow of old San Geronimo, spent nearly an hour with Foch in an old French church, and not even one bayonet was there to keep them apart."

"They represented the two great democracies of the world, but there in that old church they represented, jointly, a far greater thing—the democracy of Christ."

God Our Refuge.

Hast thou within a care so deep,
It chases from thine eyelids sleep?
To thy Redeemer take that care,
And change anxiety to prayer.

Hast thou a hope, with which thy heart
Would almost feel it death to part?
Entreat thy God that hope to crown,
Or give thee strength to lay it down.

Whate'er the care that breaks thy rest,
Whate'er the wish that swells thy breast,

Spread before God that wish, that care,
And change anxiety to prayer.

A New Earth.

God grant us wisdom in these coming days,
And eyes unsealed, that we clear visions see
Of that new world that He would have us build,
To Life's ennoblement and His high ministry.

God give us sense—God-sense of Life's new needs,
And souls aflame with new-born chivalries—
To cope with those black growths that foul the ways—
To cleanse our poisoned founts with God-born energies.

To pledge our souls to nobler, loftier life,

To win the world to His fair sanctities,
To bind the nations in a Pact of Peace,
And free the Soul of Life for finer loyalties.

Not since Christ died upon His lonely cross

Has Time such prospect held of Life's new birth;

Not since the world of chaos first was born

Has man so clearly visaged hope of a new earth.

Not of our own might can we hope to rise

Above the ruts and soilures of the past,

But with His help Who did the first earth build,

With hearts courageous we may fairer build this last.

The Girl Who Conquered Herself.

Ruth always had an ungovernable temper. I have known Ruth a long while—we played dolls together, and made mud pies and divided our candy, and so I really know. I am perhaps her very best friend. Of course her real name is not Ruth, but I am rather sure that it would be unfair to tell her real name.

My first memory of Ruth's temper is a bit dim, for we might have been five years old, we two, at the time. I remember that I owned a black-faced, woolly-headed doll, and I remember that she wanted it for her own. Because I was not the giving-up kind—primarily, however, because I loved the doll—I refused to give it up, whereupon Ruth threw a stone at me. It was a large, sharp stone, and it made an ugly-looking, jagged little cut on my forehead. I remember how the blood dripped down the side of my face.

Ruth was aghast at the mischief she had done. I can see her now, her chubby baby hands clasped in front of her eyes to shut out the sight of the blood. At my wails some one came to me and washed my face, and put sticking-plaster on my forehead. I was kissed and petted and given a peppermint stick. But, most of all (and this memory is a very real one), I can see Ruth's small, stricken face, and I can hear her voice saying:

"I didn't mean to! I didn't mean to hurt her! The stone flew itself!"

My forehead was nearly well the next day. In a week the scar of it was quite gone. But it was a long time before the scared look was entirely driven from Ruth's eyes.

We went right on being friends. A hastily flung rock or a cut forehead is a small thing to a really true child-friendship. But, though we continued to be friends, we saw less and less of each other as the years went on. We were well past the doll and mud-pie stage, and we were living in different towns and going to different schools and having different interests in life and different friends. But occasionally we visited. It was on one of my visits to her home that I again saw her lose her temper. It was when her small brother spilled a cup of chocolate on her new dress. I'll admit that she had provocation, for 't was a wonderful dress; but little brother hadn't meant to spill the chocolate.

Ruth was a pretty girl. She is still a pretty girl, for she has a great mass of corn-colored hair and the bluest eyes I ever saw. She had a mouth that looked like the first rose-bud of June. But, though Ruth is a pretty girl, I was glad I was not her little brother that day when he spilled the chocolate on her gown. Her blue eyes grew as hard and as cold as ice—as ice with some dark fire glowing behind it—and her rose-bud mouth straightened out until it looked like a thin crimson gash on her face. I saw her hand clutch convulsively on the air, and then all at once the little brother gave a queer gasp and ran out of the room. I didn't blame him at all, for, strangely, at that moment I remembered an angry baby face and a wildly flung stone. And across the years that divided my little childhood from my big girlhood, the hurt of my cut forehead came back to me.

And then, in a moment, Ruth's clutched hand unfolded, and her lips parted in a cold smile that was almost a sneer. "The dress will wash," I ventured, half frightened.

"Yes," said Ruth. And then suddenly she picked up a cup—an empty chocolate-cup of very fine china—and threw it down—hard—on the floor. I watched, dazedly, as it shattered into a hundred bits. And then Ruth burst into sobs and ran from the room. Upstairs I could hear her bedroom door slam and the lock snap quickly.

I stood alone in the room, looking at the fragments of the cup lying about on the floor, and as I stood there, her little brother came strolling back.

"Did Ruth—throw that?" he questioned, pointing to the pieces. And then, before I could answer, he grinned, in an apologetic small-boy way.

"Ruth's a dandy girl, usually," he told me. "She's an awful nice girl. But when anything makes her mad—whew! She's just awful. She screams an' cries an' throws things. An' she doesn't care who she hits. She's always sorry—after—but she can't seem to help actin' like she does!"

Ruth was upstairs the rest of the day with a bad headache. The next day she was down early, singing as she dusted the rooms.

We grew up even more, from the big-girl stage to young ladies with their hair up. We had left school. I was launched in the business world, doing the work I love to do, when Ruth announced her engagement. Her fiancé was a western man, and she had not known him for a very long time. She had never met any of his relatives but she wrote me that his father, who was a famous surgeon, was going to spend a week in the city, and that she was going to give a dinner for him.

"I'll be coming into town the day of the dinner," she wrote, "and if you'll meet me in the station we'll go up together. I want to get there before Bob's father comes. I want him to see me looking my best."

And I said I would come to the dinner and meet her wherever she wanted me to.

I went to the station, and though it was not long before train-time, Ruth was nowhere to be seen. I waited nervously, for I remembered that she wanted to get home early—that she wanted Bob's father to see her at her best. And then at last, just as the iron gates had slammed shut—just as the whistle of the train had tooted for the last time, Ruth dashed into the "Young lady," he said, "I don't know who you are or what you are, but I want to tell you one thing. You've got to control that temper of yours, for it's hurting no one but yourself. It didn't hurt me when the package hit me. It only disgusted me. But it really did hurt you. If you keep on letting go of yourself, you'll land in an insane asylum. I know. And no one will be sorry to have you go there. For people with a temper like yours are a menace to any community."

Ruth stood pale and aghast. No one had ever talked to her that way. And the crowd, ever shifting, drifted away from where she stood. And just as the old man was going to speak again a young man, handsome, broad-shouldered, athletic, came up from behind and gripped his shoulder.

"Why, dad," cried the young man gladly, "how did you happen to find Ruth?"

And though I had never met him, I knew that it was Bob.

Late that night, after the guests had all retired, I went into Ruth's room. She was lying on her bed, sobbing, but she sat up at the sound of my step.

"I will never," she told me distinctly, "lose my temper again. And I will tell Bob everything tomorrow. Perhaps"—her voice broke—"perhaps he won't want to marry a girl who might end up in an insane asylum. But, no matter what happens, I will never lose my temper again."

And she never did. For Ruth made good—just as other girls make good with difficult problems. She told me that it was hard, desperately hard at times. Sometimes she'd have to go up to her room and lock her door and bite her bed-post. Sometimes she would fall on her knees and ask God for help. But, no matter how much she wanted to give way—and I've seen her in some exasperating situations—she'd turn her back and hum a tune before she spoke. She told me that while she was humming she'd say "insane asylum" and "menace" over and over in her mind. And finally she won out, for by controlling her temper she found that she had fewer occasions to lose it.

I was visiting Ruth the other day in her new home. Her father-in-law, who loves her very much, lives with them. She does her own work, and after supper I went out into the kitchen and helped her wash the dishes. Bob dried them, and, man-like, he got interested in the conversation as he was drying Ruth's handsomest cut-class, silver-mounted pitcher, and dropped it. It was one of her wedding presents, and I started back in very real fear before the expected storm. But the storm did not break.

"I'm sorry, dear," said Bob, humbly. "I'm awfully sorry." But Ruth cut him short.

"Don't you care," she told him, soothingly. "We may get another some day, dear."—Margaret Sangster, in Christian Herald.

"In the Secret of His Tabernacle."

The strain of these days drives us more and more to the place of prayer. We need the strengthening that comes from constant communion with God. From no other source can we get this strengthening of the soul and fortifying of the spirit. Jesus put much emphasis upon prayer. He yielded to the necessity that was upon Him in the strenuous days of His ministry. He knew that He would not be able to station, her face scarlet from running, her hat on one side.

"The train is ready to go," I told her; "they've shut us out."

The station was full of people, but Ruth didn't care. She turned to the guard who had shut the gate: "Let me through," she beseeched him; "it's important that I get this train. I must get it."

But the guard stood firm. "Sorry, lady," he told her, "but it's against the rules."

And then Ruth lost her temper, as I had seen her lose it when she hit me with a stone and when her brother had spilled the chocolate. The flush faded out of her face, leaving it pale and sharp and worn.

"I hate you!" she said to the guard. "I hate you! You might have let me through. I hate you!" Her foot stamped on the ground, and with all her might she threw a paper package across the station. It struck a courtly old gentleman, and bursting, fell at his feet. Pink rose petals littered the floor.

We were the center of a grinning crowd. I shrank back against a post and watched as the old gentleman picked up the roses and carried them to her.

bear the burden that was thrust upon Him in His own strength. He gave much time to private devotion, the outpouring of His soul to His Father for sympathy, succor and direction. Out of it came that resolution of purpose that made it possible for Him to endure to the end and to fulfil the whole will of His Heavenly Father.

If prayer were not a necessity in the development of Christian character, Jesus would not have placed so much emphasis upon it in His own personal religious life. Intercession was the very food of His soul, and that was one reason why He was given so much to it.

The statement of Jesus that "men ought always to pray, and not to faint," suggests that spiritual strengthening is a sure issue of prayer, and that the Christian who does not pray and maintain an atmosphere of prayer for his soul is likely to be of the faint-hearted sort, and not of outstanding efficiency in the service of the kingdom.

True prayer has certain elements in it. Not always does it seek for the gratification of our own desires, nor the supplying of what we conceive to be our needs. It is important that we should go to God about these things, for nothing is too small or trivial to be brought to His attention, since it often happens that out of these apparently insignificant things great and really important matters develop. But there are other elements in prayer that we should not ignore or belittle.

Prayer is for adoration and confession and intercession and thanksgiving, as well as for supplication concerning our own creature comforts or the urgent needs of our material life. And it is as much in these particular uses of prayer that we find access to God, and come into possession of His power, and see evidences of His loving favor, and gain revelations of His wisdom and purpose, as through the prayer of supplication.

Prayer is a divinely appointed means of grace, and we should always avail ourselves of its opportunities and blessings. The Christian who is constantly in an attitude and atmosphere of prayer will keep in the way of righteousness, for he abides under the shadow of the Almighty.—The Christian Advocate.

Recompense.

Although I do not know God's wondrous ways,

Yet I believe from out life's puzzling maze

I shall be brought.

He knows.

I do not ask to see the journey's end,
For He walks at my side just like a friend:

So all is well,
He sees.

I will not care, though roads are long and rough,
Sure will His grace sustain, and that's enough

To bear me up.
He cares.

I would not be my own guide if I might,
But rather trust to His unerring sight
To lead me on.

He guides.

I could not guard myself, for that were vain;

Yet this I know: He faithful will remain,
And keep me safe.

He guards.

I would not live when done my task is here,
For I can heed His summons without fear:

He died for me,
He lives.

So when from scenes of earth He beckons hence

To fairer realms, 'twill be sweet recompense.

For evermore
With Him.

I know not whether you care for this truth—the acceptance by Christ of those who morally, or intellectually, or spiritually, no less than physically, are the blind, the halt, the maimed, even the lepers of our poor humanity. I only know that I care for it immensely. It is to me of the utmost comfort. In all limitations of power, in all sense of weakness, in all tauntings about deficiency, in all consciousness of numberless imperfections; whenever we have to meet the proud man's scorn, and the base man's sneer, I think of Him, I turn to Him who took His place among the humble, among the insignificant, among the defeated; to Him who loved mankind in spite of all its sins and all its shame; who honored man, not for the honors which were without him, not for the gifts of providence, or for the accidents of favor, or the little brief authority of place, but for this only and simply, because He was man, and because He was miserable and needed help.—F. W. Farrar.

We can almost hear the rumbling of the wheels of the King's chariot that tell our Lord is on His way to reign in this world.

Christ has revised and raised our ideals for us; He has taught us to hold wisdom, righteousness, charity high above all other aims; has put serviceableness before success, self-culture above self-gratification, usefulness to our fellows before eminence above our fellows; in a word, He would have us love God with all our strength and our neighbor as ourselves, in order that we may become of one spirit and one aim with Him who is Love, and may share His eternal felicity and peace.—S. Cox.

The Fairy Book.

When mother takes the fairy book
And we curl up to hear
'Tis "All aboard for fairy-land!"
Which seems so very near.

For soon we reach the pleasant place
Of once upon a time,
Where birdies sing the hour of day
And flowers talk in rhyme.

Where Bobby is a velvet prince,
And where I am a queen;
Where one can talk with animals,
And walk about unseen.

Where little people live in nuts
And ride on butterflies,
And wonders really come to pass
Before your very eyes.

Where candy grows on every bush,
And playthings on the trees,
And visitors pick basketfuls
As often as they please.

It is the nicest time of day—
Though bedtime is so near—
When mother takes the fairy book
And we curl up to hear.

For the Southern Churchman The Story of An African Boy.

By Rev. W. H. Overs.

In the middle of one of the vast forests of Africa nestled a small village, and on the outskirts was a typical heathen hut. It was a picturesque place, standing as it did among a hundred waving palm trees. In front of it were several orange trees, and those oranges were just as full of sugary juice as their skins would hold; here and there among the orange trees, bananas, pawpaws and other tropical fruit grew in luxuriant abundance. The hut itself was made of mud walls, cracked and broken with age and a roof of big leaves. This roof reached nearly to the ground to protect the family against the terrible storms that came so often in the spring and the fall. On one side of the entrance there was a big clay image, built in the form of a man and about five feet high. The people knelt before this and worshipped it. Inside the hut there were three dark rooms, having no windows or places to let in the light or the air. There was very little furniture; just a few grass mats, a clay cooking pot, a calabash, a basket of cowry shells for money and the household gods. Such was the home of this African boy.

His name was Efa-be-me-ro. This is a heathen name. It was the custom of this tribe to name their children in honor of one of their gods. About the time our hero was born, his father was away on a journey to an interior slave market, and because he had been most successful in selling people as slaves he thought that Efa, the "God of the way," had been his protector. So when he returned he said, "The child shall be called Efa-be-me-ro; which means, Efa helped me on the journey."

The father of this little boy belonged to a band of cruel slave raiders whose business it was to carry off unprotected women and children and sell them as slaves. So he had very little of his father's protection and care. His mother, an ignorant, superstitious, heathen woman, looked after him. She watched him as he rolled about in the sand like a little black dog, and carried him strapped on her back when she went out to the market place or to the farm. She taught him to kneel before the household gods—mud, stone and wood—and pray to them. He was shown how to sacrifice goats, sheep and fowls to the evil spirit, and iron rings and beads were placed around his legs, arms and neck as charms to protect his body. In this place of ignorance, heathenism and superstition this little African boy was brought up until he was twelve years of age.

Then a wonderful thing happened. A white man came to his village, and for the first time in his life he looked into the face of a human being who wasn't black. This was the greatest wonder that had ever come to him, and for days he, with a multitude of others, followed the white man about everywhere. He kept at a safe distance, however, as at first they were all very much afraid; but when they learned that the white man was not there to hurt them they grew bold enough to draw near and examine the only articles of civilization they ever beheld, such as books, boxes, chairs and other things that belonged to the white man.

It was not long before the white man's black teacher opened a village school. He had no books, slates, pencils or blackboards. So the children were ranged before a mud wall, and on this wall the teacher wrote with a piece of chalk the letters of their alphabet. So they were given the first lesson in the knowledge of their own written language.

Our little African boy was among the first to come. He came with his big eyes bulging with curiosity, but very soon a love for that school grew upon him. His mother became very much alarmed, and shut him up in one of the dark rooms of the house, but as soon as he secured his liberty he came to school again. Then his old heathen grandmother took him in hand and three different times she beat him severely with a slave whip; but when he recovered he would make his way to school again.

It was not very long before, under the influence of his faithful teacher, he learned to love Jesus Christ. Then another great event came to his life; he was baptized, and received a new name. What do you suppose his new name was? For thirteen years he had been called Efa-be-me-ro in honor of a heathen god, but in the baptismal service the clergyman, placing his hand on the boy's head said, "Amos, I baptize thee." From that time he has borne the name of this great character of the Old Testament.

Soon after this, he was going home from school one day, when he noticed blood on the clay image that stood at the entrance to the hut; he knew at once that there had been a sacrifice and that the meat cooking for the noon meal was that which had been offered to idols. He stubbornly refused to eat it, and said, "I shall never again eat any meat that has been offered as a sacrifice to idols."

In school Amos was the banner scholar. The first thing he learned was the Lord's Prayer, and he was never tired of repeating it, when they would listen, to his father and mother.

One day the white man visited that school. This was always a great event. The boys washed their feet, put on their whitest jackets, and with them their best behavior. When they were all assembled and seated on the floor, every inch of space was taken.

They were called to order by the clapping of the teacher's hands, and Amos was asked to open the school with prayer. Our African boy, without the slightest hesitation, knelt with his bare knees upon the bare floor and poured out his little soul in prayer. And this is what the white man wrote in his diary, from his memory of Amos' prayer: "Our Lord, we are in school again, and want You to be here. We want to learn fast that which will help us. Please bless us. Bless our teacher, and in his work encourage him. Bless our parents, and from heathen darkness save them. Bless our King, and from cruel deeds deliver him. Bless our white man, and may the fever never get him. Amen."

Amos was one of the first to read the Bible in his own language. Then he would go with the teacher to the service in the market place and, standing on a big box, would read to his own people words from the Book of Life. So little by little this African boy has climbed to a larger and broader life. Today he is a man, not, however, an ignorant and cruel slave raider like his father, but a Christian teacher, still living among his own people in the center of that great forest, and blessing them with the light of his own good life.

What Happened to the Birthday Cake?

"It will need four eggs and a cup of sugar and some milk and some flour," mother said, as she went to the pantry to get the yellow mixing bowl and the sifter to make Barbara's birthday cake.

"It needs sugar, too, for the frosting, and please make very thick frosting, mother, dear," Barbara begged. She was standing beside the kitchen table, watching, for she was going to be six years old in just a few days. It was to be her birthday cake, rich and sweet, and shining on the supper table with six pink, lighted candles.

"I am afraid that the cake and the frosting together will use up all our sugar," mother said as she came back. "I wonder," she went on, with just a little bit of worry in her voice; "if we could manage with two eggs instead of four. Eggs cost so much now."

"Well, we have to make a birthday cake, don't we, mother, because I always cut it and share it?" Barbara said. Mother looked down in Barbara's kind little face and she thought a moment, too. That was the wonderful part about mother and Barbara—they often thought the same things. Then they said something to each other, laughed, and hugged each other, and mother put away the big yellow mixing bowl and flour sifter.

The next day was Barbara's birthday, and two people who didn't have birthdays had surprises.

Timothy, whose mother did the washing, had been very ill for a long time. He was getting better, and could sit in the big rocking chair, all wrapped up in a quilt, and try to smile out through the window when Barbara passed. Barbara stopped at Timothy's door on the morning of her birthday. She had a basket on her arm. She took from it a bottle of creamy milk and a bag that held four white eggs.

"Here is a part of my birthday cake for you, Timothy," Barbara said. "It will make you get well faster."

Granny Blake was just putting her tea-kettle on her stove when she heard a knock at the door of her little house. When she opened it she saw Barbara, who loved Granny Blake so much. No one could make such nice rag dolls as Granny, and she was always cheerful and smiling, even when she had hardly enough coals to make her kettle boil.

Barbara still carried her basket, and she took a package of sugar and freshly baked loaf of wheat bread out of it.

"Here is a part of my birthday cake for you, dear Granny," Barbara said. "This is sugar for your tea, and mother made the flour into a loaf of bread for you to eat with it."

Then Barbara went home almost as happy as if she had eaten a large piece of frosted birthday cake. But when the day was almost over and it grew dark, Barbara began to wish that she could see the six pink candles shining for her birthday. She went slowly in to supper, thinking of them. And, oh, what a surprise she found there!

In a rosy circle in the middle of the table shone six pink, lighted candles set in six pink rosebud holders. In the center of this birthday circle of lights was a bowl that held six beautiful pink roses from the garden, and beside Barbara's plate was a parcel wrapped in pink tissue paper. When Barbara blew out the candles and opened the parcel she found a pink ribbon for a birthday present.

"What a beautiful birthday this has been, mother," Barbara said, "without a birthday cake!"—Carolyn Sherwin Bailey.

Echo.

I sometimes wonder where he lives,
This Echo that I never see.
I hear his voice now in the hedge,
Then down behind the willow tree.

And when I call: "Oh, please come out,"
"Come out," he always quick replies,
"Hello, hello," again I say,
"Hello, hello," he softly cries.

He must be jolly, Echo must;
For when I laugh, "Ho, ho, ho, ho,"
Like any other friendly boy,
He answers me with "Ho, ho, ho."

I think perhaps he'd like to play.
I know some splendid things to do.
He must be lonely hiding there:
I wouldn't like it. Now, would you?

Mother's Gift.

"I've got all my Christmas presents ready," Marjory said, proudly. "And I've made every single one myself! Are yours done, Franklin?"

Franklin shook his head.

"Mother's been sick so long," he explained. "I don't 'spect I can give any, Marjory."

"Oh, Franklin, I'm so sorry! But it's a good while before Christmas—maybe I can help you make some presents."

"I don't need to make many," said Franklin. "If I could just think of one for mother, I wouldn't care so much about the others. You see, she's been so very sick."

"What do you think she would like?" asked Marjory.

Franklin put his chin in his hand and thought hard.

"I know!" he exclaimed, suddenly. "Flowers, of course! But there aren't any now, are there?"

Marjory looked doubtfully at the garden. Only dead brown stalks showed where the chrysanthemums and asters had bloomed so gaily a little while before.

All at once she jumped up and picked up something lying in the garden path.

"Here's the very thing, Franklin!" she cried.

The little boy looked at the dead-looking round object in Marjory's hand.

"It's a bulb, Franklin! I helped mother plant some the other day, so I know how to do it. This looks just like hers; do you s'pose anybody cares if you have it?"

"I'll ask father," said Franklin. "He's in the library."

Father was very busy, but he glanced up long enough to speak to Franklin.

"What is it, my boy?"

Franklin explained how Marjory had found the bulb on the garden walk. A moment later he ran to the back yard. "Father says I may have it!" he cried, joyfully.

Franklin's little tin bucket was lying by the porch steps, and Marjory said that was the very thing to plant the bulb in. She showed Franklin just how to mix sand with some rich earth from the garden, and then the little bulb was pushed down in the bucket, under the earth blanket, until only its shiny nose was in sight.

"Now we will put it in the dark," explained Marjory, "and you must keep it well watered, Franklin."

Every morning the little boy crept to the dark closet under the stairs to see how his Christmas present was growing. One day he found a tiny green shoot peeping through the earth. Later on Marjory thought it was time to bring the plant to the light.

Christmas morning mother came to breakfast for the first time in many, many weeks.

"What is this?" she asked, as Franklin stood before her with a rusty bucket in his hands.

"It's a flower," the little boy said, proudly; "a bulb for you, mother! I've been watching it for weeks and weeks, and I'm very sorry it didn't bloom!"

"Never mind," mother said, gently, kissing Franklin's happy face. "I think it is a beautiful present! Think of your taking care of it for mother all those days while she was sick!"

Presently Franklin ran out to try his new velocipede.

Mother leaned over and looked closely at the plant in the little tin bucket.

"Where did the dear little fellow get his bulb?" she asked father. "You mustn't ever tell him, but it is an onion!"—Ethel Taylor Crittenden.

No Idlers Among the Birds.

A close study of bird life shows a most careful division of labor, observes a contributor in Canadian Boy Builder, who knows the value of our common birds and has also detected the recent popular interest in the movement in their behalf. Some birds, such as swallows, swifts, night-hawks and whip-poorwills, sweep the air and keep down very small gauzy-winged pests like mosquitoes, gnats and midgits; while the kingbird, pewees, phoebes and other members of the fly-catcher family take care of the larger flying insects, most of which are injurious to vegetation.

To the warblers and vireos is assigned the task of keeping leaves clear of larvae, plant lice and canker-worms. Thrushes, bluebirds, robins, orioles, catbirds, thrashers, wrens and tanagers pay special attention to the larger caterpillars and tree insects.

Another family of birds has special charge of the bark; among these bird care-takers are to be found the various woodpeckers, the nuthatches, brown creepers, chickadees and kinglets, who keep up a tireless search for insects in the tree trunks, preventing their destruction.

Not only are there birds who work in the air and on the trees, but there are also the ground floor workers. Hidden on the ground around the roots of trees and in the grass are insect enemies whose name is legion. Black-birds, crows, robins, overbirds, thrashers, ground warblers and flickers are well-known members of the ground workers' gang.

Other birds work in close co-operation with man in the destroying of weeds by the eating of seeds. The various sparrows and finches are his constant co-workers. Some of the more tender sparrows who have to winter in the South leave their work to be carried on through the autumn and winter by juncos, snowflakes, redpolls and grosbeaks.—Our Dumb Animals.

How Johnny Was Cured.

Johnny was a great brag. A brag is a boaster. If he heard a playmate tell of something he had done, no matter what it was, Johnny would give a snort and exclaim:

"Pooh! That's nothing! Who couldn't do that?"

One evening the family sat around the fire in the sitting-room. Father was reading, grandma and mother were sewing, Alice and Joe were studying their lessons, when Johnny came strutting in. He took a chair by the table and began reading "Robinson Crusoe."

Presently Joe, who was younger than Johnny, went up to his brother, saying: "Look at my drawing. I did it today in school. Isn't it good?"

"Pooh! Call that good! You ought to see the one I drew! It beats yours all hollow!"

Joe was rather crestfallen, and little Alice, who had a sympathetic heart, pitied her brother, and, going to Joe, asked him to let her see his drawing.

"I wish I could do as well as you do, Joe," she said, hoping to revive her brother's drooping spirits.

"Pooh!" sneered Johnny, "you needn't try to draw; for girls can't make even a straight line."

It was not long before Mr. Boaster left the room for a few moments. When he came back everything seemed to be going on as when he left. Father was reading, grandma and mother were sewing, and Joe and Alice were busy with their lessons.

"At last I have finished my hem," remarked grandma, folding the napkin she had been hemming so industriously.

"Pooh!" said mother, contemptuously, "that is nothing. I have done two while you were doing one!"

The children looked up quickly; for who would have believed she would have spoken so? It was not like her to do so.

Grandma picked up another napkin and began hemming it, but said nothing.

"Father, look at my examples, please. I have done every one of them and have not made a single mistake," said Alice, crossing the room to where her father was sitting before the open grate fire.

"Pooh!" That's nothing," replied her father, not even taking her paper to look at it. "You ought to see the way I used to do examples when I was your age."

Poor little Alice was greatly astonished to hear such a discouraging and boastful remark from her generally kind father, and she was about to turn away when he drew her near to him and whispered something in her ear which brought the smiles to her face.

For a few minutes no one said anything and work went on as before. Johnny was deeply engrossed in the history of Crusoe's adventures and the other children continued their studies.

"My flowers look so well! I believe the geraniums are going to bloom again," remarked mother.

"Pooh! They are not half so thrifty as those I used to raise. Why, I had flowers all winter long, and you have had only a few blossoms in the whole winter," said grandma, contemptuously.

"What is the matter with everybody?" thought Johnny. He had never known them to be in such a humor as they were that evening.

When father remarked presently that he had stepped into the grocer's and been weighed that afternoon and that he "tipped the beam" at 168 pounds and that was doing "pretty well" for him, mother said, crossly:

"Pooh! You call that doing pretty well? Old Mr. Benson weighs 225 pounds and no one ever heard him bragging about it."

Everybody laughed. Father shouted. It was such a surprise, and grandma got up and left the room to keep from choking with laughter.

Johnny saw them all look at him, and after a minute or two began to think.

"Father," said he, "what are you all laughing about? Is it at me?"

"Well, we are not exactly laughing at you. We thought we would try your way of boasting of our accomplishments and see how you thought it sounded; but mother spoiled our game before we had finished it."

Johnny looked rather sheepish the rest of the evening. He wondered if he was as disagreeable as the older folk that evening when he boasted of what he could do or had done. He was forced to admit that boasting sounded very unpleasant, and he resolved to break himself of the habit.—Our Morning Globe.

What a Little Match Can Do.

The wood laid in the fireplace
Is brown and still and cold;
But when it's lighted with a match
It's snapping flames of gold.

You'd never think to look at it,
That twisted, dry old wood
Could have inside it such surprise,
A fire feels so good!

I wonder if all people—
Some do look cross and cold—
Have hidden 'way inside them
Warm, sunny flames of gold?

For if they have, to find their match
Would be the greatest fun!
I can't think where to look for it,
I'll just have to be one.

Bear troubles patiently.
Maintain your integrity as a sacred thing.

Employ your time well.
Be polite to everybody.
Make no useless acquaintances.
Never try to appear more than what you really are.

Never tell business lies.
Do not reckon upon chance.
Refuse to be discouraged.

Then work hard and you are certain to succeed.

The junior who shows by his methods that he is following these rules will convince his employer that he sees things as they really are.

Be loyal to your firm, to those who have helped you, and, above all, play the game.

Prayer should be the Christian's most cherished privilege. The Word of God and the experience of God's people assure us that God Himself hears and answers prayer. It is not our place to criticize His answers; it is only our part to ask. God will give or withhold as seems best to Him. If it were otherwise, we would scarcely dare to pray at all. If answers to our prayers were always exactly in the form that we desired, we would soon learn that our human limitations make it impossible for us to know what it is best for us to have under all circumstances. But God in His infinite wisdom knows what is best. He answers according to His wisdom rather than according to our desires.—Christian Observer.

THRIFT Pays the Bills

This world is full of bills. The grocer sends them, the butcher, the baker, the coal man, the ice man and the tailor.

To some people bills mean worry and unhappiness. To others who practice Thrift, who spend less than they earn and regularly save a stated sum, bills have no terror.

Is it not better to have dollar bills in the bank than bills in the mail-box?

There must be noble things in store for that race with which the Son of God is contented to have such patience. If the Great Husbandman waits so long for the feeble, springing blade, how precious must the full harvest be! There are ages for the world to learn in, and an eternity for the individual; and when the soul is able to bear full light, how many things will the Great Teacher have to disclose! It is a token of the immortality of the soul that God has implanted in man a boundless desire for knowledge, and given him so limited a time to satisfy it—and it is ground for expecting all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge from Jesus Christ that He came into this world, possessed of them, and yet kept silence on so much we long to know.—J. IN MEMORIAM.

MISS FRANCES HARRISON MARR, author and poetess of Warrenton, Va., was born July 2, 1835, in Warrenton. She is the author of various poems, two books of which have been published entitled "Virginia and Other Poems" and "Heart Life in Song." She died October 18, 1918, at Warrenton, Va. The following appreciation has been written by a friend:

"There recently passed away at her home in Warrenton, Va., a woman of very unusual literary ability; her native State and community gave but scant notice of the fact. And yet the creative minds in literature of this contemplative and higher order are not so common an event with us that they should be so readily passed by; indeed, this lack of recognition in the South has created an atmosphere which has made the effort for finer things in literature all the more difficult. The humorous sketches of Bagby or Joel Chandler Harris find always a ready audience, and also the martial ballads and lyrics of Thompson and Ticknor, yet for those who would clothe and express the finer and higher thoughts, our atmosphere is most inhospitable.

In the poems written by Miss Marr we find a pathos and dignity not excelled by George Herbert, probably the favorite poet of the English Church. The merit of these poems of Miss Marr is found in the felicity with which she has expressed the highest aspirations of the soul in language so clear and so simple; her style is singularly without verbal ornamentation; there is no suspicion of superfluous rhetoric. As Thompson said of Ticknor, so with this writer, we feel that "Strength is simplicity, art in naturalness." Most poets dally with their conceptions, but here "always there is a human purpose in the lay," "Our Old Hymns," "Lenten Hours," "Daily Duties," "Twilight Thoughts," such were the themes Miss Marr loved most, and yet how her love of country pervades the poem "Virginia," who is "Queen and Princess of the States!"

"On whose footsteps honor waits," and so too in that entitled "Pro Honore," written in connection with the repudiation of the State debt, a deep clarity and potent meaning arrests us in every line. An occasional poem entitled "The Face" is not found in the now published volumes of Miss Marr's writings. It is difficult to conceive of a more perfect lyric than this:

"For there is a power behind and beneath
The power of strength and grace;
The mind as a sculptor sits within
And chisels and moulds the face."

As with all sincere writers, Miss Marr's writings reveal the character of the author—a reflection on her own high calling and purpose in life. To speak with her was to feel the power of a presence to which has been revealed the clearer vision, recalling the words of Sir Philip Sidney, "They are never alone, who are accompanied by noble thoughts." It is impossible to read these collected poems without a feeling of spiritual refreshment and a more optimistic view of the beneficent ordering of human life.

CHURCH INTELLIGENCE.

B. Avery, D. D., invited all the churches, with their pastors in the section west of the river, north of Lorain, extending to the lake, about two miles square, including thirteen congregations, to unite in a patriotic praise and Thanksgiving service in St. John's Church, he having been lately elected the President of the "Allied Churches" of this section of the city. The clergymen of these parishes, including not only the Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Congregationalists, Disciples, but also the Reformed Germans, now called U. S., Scandinavian, Danish and Roumanian churches, gladly accepted the invitation, and the pastors, preceded by the vested choir, led by the trumpeter, carrying the cross and allied flags, and followed by the rector, marched in the procession, singing "Onward, Christian Soldier," going down one aisle of the church and crossing over and coming up the other aisle, as it is an old-fashioned church, to the chancel. They all, with a large congregation of over six hundred, representing the Allied Churches, then sang "The Star Spangled Banner." The rector led in the services, all uniting in the Lord's Prayer. The Congregational minister read with the congregation the Psalter. The Olivet Baptist pastor read the first lesson. The Reformed Methodist minister the second lesson. The pastor of the Reformed Church, U. S., read the Thanksgiving Prayer from the Prayer Book and special appropriate prayers written by Bishop Lawrence. The rector then gave a word of greeting to the congregations of the Allied Churches, stating that they were like the allied nations under different flags, in different uniforms, but for the one cause of righteousness and justice and Christian democracy of the world. The Presbyterian clergyman responded very happily, thanking the rector and congregation of old St. John's, stating that it had been a pioneer and a leader in righteousness for the upbuilding and betterment of the community. He then announced the Marseillaise Hymn and the speaker of the evening, the Rev. Carl Gage, pastor of Franklin Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, who delivered an able and eloquent address on the influences of the war in unifying all Christian denominations, the extension of Christ's Kingdom and the new unified effort under the reconstruction period to meet the social and moral conditions as well as the labor question, including the temperance problems, which were the vital issues of the day. The offering was made for the Armenian and Syrian war sufferers. Final prayer was said by the pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, the Rev. Dr. Mickey; the Recessional Hymn was "God of Our Fathers" as the choir marched down the east aisle, and returning by the west aisle, followed by the clergymen and rector, closing a most beautiful and inspiring service demonstrating the real unity of the Allied Churches, who have come to realize that we must "all hang together, or we will all hang separately." The Great Captain of our salvation "Marches in front of His banner unfurled, which He raised that His own might find Him and His holy Church throughout all the world falls into rank behind Him."

IDAHO.

Death of Bishop Funsten.

The Rt. Rev. James Bowen Funsten, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Idaho, died suddenly at his home in Boise Sunday night, December 1, in the sixty-third year of his age. Bishop Funsten was the son of Colonel Oliver Ridgeway Funsten, of the Eleventh Virginia Cavalry, in the War Between the States, and Mary Bowen Funsten. He was born in Clarke County, but his parents later moved to "Mirador," Greenwood, Albemarle County, Va. He was educated at the Virginia Military Institute and the University of Virginia, where he graduated in law. Later, having decided to enter the ministry, he matriculated at the Virginia Theological Seminary at Alexandria. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Whittle upon his graduation in 1882 and priest the following year by Bishop Peterkin. His first charge was at Bristol and Marion, Virginia, after which he was for almost six years rector of Christ Church, Richmond. For a while he was on the editorial staff of the Southern Churchman. He served for two years as a general missionary of the undivided Diocese of Virginia, his special field being Southwestern Virginia, where he did much in extending the Church where it was then so little known. In 1892 he became rector of Trinity Church, Portsmouth, Va., where he remained until his consecration as Missionary Bishop of Boise, including Idaho and a part of Wyoming. He was consecrated in Trinity Church July 13, 1899. In 1907 his title became the Bishop of Idaho and that State became his jurisdiction.

Bishop Funsten is survived by his wife, who was Miss Ida Vivian Pratt, of Port Royal, Caroline County, Va.; four sons, three of whom are in service, and one daughter, who is engaged in war work in Washington; also by three sisters, Mrs. Robert C. Jett, wife of the head of the Virginia Episcopal School, of Lynchburg, Va.; Mrs. R. Allen Castleman, of Falls Church, Va., and Miss Ida Funsten, of Washington, and two brothers, O. Herbert Funsten, of Richmond, and David Funsten, of the United States Shipbuilding Corporation, Baltimore.

Funeral services were to be held on Wednesday, December 4, at the Cathedral at Boise, and the body, accompanied by his family, taken to Richmond for interment.

One in Four of Our Men Called for Draft Examination Was Physically Deficient

CITY PHYSICIAN STRONGLY ADVISES ALL PERSONS TO HAVE BLOOD EXAMINATIONS MADE BY FAMILY DOCTOR SAYS THOUSANDS SUFFER FROM IRON DEFICIENCY

And think its "overwork," "too much worry," "a case of nerves," or some other trouble. Ordinary Nuxated Iron will increase the strength and endurance of such folks in two weeks' time in many instances.

In General Crowder's report to Congress, he stated that twenty-nine per cent. of the men called for physical examination were found physically deficient: that is, more than one out of four of the flower of our land was sick and many of them perhaps did not know it.

In commenting on this serious condition of affairs, Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly Physician of Bellevue Hospital, New York, and the Westchester County Hospital, said: "The probability is that many of these cases were due solely to lack of sufficient iron in the red blood corpuscles. When the iron goes from the blood, you can have most any kind of symptoms varying from a weak, nervous, run-down state, to those of most serious maladies; the volume of blood often increases, thereby imposing an extra heavy burden on the heart. Contrary to general opinion, lack of iron in the blood does not necessarily mean you do not have enough blood, but it means your blood is not of the right kind."

If you feel tired in the morning; restless at night; if you suffer from weakness or lack of vitality; go to your family doctor and have him take a specimen of your blood and examine it, and if it shows iron deficiency, get him to give you a prescription for organic iron—Nuxated Iron. Do this so as to be sure that you do not get hold of some of the numerous forms of metallic iron preparations on the market, which may do you far more harm than good. Or if you do not want to go to this trouble, purchase an original package of Nuxated Iron and see for yourself that the words Nuxated Iron appear on the package—not Nux and Iron nor any other form of iron other than Nuxated Iron.

Dr. A. J. Newman, late Police Surgeon of the City of Chicago and former House Surgeon, Jefferson Park Hospital, Chicago, in commenting on the value of Nuxated Iron, said: "This remedy has proven through

DR. SULLIVAN SAYS

One-fourth of the people are sick—not up to the normal health mark as shown by General Crowder's reports to Congress on the draft examination. I strongly advise everyone who feels weak, nervous or run-down at times, to go to their family physician and have a blood examination made. Thousands suffer from iron deficiency and do not know it. In my opinion there is nothing like organic iron—Nuxated Iron—to help give increased strength and energy to the weak, run-down and aged.

strength, power and endurance will find it a most remarkable and wonderfully effective remedy."

Manufacturers' Note: Nuxated Iron which has been used by Dr. Sullivan and others with surprising results, and which is prescribed and recommended above by physicians is not a secret remedy, but one which is well known to druggists everywhere. Unlike the older inorganic iron products it is easily assimilated and does not injure the teeth, make them black nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good druggists.

Preacher's Make-Up," before the weekly Monday meeting of the Pittsburgh District Methodist Protestant Ministers. Mr. Porkess was requested to allow the printing of the essay in full in the weekly Methodist Protestant Magazine.

The Rev. W. G. Harter, formerly in charge of St. Mary's Church, Webster, South Dakota, is now in charge of the largest and most important of the coal field missions of West Virginia. Mr. Harter is stationed at Lundale.

The Rev. John A. Chapin has been appointed general missionary in the District of Oklahoma. He is to have charge of Trinity Church, Guthrie, with mission stations, and will be in residence at Guthrie after January 15.

The Rev. John G. Currier, who has been civilian chaplain of the Gettysburg tank corps, now being demobilized, resumed his duties as minister-in-charge of St. Ambrose's Church, Philadelphia, on December 1.

The Rev. A. S. Lawrence has been commissioned first lieutenant and chaplain in the United States Army, and has resigned as Archdeacon of the Convocation of Raleigh, N. C.

Ordinations.

In Christ Church, Cambridge, Md., on Sunday, November 3, the Rev. Leighton Howard Nugent was advanced to the priesthood by the Bishop of the Diocese of Easton. The candidate was presented by Dean Davies, who also preached the sermon, and the rector of the parish, the Rev. W. D. Gould, assisted in the service. Mr. Nugent will serve as assistant in the parish.

Deaths.

The Rev. William Vesey Whitten, who since April 1, 1918, had been in charge of St. Mark's Mission, Nashua, Iowa, died on November 1. The body was taken to Crete, Nebraska, for interment.

The Rev. George Paul Torrence, rector of Trinity Church, Hamilton, Ohio, and also in charge of Holy Trinity Mission at Oxford, a college town, died suddenly on November 21. Funeral services were held at Trinity Church, Hamilton on November 25, and were conducted by the Rt. Rev. Boyd Vincent, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, assisted by the Rt. Rev. John Hazen White, D. D., Bishop of Michigan City, a schoolmate of the deceased; Archdeacon Dodshon, as representative of the Rt. Rev. Theodore I. Reese, D. D., Bishop-Coadjutor of the Diocese; the Rev. Gilbert P. Symons, rector of Christ Church, Glendale, and the Rev. George C. Dunlop, rector of the Church of the Advent, Cincinnati. Many of the other Cincinnati Clergy were present and the remains were laid to rest in Spring Grove Cemetery, Cincinnati, in the family lot.

A Great Creed Necessary.

"You cannot have a Church without a creed; you cannot have a mighty Church without a great creed.

"Someone may object that I am confusing together creed and faith. 'According to your faith be it unto you,' it is written in the Scriptures. And faith there does not mean intellectual belief, but personal adhesion and surrender and trust and consecration. Granted at once. It is according to our faith, our personal devotion and consecration and trust, it shall be unto us; and faith is not synonymous with creed. But while not synonymous, they stand in most close and intimate relationship to each other. For if, on the one hand, a man may have a creed without a faith, no man can have a faith without a creed. And the bigger the creed, the mightier the faith it inspires. And for a creed to be big it is not necessary that it should be long. Bigness is not a matter of quantity, but of quality.

"This fundamental apostolic creed that God was in Christ was a mighty and tremendous creed, and it created a mighty and victorious faith. And the same great creed would create the same sort of enthusiasm and irresistible faith today."

"A Christianity minus the divinity of Christ, minus the Resurrection, minus the Atonement, will not float at all; it will sink beyond hope of salvage."

"And is not a great deal of our modern Christianity an emasculated and devitalized thing of that kind? The Christianity of the apostles was a rich and full and vital thing. It had at its heart a tremendous belief in certain acts of God. It declared that in the person of Jesus of Nazareth, God, the eternal God, entered human life. It declared that in the cross of Jesus, God dealt with human sin and delivered men from its bondage; it declared that in the resurrection of Jesus, God triumphed over sin and death, and demonstrated His supremacy and sovereignty; it declared that through the Spirit of the living Christ, God was with His people always, to help and succour and save them.

"This Apostolic Gospel, with its belief in an incarnate God and Atonement and Resurrection and the Indwelling Spirit, was a mighty and tremendous Gospel."—Rev. J. D. Jones, M. A., D. D.

Living to Christ in small things and living for Christ every day is the secret of large fruitfulness. A peach tree or an orange does not leap into a bounty of fruit by one spasmodic effort; an orchard does not ripen under a single day's sunshine. Every raindrop, every sunbeam, every inch of subsoil does its part. A fruitful Christian is a growth. To finish up a godly character by a mere religion of Sundays and sermons and sacraments and revivals and special seasons, is impossible. A man may be converted in an instant, but he must grow by the year. The tough fibre of the slender branch that can hold up a half-bushel of oranges is very different from a little willow-switch; it is the steady, compacting process that makes that little limb like a steel wire. Such is a healthy and holy believer's life.—T. L. Cuyler.

There are endless ways for a man to make his power and influence felt in the Church, if he has but the will to do it. Have the will and make the way. Don't be a "negative."

"Faith in life eternal, in a God of goodness, has sustained me in the most trying hours. Prayer has enlightened my way," General Foch is quoted in the Atlantic Monthly to have written.

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM.

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease, but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To cure Rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys. It corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer with rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, gall stones, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred, on the average, report no benefit.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

A difficulty is a chance for victory.

It is still as safe to trust in God as it was in the days of Job.—Ex.

Were we more in the mount with God, our faces would shine more with men.—Robert Leighton.

It is the highest exercise of reason to seek truth with that reverence which makes no forecast of the finding.

Moral courage is nothing in the world but just the capacity for doing what we know we ought to do.—Phillips Brooks.

The seed of sacrifice brings forth the fragrant fruit of love, and love always has in its heart the seeds of a new sacrifice.—Josiah Strong.

The power to resist is obtained through resistance. An oak cannot be grown in a hot house, but in the open where it meets the blasts and gathers strength through the strain.

Gaunt poverty cannot displace

Their joy: far better Thou than gold.
—Selected.

The forgiving act of man is generally excited by commiseration for the offender—it is not the plan of his life, it is an occasional act. But Divine forgiveness is a plan settled, eternal, immutable.

Before a man's life can fully answer the question, "Lovest thou me?" he must be ready to give up his own choice as to the way of showing it, and passively accept or actively obey the will of God alone.—C. Stanford.

It is impossible to work morally except through the individual. But the first duty, as it is usually the most imperative desire, of the man whose will has been renewed, is to see that other men also are within the care and the comfort of God."

"Kind thoughts, patient thoughts, gentle deeds, may not seem of great consequence, but they make the world beautiful. They are like the grass of the field, of which men take little account, and yet the world would be a desert without its beauty.

Grace is determined to complete what it has begun, and to perform the good work until the day of redemption. The whole Church is given to Christ in covenant and every believer has his share in the blessed security. Looking at the internal strength of the Church, we may say it is endangered; but looking at the covenant, it is safe. God's honor is concerned to bring the Church through in spite of all enemies.—J. W. Alexander.

A perfect life is not attained in a day. Men cannot cut 'cross lots, or take an air line for the Kingdom of Heaven. If we had our way, we should have the bud, the blossom and the ripened fruit at the same time. But this is not God's method. He gives us "first the blade, then the ear, afterwards the full corn in the ear." Character is a growth, and it requires time to perfect the full rounded Christian.—D. C. Thomlinson.

Faithfulness is ever winning and ever wearing the crown. Life is every day putting on a new crown. The judgment seat of God is set every morning, and His rewards are bestowed upon the faithful soul. What life, what love, what joy, does God give day by day, to men who live simple, sincere, unselfish, pious lives. The best is kept in store, but brief foretastes are granted while we suffer and strive.—C. A. Berry.

The Christian needs the saving power of hope. He needs the conviction that Christ's grace within him is omnipotent; that the life in Jesus will not be a failure; that the Christian's victory, if he holds steadfast, is a matter of certainty. What he needs is to be sealed with the Holy Spirit, of promise, which is an earnest of our inheritance into the redemption of God's own possession, unto the praise of His glory.—G. D. Boardman.

It is the failure to spend a definite, even though it be short, time each day with God that is the secret of all weakness, variableness and shallowness in our spiritual experience and service. Our time may not be long, but it must be regular; and from the act will come the habit, and from the habit the attitude, and from the attitude the character, settled, strong, sure and abiding, wherein God's presence will be more and more a delight, and God's power more and more realized.—W. H. G. Thomas.

O God, Forgive!

O God, forgive me that I fail to see
The heroism now surrounding me,
Nor count that hero great whose spirits fail
Because his body, poorly fed, does quail
Beneath a task which he is set to do—
A task too hard for him—that we, the few,
In idle ease on luxuries may live:
My God, that we forget him, O forgive!

All day my brother labors in the field;
Labors that the brown earth may richly yield
Its strength of substance, that my life
may live:
I do not think of him—O God, forgive!
And this my sister in the sweatshop stands,
Her heart so human, struggling with weak hands,
Till death, more kind than life, says:
"Cease to live":
O God, I thought not of her—O forgive!

Within the heated depth of darkest mines,
Ten thousand slaves of poverty one finds—
They never see the sunshine. In the dark
They labor on 'til death does stiffen stark
Our brother's forms. Let their starved spirits rise
To life in light, in homes beyond the skies.
We thought not of them, laboring to live—
Remembering now, we pray, O God, forgive!

Upon our streets the clubs our watchmen wield
They wield for us, our safety, nor do yield,
No matter how their weary arms may ache
Nor feel for needed rest, they can forsake
A duty tedious, stale of interest,
In care for you, for me, that none
molest:
Ah, thus from year to year we see them
live,
Yet never think of them—O God, forgive!

The fireman rushing to the burning home,
The seamen who o'er angry oceans
roam,

The builders of the iron-trails which link
This world of men, from ocean's brink to brink,
The men who swing great bridges high in air,
And those whom pestilence can never scare—
These all are heroes, and among us
live:
We seldom think of them—O God, forgive!
—Madge E. Anderson, in The Survey.

Both above and below, without and within, which way so ever thou dost turn thee, everywhere thou shalt find the Cross, and everywhere of necessity thou must hold fast patience, if thou wilt have inward peace and enjoy an everlasting crown. If thou bear the Cross cheerfully, it will bear thee, and lead thee to the desired end, namely, where there shall be an end of suffering, though here there shall not be.
—Thomas à Kempis.

The Believer.

Lord, I believe in Thee!
In want, in pain, in grief,
I trust Thee where I cannot see:
Help Thou my unbelief!

Thy law is in my heart,
With that I follow Thee;
If sin still rule the worse part,
Be merciful to me!
—Washington Gladden.

The Revelation of Christ the Crown of Our Work.

As on the way to Emmaus, the Lord may delay the personal manifestation of Himself to us until we learn how to esteem Him and His work. This will come at last and bring a more perfect trust and wider usefulness. The two disciples hastened back to Jerusalem eager to tell the others that they had seen the Lord; and all the preaching of the apostles was founded on this unfolding of the Scripture concerning Him given in that afternoon walk and repeated in the evening's discourse in the upper room. The cure of their own sadness taught them how to preach Christ to others. As the deeply laid foundations of St. Petersburg and Venice are more costly than the palaces which rise upon them and which but for them would sink into the ooze, so the discipline which establishes the faith of men in Christ's atoning death is of more value than any joy and the only foundation for the highest character and service. If, with blow after blow, the hidden friend is driving repentance and trust deep into our spirits, as piles in unsubstantial soil, we may wait, yes, and be thankful that at last we are to become temples of His grace.—Charles
M. Southgate.

A great part of courage is the courage of having done the thing before.
And, in all human action, these faculties will be strong which are used.— Emerson.

The Outlook and the Uplook.

"When the outlook is dark, try the uplook."

These words hold a message of cheer;

Be glad while repeating them over,
And smile when the shadows appear.
Above and beyond stands the Master;
He sees what we do for His sake;
He never will fail nor forsake us,
"He knoweth the way that we take."

"When the outlook is dark, try the uplook."

The uplook of faith and good cheer;
The love of the Father surrounds us,
He knows when the shadows are near.

Be brave, then, and keep the eyes lifted,

And smile on the dreariest day;
His smile will glow in the darkness;
His light will illumine the way.
—The British Weekly.

It Would Mean the Death of the Church.

"It was the gifted Victorinus," says the "Lutheran" of Philadelphia, "who said to Simplician, 'I, too, expect to be a Christian.' He received the reply: 'I will not believe it until I see you at church.' To this the noted orator retorted: 'Do church walls make the Christian?' Simplician was not to be vanquished, and proudly answered: 'Not exactly; but our Lord said, He that denieth me before men, him will I also deny before my Father who is in heaven.' That answer goes to the root of the matter. It brings out an element in church-going that is of great importance and that is little thought of by many Christians in our day—church-going as witness-bearing for Christ. To attend the services of God's house is to confess Christ before men. They who go to church give notice to the world that they mean to be reckoned among those who have Christ for their Lord and Master. The church member who is conspicuous by his absence from God's house is virtually denying Christ. He sets an example which would mean the death of the Church were all others to follow it. He practically teaches that worship and preaching of the Word are of little importance, and he does more to create and encourage disloyalty to the Church than if he were an unbeliever. While professedly in favor of the Church and religion, he casts the weight of his influence against it. And yet how many there are who do this very thing without once thinking of the denial of Christ their conduct implies."

"If God give me work to do I will thank Him that He has bestowed upon me a strong arm; if He gives me danger to brave I will bless Him that He has not made me without courage, but I will go down on my knees and beseech Him to fit me for my task, if He tell me it is only to stand and wait."—Jean Ingelow.

Immortality.

Man was not born awhile to live and die,
Nor live again;
The mortal with the immortal blends,
Beyond our ken;
In every human breast there lurks a hope,
Faint though it be,
That every man beyond the tomb shall live again
Eternally;
A precious hope, inspired by Love Divine,
To mortals given,
To lift the soul above the things of time,
Toward God and heaven.

The one who, conscious of celestial birth,
Breathes day by day
The atmosphere of love ineffable,
Can never stray;
But, ever guided by the Infinite,
The tranquil soul
Knows that it has in Him, e'en here,
Attained its goal;
And on the bridge his faith has built
From earth to heaven,
Man walks, assured that its foundations strong
Can ne'er be riven.

The Worth of the Gospel.

Things have changed very much since the days when Paul of Tarsus felt obliged, not indeed to apologize for the Gospel which he preached, but to explain and defend it apologetically, much as a merchant might describe, explain and set forth his wares—some new wares calculated to be of use to mankind—before a critical crowd of possible customers in the open market places of the world's rough, rushing trade. Nowadays almost every one we meet admits the theoretic worth of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and even those who affect cynically to criticize the Church take pains to point out that they find no fault with the Christ if His ideals were carried out in all its details.

Now, we are perfectly willing to allow, for we cannot deny the fact, that the visible Church of Christ does not perfectly express His will in practice, and some parts at least do not even do this in theory. Both on its theoretical and its practical side, institutional Christianity still lags far behind the ideals of its Founder. But those who are out of the Church lag much farther behind in this profession and practice. The truth is that the Church, with all its faults, is in its way the best thing yet out. It is worth while, it deserves encouragement, it should be talked up—and what gives the Church its importance is the worth of the Gospel, which, after all, it stands for, and which in a sense it incarnates. The Church is not the only worthy exponent of a peerless, perfect Gospel, and the Gospel, when candidly considered, will be seen to be logically, as well as historically, ultimate in the Church.

The worth of the Gospel may be reckoned in terms of God and in terms of man—very unequal appraisements, we must admit. If we take it with respect to God its value is infinite. The worth of a thing has been defined as that which one who knows its true value will give for it. Judged by this standard, the worth of the Gospel is beyond price, and even imagination, for the Son of God gave Himself in sacrifice in order to provide it. He, in a sense, was the price of the evangel. Human reckonings are impotent to measure such worth. If, mayhap, we could have stood just outside of the gates of glory when they opened out, that through those gleaming portals might issue the Son of God in His humiliating descent to earth, when, attended by His seraph train—eventually to be left behind—He counted not His glory as a prize to be clung to, and temporarily divested Himself of His celestial majesty, that He might be born as a man and suffer as a redeemer; if we could have knelt at the Bethlehem manger, joining our adoring worship with that of the shepherds and wise men—wisest of all when worshipping Christ; if we could have taken our standpoint amid the gathering shades of Golgotha, beneath the cross on which suffered one called a Galilean, who was in very sooth God—then we might in some faint degree be prepared to tell what is the value of the Gospel in terms of the Divine, for we should begin to know the price which the Almighty was willing to pay that we might rejoice in the light and love of a veritable evangel.

Reckoned in terms of man, the Gospel still appraises itself at a vast figure. For the Gospel is good tidings of salvation to lost men who believe in the redemption of their souls, and who can reckon up the worth of even one human soul? A finite spirit has not the value of God, but it is of immense worth, and the Gospel which essays to save one human spirit is, if value means anything at all, of priceless moment. And when the multitude of souls to be saved is an unnumbered one, the worth is seen to be beyond human comprehension.—The Springfield Churchman.

THE PHILADELPHIA CONFERENCE ON UNITY.

During three days of last week there sat in the city of Philadelphia a conference of representatives of eighteen denominations of Christians who had come together to consider and further the proposition of organic union among the evangelical churches. This conference assembled upon the invitation of a committee appointed for the purpose by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. (Northern). It was attended by about one hundred and fifty delegates, not, of course, authorized to commit their respective bodies to any specific course of action, but competent, either from official standing or acknowledged position of leadership, to reflect the general views of their various churches. Our own Commission on Christian Unity (not to be confused with the Commission on a World Conference on Faith and Order), found opportunity to meet the purpose for which it was created and was present in the person of its chairman and a number of its members.

From the meagre reports of the conference in the daily press there seems to have been substantial unanimity in regard to the timeliness as well as the pressing need and general desire for some practical movement toward unity. Only the spokesmen for the Baptists and the Society of Friends expressed doubt on these points. The sentiment among the laymen of the country in favor of unity was stressed by several speakers. "What we have done today will be hailed with joy by laymen from the Atlantic to the Pacific," said Dr. Hunt, of Wisconsin. Dr. Ainslie, of Baltimore, long a leader in this movement, said: "The whole world is hungering for brotherhood. If the Church will not lead in this movement it will be led by the Socialists and labor unions." And Bishop Talbot declared that if the clergy do not bring the churches together the laymen of the country will do so by a religious revolution. "The people are sick and tired," he said, "of bickering and wasted effort in the Church. We must have organic union if we are to make the work of the Church a success."

Steps were taken for the creation of an ad interim committee to carry forward the movement toward organic union. Each communion will be asked to appoint one member of this committee and one additional member for each 500,000 communicants. The committee of the Presbyterian Assembly which arranged for the present conference will act as the nucleus and convener of the ad interim committee, whose duties are outlined as follows:

"This committee shall be charged with these duties: Develop and use at its discretion agencies and methods for discovering and creating interest in the subject of organic union throughout the churches of the country.

"Make provision for presenting by personal delegations, or otherwise, to the national bodies of all the evangelical communions of the United States urgent invitations to participate in the interdenominational council on organic union.

"Lay before the bodies thus approached the steps necessary for the holding of such council including the plan and basis of representation and the date of the council, which shall be as early as possible, and in any event not later than 1920.

"To prepare for presentation to such council when it shall assemble a suggested plan or plans of organic union.

"To consider and report upon any legal matters related to the plan or plans of union which it may propose.

"Report to the Interdenominational Council on any and all matters within the field of its inquiries. The committee will be subject to the jurisdiction of the council.

"Notice of the committee is directed to the efforts for organic union represented in other lands, especially the churches of Canada. The remarkable and significant statement recently issued by a joint committee of Anglican and free churches of Great Britain will also call for commendation.

"The conference calls attention to the facts that in its search for a plan of organic union the committee will not be precluded from considering plans of Federal union such as are in varying forms present to the minds of members of this conference. Our nation is a Federal union, but is not the less an organic union. Care should be used not to confuse the term Federal as thus employed with this meaning when used to signify simply 'associated' or 'co-operative.'"

At a dinner tendered the conference on Thursday evening Mr. Edward H.

Bonsall, President of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, presided and about one hundred and fifty delegates to the conference were present. Addresses were made by a number of the prominent religious leaders of America. The following resolution in regard to the Peace Conference was adopted by this assemblage:

"While we are here seeking the visible union of the churches, we are not unmindful of the soon-coming conference across the seas in the interest of world peace and union, and we fervently pray that the teachings of our Divine Lord and Master may be the basis of international peace and justice to the end that national and racial hatred both as between nations and as between peoples may speedily be done away and there be ushered in the new era of peace and good will."

In the instructions given for the guidance of the ad interim committee it will be noted that their attention is directed specifically to "the remarkable and significant statement recently issued by a joint committee of Anglican and free churches of Great Britain," and their approval of it is assumed. This statement, the Second Interim Report of this committee, appointed from various commissions of conference in preparation for the World Conference on Faith and Order, embraces several conclusions which seemed to them to be "necessary conditions" of possible reunion. The first of these is, "That continuity with the historic Episcopate should be effectively preserved." The Episcopate, however, should be conformed to "the primitive ideal and practice," and the "acceptance of the fact of Episcopacy, and not any theory as to its character, should be all that is asked for."

This report is signed by the Bishops of Bath and Wells, Winchester, and Oxford, and other Anglican Churchmen as well as a number of representative nonconformists. It was published in full in our issue of May 25, 1918. Its proposal fully meets the fourth condition of unity as laid down in the Lambeth Quadrilateral. Since this was supposed to be the great stumbling-block in the way of reunion, the acceptance of the fact involved by so many of our brethren who are leaders in the non-Episcopal Churches both here and in Great Britain seem to be a most promising token of future agreement.

One may easily be mistaken in expecting large or immediate results from this conference or the machinery it has created. Denominationalism for its own sake has a strong hold upon the American mind. The ingrained prejudices and misconceptions of many generations give way with difficulty. Partial and one-sided views of religious truth, long maintained and defended, assume the guise of great principles to be conserved to the exclusion of other and complementary truths. How far these tendencies toward disintegration have been and are being overcome by broader Christian contempt, by the pressing demands of God's kingdom in these times and by the plain dictates of common sense, cannot be discovered until a test is made by just such an effort as this to come together. But who can tell but that God's Spirit has been at work more effectively in this matter than we are aware? This is a day of great movements and unexpected realizations. In other directions the dreams of the ages are coming to their fulfillment. We do not speak of the "impossible" now with the assurance we once did. Nothing that the good God and good men unite in desiring and striving for is impossible. We must therefore greet this and every honest movement toward that unity of the Christian Church for which Christ prays with the utmost hopefulness. And we Churchmen, remembering all the professions we have made, the vantage-ground we have claimed as a center of unity, and the really great responsibilities which our historic position and other sources of influence place upon us, cannot ignore such a movement because it does not come in just the way we had expected or desired. Our sincerity will be put to the test as well as our humility of mind when this issue comes. Our first care must be that we ourselves are prepared for an even partial fulfillment of what we have so earnestly advocated.

No man lives for himself alone. Whether we will or not, we are dependent on the exertions of others and others are affected by our good or evil acts. We belong to a family, a town, a State, a nation, to the great family of mankind. Absolute liberty is not possible even for the members of a family except as the liberty is guided by good will. If in a home each member considered himself alone, disregarding the wishes and welfare of others, the result would be destruction. That is the best society in which the law of the family is applied on the largest scale. The Golden Rule is the only law by which ideal society can be obtained. "We are members one of another."

Here and There

In Holland the anti-German feeling is beginning to run so high that it looks as though Queen Wilhelmina would have to make choice between her husband and her country. The former was a German princeling who has always retained his fondness for German customs and methods. At the time of the atrocities in Belgium he insisted on fraternizing with the German officers to such an extent that the Dutch Prime Minister warned him that unless it was stopped he would be deprived of his rank as an officer in the Dutch army, but he was so obstinate that he had to be put under restraint and has been practically a prisoner for the past three years. The Queen's decision will be awaited with interest.

The Wellesley College girls adopted a very practical method for meeting the exigencies arising from the labor shortage. They promptly turned in and began to do their own washing, janitor's work and dining-room service. Girls from the wealthiest families took their turns with those who had done such things at home. It is a pity that this democratizing process should be stopped at the cessation of hostilities. Why not let our colleges be places where all of our young people can get on a level for the four years of their attendance?

We are glad to note that the Virginia Methodist Conference has voted to retain the use of the words "The Holy Catholic Church" unchanged in the Creed. Of course, our Methodist brethren abandoning this phrase would not have affected its use in any way in the Episcopal Church, but the discussion of it and its final retention will lead to a wider and better understanding of the real meaning of the word "Catholic." This phrase has often been misleading to people in rural sections who have not appreciated the difference between Catholic and Roman Catholic. The Florida Methodist Conference, at its recent session, placed its women members upon equality with its men in the matter of voting rights on all questions, thus showing its responsiveness to the growing sentiment in favor of sex equality, which is now spreading throughout the world.

The boundary dispute between Peru and Chile is becoming less acrid and there now seems to be no danger of a clash of arms. At one time it looked as though the settlement of this dispute might be one of the pressing needs for the intervention of the League of Nations almost before that much talked of organization was ready for business.

An unexpected source of prophecy is found in the final words of the chapter on American independence in Green's Short History of the English People, where he says, "The distance that parted England from America lessens every day. The ties that united them grow every day stronger." This was written forty or more years ago. Last week Vice Admiral Sims said in London: "If I have my wish all of the English-speaking people in the world will celebrate Britain's Day by expressing the solemn determination that, for all time, they will live together in the same high spirit of good fellowship, mutual esteem and unity of purpose, so whole-heartedly shown by the United States and British navies during the last eighteen months." Thinking people of both countries are heartily behind the English historian and the American fighter in backing these sentiments.

Statements of soldiers returning from France are in many cases condemnatory of the methods and practices of the Y. M. C. A. overseas. We have all contributed to Y. M. C. A. campaigns, and these statements are now becoming so frequent and so insistent that in fairness and justice to past and present contributors it would seem but proper that the Y. M. C. A. should render a satisfactory explanation, in justice to themselves as well as to persons on the outside who are trying to give earnest support to this organization.

Bible reading is said to be a habit that the boys will bring back with them from France. It is reported that no other book has been so often asked for by the soldiers in camp and at the front. Three publishing-houses in America, England and Scotland have been keeping their presses going day and night to supply the demand. The Great Book is now being printed in eighty-one languages, which makes it possible for almost every one in the world to read it in his native tongue.

In these times when women are performing so many of men's duties in offices, in munition factories and on the farm, it is very gratifying to note that they have by no means abandoned or neglected the essentially feminine art of knitting. We are told that they have turned out over 14,000,000,000 knitted articles in the past seventeen months. Such splendid effort as this will undoubtedly form a prominent feature of the future historians' account of the great struggle.

THE CHURCH AT WAR.

Mr. Editor: Our title, "The Church Militant," I presume, is universally applicable and absolutely "fit."

One of the great lessons of the world war has been the necessity for "Unity in Command" in the States Militant. The principle itself is not popular among the people of democratic States. When Lloyd-George first pressed home the idea in democratic England he was nearly unhorsed as Premier. A few years ago an autocratic President of the United States, under any conceivable circumstances, would have been considered by Congress and the masses a lunatic dream! And yet the States at war by unavoidable demonstration in practice have with inexorable logic abolished the pet theories (under war conditions) to which our democratic souls so fondly cling!

The Millennial Church will be the "Church at peace." Until that happy period arrives war conditions exist in the Church and much of the war principle of centralization in command and co-ordinate action is essential to the highest success. Witness results in Rome, Methodism, and Utah.

For twenty years I have studied this problem in my official relation to the whole of four large Middle and Eastern Dioceses—covering, approximately, fifteen thousand miles a year. My possibilities of examining our democratic theories in the Church's militant field have been great. Therefore, I must take issue with a writer in a late periodical who impresses upon his readers the fact that the authority of a Bishop should only be exercised under the practical direction or approbation of a "Board of Missions." He particularly stresses the "lay" activity on the Board.

Not being a Bishop myself, I may possibly be trusted to state my view of the Bishop's side of this question impartially. Not fond of controversy, I am, nevertheless, impelled to do so, as I consider the principle fundamentally wrong and open to every objection made to the same principle applied in the realm of the States "Militant."

Briefly the Bishop's prerogatives in the parish itself should be increased. Our President is a combination of both King and Premier as they exist abroad. The Bishop's function is very similar in the Church. His is the only mind in the Diocese whose vision is co-extensive with the Diocese and measurably comprehends the necessities of the Church at large. This vision is of immense value to him in Diocesan administration.

But setting "parishes" aside (in the interest of brevity), let us treat simply the "mission field."

Here the less limitation placed upon the Bishop's absolute freedom of action the better, and the canon law should be more explicit on this point. The Board of Missions should be defined as (at the Bishop's option) a consultative body only, controlling, however, all appropriations. This last power should be exercised very rarely and the circumstances should be very exceptional in which it is exercised at all, contrary to the Bishop's initiative.

Let us suppose a case in which by Canon the Bishop's powers of administration are divided with a "Board" constituted of clergy and laity.

The sweeping condemnation of this idea is the verdict of the States at war under similar but major conditions.

Let us analyze.

Under the above supposition you have a body of men (my experience has shown) who in many instances will consider that this Canon not only empowers but directs them to co-ordinate with their Bishop in his Diocesan administration. Admitting that all of them are the Bishop's peers and are entirely capable, in his place, of performing his duties—let us note results.

The Bishop's power of initiative and his genius for decision is impaired. Given (of course) good sense and tact, these qualities are essential to effective leadership. The Bishop's conscientious sense of responsibility—a great incentive to thought and prayer in every exigency—is diminished.

Again you have a body of men absorbed in parochial and business matters attempting a radical administration over a field of which they are (often) as ignorant in first-hand examination as they are of the geography of the moon. The question is not usually one of judgment or theory, but also of knowledge of historical data, personnel and local conditions.

If our sundry "committees" or "boards" would always remember this and were duly modest no harm could result. But in every convention there are members whose sole claim to distinction is a critical attitude toward their Bishop and a disposition to form and express opinions on every topic, however ignorant they may be of the question at issue. Such men are a nuisance to every Diocese. If (as usual) they work for a board or committee position and are backed by a Canon they can seriously hamper their Bishop, impair his activity and confuse Counsel. Other members of the same body are often misled by an unreasonable ambition toward original action or statements of data wholly, or in large part, untrue.

Some ultra ecclesiastical democrat may indignantly repudiate these late lessons of States Militant, and eloquently declaim on the Bishop's "fallibility." True Bishops are not infallible. My twenty years, more or less, intimate association with them yielded many illustrations of this fact. But that is a matter of course and disproves nothing. However, taking our "American House of Bishops" as a whole, they are not surpassed in brain, heart or character by any body of men, lay or clerical, known to me. My position is the larger view.

It is not safe for us (those who endorse my position) to state that these critics of the Bishops are always misguided egotists. They are often the victims of preconceived theories sometimes correct. They are occasionally persons of misguided enthusiasm. However, I will say to such men:

First. Do not take yourselves too seriously.

Second. Remember, it is rarely safe to make a blanket application of theories based on exceptions. The very information you lack is essential to their wise application in numberless instances.

Third. And your Bishop (a man of superior brain presumably) may have gradually discovered that your theories are not correct.

To the Church at large I would suggest that—

Utilizing the States Theory so eloquently demonstrated within the last four years, we should stimulate our Bishop's sense of responsibility in his difficult and arduous labors. Increase his power of initiative and genius for decision, without which other gifts of the highest order are measurably useless. Afford him a free hand.

Let us give him all he asks in sympathy and help and call to his aid that higher wisdom which cannot err by remembering him, in constant prayer.

SEND THEM TO THE MARINES.

Mr. Editor: A few weeks ago you kindly printed my appeal for magazines, papers, books and Christmas cards for the men of the United States Marines stationed in Cuba. It is now my privilege to acknowledge the generous response of your readers. I have received about 200 magazines and papers; about the same number of Christmas cards and a few books. One must actually live in a camp like this to realize the need for a constant supply of fresh reading matter. There are 1,100 men in this regiment and they are stationed in five different places. To care for each post adequately hundreds of magazines are needed, and we cannot have too many books, all of which can be sent at small cost by mail from the United States. The burden of this letter therefore is an appeal to your readers to keep up the supply. The great war is happily over, but the Marines are still in Cuba and are likely to remain for an indefinite period. Will those who are now sending magazines and papers kindly note the change of address? It will save delay in delivery.

On the evening of Christmas Day we are planning an entertainment and Christmas tree for the boys at the different posts. We would like to be able to give a packet of American cigarettes to each man. Ordinarily the cost is prohibitive in Cuba, but the quartermaster has arranged to procure them from home. Contributions for this purpose may be sent, together with all reading matter, to CRITICAL.

Mr. Editor:

In your issue of December 7th you say, "We could almost hear the Master say, 'These ye ought to have done, and not to have left the other undone.'" The reference here to Matt. 23:23 seems to show that you regard "the demand made for the country" as a "weightier matter" than the "sums assigned us for the Church's welfare" (including missions.)

Is that your attitude? I am the more impelled to ask it, as in a late issue of the paper, of the five calls upon Christians for money by the Bishop of Virginia, the war is put first and missions last.

BERKELEY MINOR.

South Richmond, Va.

(We cannot understand our correspondent's criticism. We mentioned first the demands made by the country and then those by the Church; just as the Master mentioned first the tithing of garden herbs and then the "weightier matters.") So by quoting His comment we said in effect, "These latter (tauta) we ought to have done, and not to have left the former (ekeina) undone."

Again, the Bishop of Virginia, in numbering the paragraphs of his letter, did not necessarily mean that the objects named were arranged in the order of their intrinsic importance. But if he did, surely the speedy winning of the war was at that moment the first duty laid upon us as a Christian people.—Ed. S. C.)

It is not necessary to cheapen the Church in order to advertise it. The deep seriousness of the Church's message and the vital forces of the soul upon which she calls are things too important and too majestic to be belittled by trivial catch words or by fanciful phrases of popular appeal.

If, however, the Church is not taking advantage of every opportunity which presents itself, of keeping the power of her call, the purpose of her life, and the places of her ministrations constantly before the minds of men, she is neglectful of a great agency which might be adding to and aiding her life of service.—The Church News,

BISHOP FUNSTEN.

Rev. E. Ruffin Jones, of Bruton Parish, Williamsburg.

As one who worked under the late Rt. Rev. James B. Funsten, as teacher, as missionary and as archdeacon, I would pay tribute to his memory.

The year books of the Church in their published statistics bear witness to his labor, but they do not tell of the man, or in the face of what difficulties results were obtained.

Traveling over an extended area of mountain and plain, by rail, by stage coach, and by wagon to mining camp, to Indian reservation and to isolated hamlet, in the face of many discouragements and popular indifference, by the sheer force of his abiding faith, his consecrated life, his persistent optimism, his plain common sense, his uniform cheerfulness and his untiring efforts, he has built upon the mountains of the West a church loyal to apostolic faith and filled with the spirit of the Christ.

His personality was, like a breeze from the hills fresh and vigorous. Genial of disposition, generous of nature, considerate of his helpers, big in body and in heart, of large outlook and larger sympathies, his character combined the high ideals of the East with the generous bigness of the West.

THE JERUSALEM ANGELUS OF WORLD PEACE.

The Rev. Edmund Lee Woodward,
M. D.

"O Jerusalem, that bringeth good tidings, lift up thy voice with strength,"—Isa. 40:9.

It will rest with the Peace Conference at Versailles to determine the place and the official manner of making known to the world the actual moment of peace.

Herald that moment to all the earth first from Jerusalem, through General Allenby or another equally well chosen for the surpassing honor, and the dramatic and historic impress upon the spiritual imagination of the expectant peoples will be profound.

On the eve of the great Peace Conference, men and peoples everywhere, sobered and chastened by common suffering and sacrifice, are imbued not only with a larger consciousness that the fundamental principles of enduring world order and well being are liberty, equality and fraternity, but also with a deeper realization that these principles have their essential unity and power in man's spiritual relationship to God and to his brother man.

Such conviction will find statesmanlike expression at the conference and will govern its issues in so far as they are fruitful of beneficent and lasting results. All true hearts will crave for it recognition as the dominant note at that great moment in history when world peace, based on righteousness and justice, shall be proclaimed.

Every nation and kindred will acclaim that event in such striking fashion as will best appeal to its own spiritual consciousness. But all await expectantly, as the prelude to the civil and religious celebrations within the several nations, some unique and historic heralding of the world event, to witness the spiritual oneness of the race being manifested ever more clearly in the march of ages.

Though practical considerations determine the sessions of the Peace Conference in Europe, considerations of the most exalted sentiment call for its first heralding from Asia, the cradle of the human race, the home of three-fifths of the peoples of the earth, and the birthplace of all the great ethnic religions of mankind. This call is even more insistent for its first heralding from Jerusalem, located near the meeting point of three continents where the tide of contending nations from time immemorial has swept in relentless flood, visiting the devoted city with siege and sack and desolation of countless wars; yes, from Jerusalem, which through thirty centuries of turmoil and strife has enshrined an inextinguishable hope of the better day in her very name, Jerusalem—the City of Peace.

Jerusalem, the holy city, links the common heritage in spiritual idealism of the great monotheistic religions of Mohammedanism, Judaism and Christianity.

The heralding of world peace from Jerusalem will accord with many a sacred tradition that speaks with authority to the heart of the Mohammedan world.

To the Jewish world who can measure its import! What memories of ancient glory it will recall! What fulfillment of prophetic vision it will witness!

"And it shall come to pass in the latter days,
That . . . out of Zion shall go forth the law,
And the word of Jehovah from Jerusalem.
And He will judge between the nations,
And will decide concerning many peoples;
And they shall beat their swords into plowshares,
And their spears into pruninghooks;
Nation shall not lift up sword against nation,
Neither shall they learn war any more."

To the Christian world such heralding would have surpassing meaning. For to the Christian, Jerusalem is the city made holy by the feet of the Son of God and Saviour of the world. Into its gates He rode in prophetic triumph. There He preached the coming of the Kingdom of God on earth. There the supreme tragedy of Gethsemane and Calvary unveiled the power of the Resurrection and the glory of the Ascension. There the Holy Spirit came in fulness to abide with the new-born Church. There the blood of holy Christian martyrs was first shed. There crusading knights, devout pilgrims and saintly hearts have sought the most sacred spot on earth. And there the Apocalyptic vision saw the type of the New Jerusalem which shall be, wherein shall reign forever the Prince of Peace.

In this crisis of ages let Jerusalem first herald the dawn of the new era seen afar by her patriarchs, prophets, apostles and martyrs, and

Proclaim liberty to all the earth,
And to all the inhabitants thereof!

Yea, from Jerusalem let the Angelus of World Peace echo to an eager and listening earth the glad song of the angel hosts once heard on Bethlehem's hills hardby—

Glory to God in the highest,
And on earth peace among men.

A Peace of Jerusalem.

The Rev. Professor Samuel A. Wallis,
D. D.

The Rev. Dr. Edmund Lee Woodward, the rector of Grace Church, The Plains, Va., is a man who sees visions and has power to grasp what these signify.

The deliverance of Jerusalem, the Holy City, by the British Army under General Allenby last December, from the oppressive rule of the Turk, resulting in the glorious freedom which must be theirs forevermore, suggested to him a great thought in connection with the declaration of a just and righteous peace which will follow the conference of the allied powers about to be held at Paris and Versailles. Recalling the words of Isaiah found in the second chapter, "It shall come to pass in the latter days that . . . out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the law from Jerusalem," etc., Dr. Woodward feels that the time has come for acting in accordance with the suggestion of that prophecy. We have passed through an Armageddon, the most tremendous war the world has ever seen, and as Jerusalem is now free, while the peace deliberations must take place at Paris, an arrangement should be made that the declaration of peace should first be proclaimed from Jerusalem. Through the opportunities now afforded by the electric cables, this could be easily accomplished, and this honor be given to the City of the Great King, which was once, and may be again, the joy of the whole earth.

Such an idea as Dr. Woodward has brought to the front in America is pervasive. So far as we know, it has been first proposed in England by the Rt. Rev. George W. Kennion, D. D., Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells, who uses the following inspiring words "Why should not the proposal be made that not in Berlin, not in Paris, not in London, not even (though the share of America in the results of this war is likely to be so remarkable) in New York or Washington should the Articles of Peace be signed, but that the Ratification of Peace should be known significantly as 'The Peace of Jerusalem.' What this might mean for the whole world it is beyond one's power to measure. But such a peace would have a sanctity no other peace could give it, and we might well believe it would bring the world nearer to heaven."

We feel sure that such a striking proposal as this, suggested by Dr. Woodward in this country, and by Bishop Kennion in England, will attract the thought and sentiment of Christian people everywhere, and make the announcement of peace from Jerusalem, an epoch in the history of the world.

RECORDS AND MEMORIALS OF OUR MEN AT WAR.

Secretaries of many of the missionary societies, and Christian leaders whose names are familiar to the public, including the Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman, the Rev. Dr. John Timothy Stone and Bishop Gailor, of Tennessee, report the receipt of letters asking advice about disposition of war records and memorials collected by the churches. If these letters are correct indications, congregations have gone into the matter of collecting records of their members with remarkable thoroughness. Some say they have large portraits of every man enlisting, splendid photographs of going away scenes, and copies of military orders affecting their own boys. To some have been sent, or are pledged to be sent, souvenirs from the front, and especially letters that have been written by French and English people who became acquainted with their men, entertained them in their homes, or visited them while ill, perhaps dying.

These secretaries and ministers admit themselves unable to suggest adequate action, beyond writing in all cases to preserve the records until some common plan develops. All agree that churches must keep war records, and place them where they can be seen by the public of all future time. Advice given so far includes the building of a room, to be known as the "war room," in which records are to be kept. Some cities have canvassed the plan of a building for all records. The subject has just opened up, and there is a chance for some genius to come forward with proposals that may stick, like the service flag and its form. As a rule, tablets on church walls are not favored, neither are expensive and showy monuments.

BISHOP RANDOLPH.

III.

As Theologian and Churchman.

Rev. Randolph H. McKim, D. D.

His attitude toward the Bible was typical of that combination in him of the rational theologian with the inextinguishable champion of the faith once delivered to the saints. The Bible was to him the record of God's revelation to man. It was the Rule of Faith and of Life. Its writers were inspired men. The Creeds were to be believed because they could be surely proved by Holy Scripture. The book was to him the Lamp of Light and Truth and Hope.

The New Testament was "the foundation of inspiration." And yet he saw that the doctrine of the verbal infallibility of the Bible could not be maintained and need not be maintained. He says: "It has invited the greatest and the humblest minds to its pages, opening springs of divine sympathy and lessons for the lives of men and nations, and living waters of spiritual life for the earnest souls." "The conflicts of the past have left the Bible not only unharmed, but have been overruled as a means for widening its circulation and deepening its hold upon mankind." He was, moreover, a friend of the free and unfettered investigation and criticism of the Scriptures. The higher criticism, when reverently and wisely used, was, in his view, an instrument of developing the truth of revelation. But on the other hand, as a Christian scholar, following the light of reason, he wholly rejected the conclusions of that boastful and self-confident criticism which, building on conjecture rather than fact, destroyed the credibility of the Bible as a record of the revelation which God has made to man. In this connection it is interesting to note his discriminating estimate of the "German mind" as a "strange combination of sincerity and candor, with unconscious lack of reverence and the tendency to gravitate to one idea; with ingenuity as distinguished from logical and practical reason." The Bishop agrees with Bishop Lightfoot that "it is impossible to maintain intellectual respect for writers who, upon a subject of such import and dignity as that of Biblical criticism, commit themselves to irreverent and irrational fancies."

I may here call attention to the fact that though an ardent defender of the ecclesiastical principles of the English Reformation, and firmly believing that Episcopacy was surely grounded in Holy Scripture and ancient authors, Bishop Randolph, like Dr. Huntington and Phillips Brooks, did not accept the extreme dogma of Apostolic Succession, and its corollary the exclusive validity of Episcopal Ordination. In his opinion that dogma had no foundation in the New Testament or in the most ancient fathers, and had never been incorporated in the Prayer Book. He saw that it was a fatal bar to Christian unity and that it fostered ecclesiastical and spiritual pride. Like Bishop John Henry Hopkins, he recognized the Evangelical Protestant Communion as Churches of Christ. As to their ministers, this is what he said in a charge to his Diocese in 1908: "They are our brethren, as heralds of the Cross, preaching Christ and ministering the Sacraments which He ordained to carry His Gospel to the ends of the earth."

 As an illustration of his philosophical method, I may point to his way of treating the origin of Mariolatry and Saint Worship. He is not content to show that they have no ground in the New Testament or in the historic faith of the Church, but, noting that they were "coeval with the Docetic Exclusion of human nature from the Person of Christ," he sees in them "pathetic efforts of the Christian consciousness to supply the vacant throne of the human Saviour."

My attempt to present to you a portrait of Bishop Randolph would be inexcusably inadequate if I failed to point out that through his whole ministry of sixty years he stood forth as an exponent and defender of the English Reformation, and as an uncompromising opponent of any and every attempt to shake the Church from her Protestant moorings.

He presents as noble a picture of the Reformation as I remember to have seen. "By the Reformation the doors of the close corporation of the ecclesiastical organism were broken down. Thought and religion were left free to the open air, and reason and faith resumed their functions in the act and responsibility of belief. The family and the State reasserted themselves as divine institutions, and not the creatures of the Church. The Reformation was a return to the ideas of the New Testament, which had been practically suppressed by the abnormal growth of external authority in the mediaeval forms of Christianity. It placed history on a new basis. It amounted practically to a re-proclamation of great Christian ideas; the essential spiritual equality of men in their equal nearness to God; the single mediatorship of Christ between God and man; the truth that there is nothing common or unclean in human life, or nature, as God ordained it."

Nevertheless, Bishop Randolph did not attribute perfection or finality to the Reformation. He realized its limitations. He saw its failures. But, after all, he was a Protestant, and he held it a sacred duty to defend the Protestant character of the Church of which he was a minister. He was a lover of peace, but he loved truth yet more. Far from condemning controversy, he believed, with Phillips Brooks, that controversy conducted in the right spirit is one of the noblest occupations of the human mind. And so in all the great controversies in which the Protestant truth was involved, from the time of John Henry Newman to this day, he bore a brave part. As to the Oxford Movement, he saw that it involved both doctrinal and ritual novelties that fatally disturb our peace. As to the mediaeval ritual, which came in like a flood a generation or more ago, he set his face against it as the enemy of spiritual religion. As to the bringing back of the Mass into our Sanctuaries, and the Reservation of the Sacrament, and Eucharistic Adoration, and Fasting Communion, and Auricular Confession, and Invocation of Saints, and the doctrine of Purgatory, he repudiated them all with indignation as disloyal attempts to restore the mediaeval sacerdotalism which had been definitely cast out at the Reformation.

 Do you realize the force of this clear fact in Bishop Randolph's life? Here is no shallow partisan, no mere fiery zealot, battling for the Protestant character of this Church. No, but a profound thinker—a disciple of reason and Scripture—a student of history—a careful investigator—a man who looked into the causes of things—one who understood human nature—a man of moderation and tolerance—a man who loved peace. And yet during all his long life he consistently opposed every movement which had any tendency to bring back the system of mediaeval doctrine and ritual which the English Church cast out at the Reformation.

What a record our noble Bishop has left! Two and eighty years in which the pure light of his Christian life has never ceased to shine! Sixty years during which he has in simplicity and godly sincerity preached the everlasting Gospel! Sixty years of strong and faithful testimony of the Revelation of God's Love and Grace in Jesus Christ! Sixty years of brave and stalwart championship of the truth of Holy Scripture against the errors and perversions of men! He stands before us the very embodiment of a knightly soul, clad in the armor of righteousness, loyal to every truth of God, yet the dauntless defender of every right of man which reason and conscience may justly claim. A man of most winning personality, whose gifts and attainments are consecrated to God; a great preacher, yet always the lowly messenger of God; a rational theologian, yet the foe of Rationalism; reverently accepting the inspiration of the Bible, yet rejecting its verbal infallibility; a disciple of the Reformation, yet repudiating its excesses and recognizing its limitations; a defender of the Catholic Creeds, yet refusing the yoke of ecclesiastical authority; a loyal son of the Church, yet the champion of liberty; contending earnestly for the Faith once delivered, yet vindicating freedom of thought—such, as I see him, was the Great Bishop of Southern Virginia.

CONSOLIDATION OR REMOVAL OF DOWN-TOWN CHURCHES: A BETTER WAY.

Eugene M. Camp.

The management of properties devoted to Christian uses in down-town districts of great cities is a delicate task. It is also important. In New York City, in the Madison and Union Squares and lower Fifth Avenue part of Manhattan Island, three once-famous Presbyterian churches have gone out of existence within the past few months, and from the foundation of one of them has arisen one Presbyterian church, with property and endowment of $4,000,000. It is now seeking to induce the Rev. Dr. John Timothy Stone, of Chicago, to quit that city and come to New York as pastor. The name of the new church is the First Presbyterian. There was an Old First, but it is dead. The new First is new.

In the district ministered to by the three former Presbyterian churches, appealing to the same people, are Ascension, Calvary, Grace, Holy Communion, St. George's and Transfiguration Episcopal parishes and Trinity Chapel, not to mention St. Esprit, the French church, and St. Mark's, which appeals in part to the same field and people. Two questions arise:

1. If this Presbyterian consolidation, and the attempt to make one big church, is unwise, why did Presbyterians do it?

2. If it is wise, why don't Episcopal parishes consolidate? If not all of them, then some of them?

One of the above Presbyterian churches, the Madison Square, of which the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst was for several decades the pastor, occupied one of the best sites in all America from which to reach people. It fronted Madison Square, around which are fifty times as many people, perhaps a hundred times, as when Madison Square was the center of beautiful residences of influential New York. Lines of transportation from upper Manhattan, from Brooklyn, are ideal—rapid and near. The plant was new, its appointments perfect. It is sold and is to become an amusement center for an insurance company.

A high Church makes a low man, and a low Church makes a high man. These are laws which Presbyterians and some other people have never learned. Reckon land and building consecrated to God as belonging to God, and teach children the sacredness, the inviolability of God's ownership, and when those children come to maturity, possess resources, and are asked to help God keep His possessions, they respond. More than that, they protect. Teach, on the other hand, that property is merely dedicated, that the Church is a spiritual entity and no more, the Church as an institution is regarded as so low that it is told to go where it can exist if it find it cannot exist where it is. And it goes. A high and inviolate visible Church is much to a low man. A low and simply convenient Church is little to a high man.

The three Presbyterian churches in the Madison Square district retained their pastors for many, many years. Two of them outlived their usefulness years and years before they resigned and were pensioned on $8,000 a year each. The third was not pastor so long, but his work was the same. One of the three was honored as few men in New York are for his personal worth, and for his tremendous service to city, to Foreign Missions, to the poor of the lower West Side. He quitted his pastorate to the regret of many, and left a work in far better shape than those of the other two. The latter were mere shells. The weakest of the five Episcopal churches in the district is several times stronger in work, in plans, in leadership, in service, than the two together.

Relatively, small churches are more effective than large ones. But small or large, it is essential that parishes, like business houses, have virile leadership, scientific management, and, above all, life, touch with folks, open doors. Churchmen do not need to be reminded of the records of Ascension, Calvary, Holy Communion, Grace, St. George's, Transfiguration and Trinity Chapel.

The French Church is in a class by itself because of language, and St. Mark's was never more alive.

Consolidations of churches do not consolidate. Properties are put together, but people are not. And properties do not make parishes. If studies of conditions obtaining in Boston, in Philadelphia and for many years in lower New York and in Brooklyn count as guide or point any lesson, the Presbyterians in New York have made a mistake. As a religious body they have crippled themselves in such way as years will not make good. It is not wise for Episcopal parishes to follow their example. The proper course is to work all existing plants to the utmost, and to work them by and for the people of their communities, all forms, all places, all ways. If hard lines fall to any of them, which lines do not appear as yet, then the remedy is to hold on because they "never learned how to retreat."

The problem of the management of Church properties in relation to a city's squeeze in the shape of high land values and changes of population, is important beyond present conception of Christian leaders. Episcopal Church management, while far from perfect, is the best yet devised. Therefore, for the sake of God and New York, and not to exploit the Episcopal Church, let it go without delay into the fields abandoned by these Presbyterians, at least by searching out the people who are still in them in larger numbers than ever before.

The Great Commission

THE SAN JUAN INDIAN MISSION IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. Editor:

A circular letter from our Indian Mission near Farmington, to people in New Mexico, is, as I feel, worthy of wider notice. I therefore make extracts from said letter:

"Let us of this Missionary District of New Mexico be reminded of the helpless, pitiable condition of the Navajo Indians within our borders, who dwell as strangers in a country that was once all their own, subjugated, broken in spirit, existing miserably here and there, on a barren reservation with no hope that their country will ever be restored to them."

"Recently the dreadful scourge of influenza swept over the reservation, carrying death and desolation to unknown numbers of Navajos, and the end is not yet. Surely the Church will rejoice to know that the San Juan Indian Mission-Hospital has been a refuge to many of those stricken, and that through the ministrations of the staff the lives of no fewer than twenty-seven Navajos were saved. They came, the sick and the well, young and old, long distances, in desperate haste to reach the mission, knowing that no other place would be opened to receive them. All the sick were taken in, even though some had to be made as comfortable as possible in tents, and others had to be placed on the floor of the wards."

"Thirty-two patients have been cared for on the place since the 20th of October, and still they come. Medicines and directions for the care of the sick in their hogans were given out to more than we could number during those busy days. The dead were buried from the mission, the sorrowing given some small comfort, and the hungry fed. The experiences gone through on those worst days will pass into the mission history."

"Here Navajos no longer question why we are here. The mission is to them 'the medicine house,' the missionaries their good friends sent by 'a god in the East' to heal and to teach them."

The Superintendent of the Navajo Mission then goes on to say: "The work has already outgrown our facilities and resources. Our present income is no longer adequate to its support. If we are to labor on, we must have help, and the help must come quickly."

The Spirit of Missions for November contains an article by Bishop Howden on the work in New Mexico, including this work among Indians. The Navajos are now the largest Indian tribe in the United States, about 13,000 of whom are in New Mexico. Difficulties in reaching them are many. But the need is great. As Bishop Howden has said: "To bind their wounds, heal their sicknesses and show by deeds of kindness the Christian gospel in action offers the surest way for bringing them to a knowledge of the Christ."

D. A. SANFORD.

One very practical way of doing two good deeds at one time is to send subscriptions to the Spirit of Missions as Christmas presents. In this way your Christmas gifts will last the whole year, and at the same time you will be materially helping the cause of missions and establishing one more point of contact between the Church at home and our 2,800 missionaries scattered in all parts of the world. A subscription costs only $1 a year.

An attractive Christmas card will be sent just before Christmas in your name stating that the magazine will come for twelve months with your greetings. Address the Spirit of Missions, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Church Intelligence

Closing the Treasurer's Books: Notice From Mr. King.

To the Editor of Southern Churchman:

May I briefly encroach on your valuable space in order to say to all contributors to the missionary work of the Church, through the Board of Missions, that the books of the Treasurer will be closed for the year on the evening of December 31, 1918. We will be glad, however, and will take pleasure in doing so, to give credit, on this year's business, for all remittances received after December 31st, provided their envelopes bear the post-office mark of December 31st or of an earlier date.

GEORGE GORDON KING,
Treasurer.

The Church Pension Fund.

After the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Church Pension Fund, on November 26, 1918, the grants in force by the fund to the clergy and their families are exhibited by the following table:

Age pensions.....	$ 60,573.06
Disability pensions.....	24,500.00
Widows' pensions.....	23,450.00
Orphans' pensions.....	3,700.00
Total	$112,223.06

General Clergy Relief Fund grants assumed..... 111,877.00 Diocesan Fund grants assumed 52,015.00

Grand total.....$276,115.06

The number of widows' pensions granted at the October and November meetings was unusually large, owing to the fact that a number of clergy succumbed to the influenza epidemic and the pneumonia which so frequently followed it. One of the cases was of exceptional pathos. A young and vigorous clergyman in a diocese of the Province of Washington died suddenly, leaving a widow and four children under the age of seven. Pensions were immediately granted to them and eventually this pension will amount to $900 per year, which, while not large, will be of material assistance in a growing family.

Bishop Johnson and the Temperance Society's Call.

My Dear Bishop Courtney:

I have been disappointed that my name does not appear among the list of bishops approving the call of the Church Temperance Society and the request that Sunday, November 24th, be especially used throughout the Church to call attention to the urgency of the liquor traffic reform. I signed the letter promptly when it was received by me, and forwarded it to your office. I should not like to be classed among those who feel that it isn't worth while for the Church to speak "out loud" in this matter.

Yours faithfully,

FREDERICK F. JOHNSON,
Bishop Coadjutor of Missouri.
St. Louis, Mo., Nov. 25, 1918.

Meeting of Central Council of G. F. S.

The Central Council of the Girls' Friendly Society in America held its thirty-second annual meeting in New York City on November 20 and 21. Although, owing to the epidemic in October, there was a postponed meeting, the attendance was larger than the average. Officers and representatives of the society were present from Los Angeles, California, Michigan, as well as from other nearby dioceses. The Corporate Communion of the society was held in the Church of the Epiphany on Wednesday morning with Bishop Courtney as celebrant. Bishop Burch opened the Council with prayers and address of welcome.

The society in general has lost by death many valued associates during the year, and letters of sympathy were sent to the families of Mrs. Townsend, the foundress of the society in England; Mrs. Martin, President of the Canadian G. F. S.; Miss Mary Benson, a life member of the American Council; Miss Niebuhr, Miss Houston and Mrs. George Lindsley Burr.

Subjects of importance were freely discussed at the meetings, and in some instances decisive action taken. In adopting a new Constitution, members may now be given a vote in Diocesan Councils, and if the Diocese so orders, the vote is not limited to communicants of the Church. A change in Central Rule 111 was proposed. This subject is so vital to the work of the organization that no vote was cast upon it at this time. The society will consider it in all its hearings for one year when the matter will again be presented and voted upon. Biennial instead of annual meetings will now be held and Provincial Conferences are ordered. Great interest was shown in the work accomplished through the War Emergency Committee, with Mrs. Harold Browne, of Newport, Chairman. The officers were, with two exceptions, re-elected. Miss F. W. Sibley, of Detroit, is again President. It is a matter of regret that the vice-presidents of the Second and Fifth Provinces, Miss Marshall and Mrs. Gregory, were unable to continue in office.

The meetings were held in the parish rooms of the Church of the Epiphany. Luncheons and teas were served in the New York Diocesan office and the Epiphany Church rooms. Mrs. George A. Helme gave a reception in her home to the Central Council and all visiting and Diocesan associates. Miss Hadley, President of the New York organization, gave a dinner to the Executive Committee, G. F. S. A., at the City Club.

Armenian and Syrian Relief.

Nation-wide Drive for $30,000,000 January 12-19.

Last April the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief projected a nation-wide campaign for the dates of November 23-30, 1918, for the purpose of securing adequate funds to meet the winter's relief requirements.

These dates were determined upon in conference with Y. M. C. A. leaders and other officials and were chosen for the purpose of avoiding conflict with the other financial campaigns at that time scheduled for the early autumn.

Later developments and enlargements of the United War Work Campaign for the later dates of November 11-19 resulted in a resolution by the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief.

1. To postpone the Armenian-Syrian Relief Campaign and give all possible assistance to the United War Work Campaign.

2. To realign the Relief Campaign for the dates of January 12-19 in order to secure the fullest possible cooperation of the national organizations, committees and workers engaged in the War Work Campaign.

The figures show a destitute refugee body of nearly four millions within the field of operation of this committee, of whom at least 935,000 are within reach of our agents.

At least 400,000 of the accessible destitute are children without fathers, and many of them without mothers.

The committee has taken as a basis, minimum costs as reported by our distributors and others personally acquainted with local conditions in the areas of destitution. The largest possible allowance has also been made for the development of self-support through industrial relief. The minimum budget with which to meet the most urgent needs of the winter and early spring, by the most conservative computation, amounts to $30,000,000.

The closing day of the campaign, January 19, by the old Gregorian calendar is Christmas Day, as observed by the Armenians and the Eastern Church. The funds will be at once cabled as America's Christmas gift to the widows, orphans and destitute of Bible lands.

All printing, postage and administrative expenses, even the cost of cabling the money, are met privately without deductions from contributions. Address 1 Madison Avenue, New York.

Work Among the Deaf.

The closing of the churches during the influenza epidemic affected the Church's work among the deaf, like all other Church activities. The Rev. H. C. Merrill, missionary to the deaf in Washington, D. C., and the Virginias, was unable to hold any services in October after the first Sunday in the month because of the ban. However, he made an extended trip through his field during the month to visit the people. Quite a number of the deaf and their families were victims of the disease, and there were several deaths. With the reopening of the churches in November services were resumed, and since then the missionary has been endeavoring to make up for lost time.

The schools for the deaf at Staunton, Va., Romney, W. Va., and Newport News, Va., have been visited and talks given to the pupils. The Romney school was hard hit by the influenza epidemic, 180 pupils being ill at one time, and three deaths occurring, but the other two schools had no cases of the disease.

The missionary has been fortunate in securing the assistance of a student of Gallaudet Collège as lay-reader in Washington, D. C., which permits of services being held every Sunday, instead of every other Sunday, as for some time past, on account of the missionary's necessary absences from home. Now the lay-reader takes the services during his absence, and the good effects of the change are already noticeable.

Rev. Mr. Merrill enrolled as a "four-minute man" with the United States Office of Public Information. Although, of course, he cannot give talks in theatres and other large public gatherings, he has given short talks to the deaf on various subjects of national interest whenever opportunity offers.

Those who knew the late Rev. Austin W. Mann, pioneer missionary among the deaf, will doubtless be pleased to know that his widow, who had been seriously ill for a long time, has in large measure regained her health. She is now in Florida, to escape the rigors of the winter in the North.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. R. A. Gibson, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Coadjutor.

Burial of Bishop Funsten.

The funeral services of the late Rt. Rev. James B. Funsten, D. D., Bishop of Idaho, were held in St. Michael's Cathedral, Boise, on Wednesday, December 4th. The remains were brought to Richmond, accompanied by the Rev. Alwald Chamberlaine, Dean of the Cathedral, and the Bishop's family. Arriving in Richmond on Sunday night, the body was taken to St. James Church, and on Monday morning a short service was held in the church, conducted by Bishop Gibson, Bishop Beverley D. Tucker, of Southern Virginia, and Bishop-Coadjutor Brown, assisted by Dean Chamberlaine. Interment was made in Hollywood Cemetery. The clergy of Richmond, representatives of the vestry of Christ Church, of which Bishop Funsten was sometime rector, and other personal friends, served as pallbearers, active or honorary.

The Every Member Canvass.

The Every Member Canvass in the various Richmond churches was reduced to a state of uniformity this year by the action of the Richmond

Clericus in deciding to have it in every church in the city on the second Sunday in Advent. The advantage of this plan is that it gave an opportunity to instruct the canvassers, and arouse a wide interest in every congregation. A committee of the Clericus secured the services of the Rev. Dr. Robert W. Patton, who held a special service for the canvassers on Advent Sunday, and arranged a number of missionary conferences in one of the large churches throughout the week, so that people's minds were directed to things of the Lord, and the canvassers were relieved of making explanations. The results from this method are not yet ascertained, but the feeling is unanimous among the Episcopalians of Richmond that the plan will accomplish far more than has ever been achieved heretofore.

The Rev. G. Peyton Craighill, rector of Epiphany Church, Barton Heights, Richmond, has resigned to accept a call to St. James Church, Leesburg, and expects to take charge about the middle of January.

The Bishop visited St. Mary's Church, Goochland county, on Sunday morning, December 8th, and confirmed a class of four presented by the Rev. Dr. Lacy.

ASHEVILLE.

Rt. Rev. J. M. Horner, D. D., Bishop.

The Valle Crucis Industrial School.

A committee of ladies has been organized in the Dioceses of South Carolina, North Carolina and the District of Asheville to raise a sum of several thousand dollars to meet a pressing emergency to enable the school to continue its good work, and also to secure funds for its regular support until the income from its industries shall make such additional help unnecessary. The school has a property valued at about $65,000, and about one hundred and twenty-five boys and girls from the Southern Appalachian Mountains are being educated there. It is under the control of a Board of Trustees of which Bishop Horner is President, who will furnish any information desired. Contributions are solicited, and should be sent to Mrs. F. P. Bacon, Treasurer, Tyron, N. C.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

Drive to Pay Off Mortgage and Increase Endowment.

Something like twenty years ago the Parish of the Ascension, Washington, D. C., was forced to execute a mortgage for $20,000 on the church property for the payment of the accumulated indebtedness, although the church had been fully paid for and consecrated.

Last June, at the suggestion of the rector, Rev. J. Henning Nelms, D. D., a drive was inaugurated to raise enough money to pay off the unpaid balance of the mortgage amounting to $10,000 and to increase the endowment to $20,000 so that the income from that fund might be used for current expenses. Dr. J. K. Haywood, a layman of the parish, undertook the task. The effort has met with great success. Something over $18,000 has been already pledged, although the drive was pushed during the months of June and July only. Since then it has been in abeyance for patriotic reasons, namely, the Liberty Bond and War Work Drives.

The canvass will begin again at once, and as not more than half the members of the parish have been asked to contribute, those having made the canvass feel safe in saying that the full amount asked for, namely, $30,000, will be obtained. The contributors to the drive belonged to all denominations, creeds and shades of religion. About one-third of the five hundred persons who have pledged are people who have no connection with the parish, but who believe that the work being done here is worth while.

Grace Church: A "drive" is being made to raise the debt of $3,350 on Grace Episcopal Church, Ninth and D Streets Southwest.

Grace Church is one of the oldest parishes in the city, and has taken on new life during the rectorship of the Rev. Meade Bolton MacBryde. Improvements to the church property have been made, and the list of communicants has about doubled.

WYOMING.

Rt. Rev. Nat. S. Thomas, D. D., Bishop

The churches in Wyoming have suffered severely from influenza, but have rendered noble service in this time of affliction. The quarantine still exists in many portions of the State. The clergy are working valiantly to relieve conditions in their communities. Several of our missionaries have suffered from this pestilence, but we are thankful to God that they have been spared to us.

The Rev. Hiram Reese Bullis died in Santa Monica, Cal., on Wednesday morning, November 20. With his death there passes from our midst one of the few clergy of whom it may be said that he passed his entire ministry in the missionary field. Mr. Bullis served as missionary and Archdeacon to Western Colorado until ten years ago, when he came to Wyoming as missionary in charge of St. Paul's Church, Evanston, where he rendered most faithful and earnest service until his failing health necessitated his removal to California. Mr. Bullis, however, retained his canonical connection with the Missionary District of Wyoming. He served as the Secretary of Convocation for several years, and was most active in the work of the district. A host of friends mourn the loss of this devoted and saintly servant of the Church.

Rural Parish formed: On November 1 a great step toward self-support was taken in the creation of the Rural Parish of Park County, composed of Christ Church, Cody; St. Andrew's, Meeteetse; and St. John's, Powell, under the rectorship of the Rev. Alan R. Chalmers. In his convocation address in June the Bishop outlined the plan he had in mind for the formation of rural parishes throughout the district. The idea was taken up and vigorously prosecuted in Park County, with the result that three mission stations have been combined in such a way as to take upon themselves the whole burden of their maintenance, including the rector's stipend, traveling expenses, apportionment, and all other charges. The relief to central funds has been very great and the stimulus given to local endeavor is beyond measure. It is hoped that another such parish may be developed in the near future, in close proximity to that of Park County.

St. John's Hospital, Jackson, is the fortunate recipient of a gift of ten thousand dollars, through the good offices of Dr. C. W. Huff. The giver of this fine contribution desires to remain unknown, but he has been tendered the sincere thanks of the community which he has so greatly benefitted. The sum is to be used in the enlargement of the building, the installation of steam heat, and general additions to the equipment.

The sympathy of the district goes out to Mr. John Hay and his family, of Rock Springs, in the loss of his son, Archie Hay, who was killed in action in France early in October. Mr. Hay is the District Treasurer and is very prominent in all works of the Church. Archie Hay was a communicant of the Church of the Holy Communion, Rock Springs, a young man of sterling character, and an inspiration to all who knew him.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. David H. Greer, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. C. S. Burch, D. D., Suffragan.

Churches and the Liberty Loans.

The Liberty Loan Committee of the Second Federal Reserve District, speaking, it is understood, for all committees, has issued a statement addressed to churches and church officers, setting forth what the committee calls the splendid services rendered by churches in the Fourth Liberty Loan. The statement points out that the work of churches was not to sell bonds, but to help create a morale that would result in such sale, and to spread information concerning the needs for money, and aims of the war. The committee states that ministers made many valuable suggestions, which it acted on, and that these suggestions, put into tangible form, were made the basis of many appeals which bishops and other officials sent out in endorsing appeals.

The committee acknowledges help from the churches in opening their pulpits and societies to the Bishop of Birmingham, the Bishop of Oxford and the president of the National Free Church Council of England and Wales. The committee professes to believe that the co-operation of churches, Protestant, Catholic and Jew, in promoting the Liberty Loan helped forward in some considerable measure the efforts toward Christian union. In single reserve districts as many as 12,000 ministers and church workers were engaged.

Adeste Fideles, a mystery play that wonderfully tells the Christmas story, has been written for St. Faith's Sunday School by Marie E. J. Hobart, author of St. Agnes Mystery Plays. The children are busily rehearsing the play, which is to be given at Synod House on Saturday, December 21st, at 4 o'clock. The mystery makes the beauty and wonder of the coming of the Christ Child very real to the girls and boys taking part in it, as well as to the audience. On December 21st the audience will consist mostly of children, for St. Faith's Sunday School has invited its neighbors, and members of St. Michael's, All Soul's, the Sheltering Arms and St. Mary's Sunday Schools are expected to fill Synod House.

LOUISIANA.

Rt. Rev. Davis Sessums, D. D., Bishop.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew: Annual Meeting of the Diocesan Assembly.

The annual meeting of the Diocesan Assembly of Louisiana of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew was held on St. Andrew's Day, November 30th, in the parish house of St. Paul's Church, New Orleans. An excellent supper was served by the ladies of the parish, after which the meeting was called to order by President George M. Rogers. The President read his report showing that the various chapters in the city had undertaken work amongst the soldiers and sailors at the camps and naval stations near the city throughout the year, giving entertainments and assisting in religious services on the third Sundays in each month. The chapters, through donations from members of the various parishes, had succeeded in raising sufficient money to purchase a Saxon touring car, which is to be used for Brotherhood work in the State, and especially at the present time by Mr. Edward A. Shields, Camp Secretary of the Brotherhood at Camp Beauregard, near Alexandria. Reports from the various chapters represented showed that they had been active throughout the year. After the transaction of business the meeting was addressed by Lieutenant Commander Chase, of the Algiers Naval Station. He related his experience in the transport service of the country conveying troops to France, and showed the great part this country had in the late war. Admiral Milton, of the Algiers Naval Station, was also present, and related some of his experiences in the service of his country.

The election of officers for the ensuing year took place, resulting in the following being elected:

President, Mr. George M. Rogers; Vice-President, Mr. B. N. Davis; Treasurer, Mr. George W. Leland; Secretary, Mr. Charles Dorhauer; Honorary Chaplain, Rev. A. Gordon Bakewell; Chaplain, Rev. Menard Doswell, Jr.

There were thirty-three persons present and a most enjoyable evening was spent. An unanimous vote of thanks was given to the ladies of St. Paul's Church for their gracious hospitality, and regret expressed that the Rev. Alfred R. Berkeley, rector of St. Paul's, was unable to be present on account of a death in the family.

Mr. William J. Montgomery, for many years a vestryman of Trinity Parish, New Orleans, entered life eternal on Wednesday, November 6th. Mr. Montgomery, when he retired last April, had served on the vestry for twenty-four years, a service marked by loyalty and devotion to the parish. For the greater part of the time he was a member of the Building Committee, and was helpful in the building of the parish house and the new rectory, and in the renovation of the interior of the church.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. W. L. Gravatt, D. D., Bishop.

The Rev. Jacob Brittingham, D. D., rector of St. Luke's Church, Wheeling, is at present in the Ohio Valley General Hospital, where he has undergone a very trying and delicate operation. Dr. Brittingham's condition was considered so serious that his physicians deemed necessary to act promptly. The operation was successfully performed, and Dr. Brittingham's many friends will be glad to learn that his condition is considered satisfactory. He is improving steadily and, so far, indications are that he will soon be convalescent.

The Rev. Robert E. L. Strider, rector of St. Matthew's Church, Wheeling, is now quite well, after having been in the hospital sick with influenza for the better part of two weeks.

The services on Thanksgiving Day were fairly well attended at all the three Wheeling churches, considering the inclement weather, rain fell heavily during the morning. The usual offering for Sheltering Arms was taken. The Rev. J. Logan Fish, rector of St. Andrew's Church, held early service, and delivered an address on Thanksgiving at St. Luke's at a later service, Dr. Brittingham being unable to be present.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. C. Whitehead, D. D., Bishop.

The Rev. Dr. Floyd W. Tomkins, rector of Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia, visited Pittsburgh on Monday morning, December 2d, and spoke to a body of three hundred ministers, making up the Pittsburgh Ministerial Union, on the subject of "Evangelism." This Union is reputed to be one of the largest in the country, and meets the first Monday of every two months. Dr. Tomkins' address, which treated the subject in a most practical and able manner, created a profound impression.

NEW JERSEY.

Rt. Rev. Paul Matthews, D. D., Bishop

Services at the Woodbury Bag Loading Plant.

The Rev. H. E. Thompson, of Woodbury, has continued since the beginning of September to hold semi-monthly services at the above named plant. The services, held in the large cafeteria, have been attended by officials of the plant and many others. The choir of St. Luke's Parish, Westville, have assisted in the services. The offering at the first service was given to diocesan missions.

Besides the services, the "voluntary chaplain" has done systematic visiting at the twelve dormitories of the Women's Welfare Department, in which have been domiciled over seven hundred women.

Since the ending of the war the operations and personnel of the plant have been much reduced; but some more permanent occupancy is expected; and it is well that the Church has a foothold there. No other religious services have been regularly maintained.

Woman's Auxiliary Meeting.

The Lower Division, New Jersey Branch of the Woman's Auxiliary, recently held its autumn meeting in St. Andrew's Church, Mt. Holly, the Rev. Henry Teller Cocke, rector. The Bishop and the Archdeacon of the Diocese were present. The theme of the day was the "Advent Call," upon which addresses were made by the Bishop, Mrs. Matthews, the Chairman of the Devotional Committee, and Mrs. Biller. Archdeacon Shepherd told of mission work in the Diocese, emphasizing the importance of the Archdeacon's Extension Fund for meeting the expense of insurance and repairs in different missions.

The Rev. C. W. Twing told of his work in the Pines; and reports were made by the heads of the several departments.

Grace Church, Elizabeth, has paid all its indebtedness, increased the rector's salary, and begun the accumulation of a Reserve Emergency Fund. The following memorials have been received: An altar in memory of the sixty Grace Church boys who are in army or navy service; a Bishop's chair in memory of Mrs. Eva Clynch; a priest's chair given by Mrs. Sarah Hunter in memory of her parents; a processional cross, the gift of Mrs. Kileby.

St. Thomas' Church, Glassboro, has received from members of the Whitney family a gift of $500, which suffices to pay the old indebtedness.

St. Barnabas' Church, Sand Hills, is bequeathed $700 under the will of Miss Caroline Nevins.

St. George's Church and Club at Camp Dix, under the Rev. Karl M. Block, assisted by other resident and some neighboring clergy, met heroically and effectively the especially severe visitation of the epidemic.

NEWARK.

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor.

The Diocesan Church Club held a remarkable meeting at the end of November, having invited all the officers of the parishes of the Diocese. There are about one thousand such officers, and several hundreds of them came, representing all parts of the Diocese—mission churches and parishes alike. A very interesting address on the history and duties of wardens and vestrymen was made by Mr. Frank L. Crawford, of Summit. Dean Dumper spoke of the plans which are being carried out to present the calling of the ministry to young men. Bishop Stearly explained the plans which are now being made to bring all the lower salaries of the clergy in the Diocese up to the average of those in active service, which has been found to be $1,964. It has been found that of one hundred and twenty-seven clergy in active duty, twenty-one receive less than $1,200, twenty-six receive between $1,200 and $1,500, thirty-five between $1,500 and $2,000, twenty-two between $2,000 and $3,000, eleven between $3,000 and $4,000, twelve $4,000 or more. Among those receiving the lower salaries some are not giving their whole time to their parish work. Where the clergy have rectories a proper rental value is included in the salaries named. It would cost about $14,000 per year for the Diocese to carry out this plan, and it may not be fully worked out at once.

Trinity Cathedral: Very important improvements have been made at Trinity Cathedral, Newark, with a new marble pavement laid, a reredos and chancel changes in progress, most of them memorials. The taking of Trinity Church as the cathedral with the Rev. Arthur Dumper as dean and rector has given great satisfaction to the Diocese and people of the parish, and the response to the dean's first year's work in the Mother Church in the Diocese has been remarkable.

The Rev. Charles H. Wells has just kept his tenth anniversary as rector of St. Andrew's, Newark, and the people took the opportunity to subscribe money to pay for more than half of the debt of $14,000 which was resting upon the church. There is no more encouraging part of the recent history of the Diocese than the development of St. Andrew's under Mr. Wells from

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

IS IT A COINCIDENCE OR A MESSAGE?

We all know that hostilities in the world conflict ceased at 11 A. M. on November 11th, but perhaps we have not all paused to consider that the last shots were fired and that peace settled over the far-flung battle line at the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month in the year.

This fact was brought to the writer's attention in a somewhat unusual way. He is in the habit of asking members of his congregations to suggest sermon subjects or texts which they would like him to discuss or preach from.

Being a city missionary, he has some twenty-five or thirty different congregations of all classes and stations in life, and with widely varying church affiliations and some very unusual suggestions are often made.

One lady said, peremptorily: "The war ended on the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month, and I want you to preach to us next time you come from the eleventh verse of the eleventh chapter of the eleventh book of the Bible. I don't know what book that will be, but you look it up and preach to us from that verse."

With considerable trepidation the text was hunted up. The eleventh book of the sacred volume is the first book of Kings, and in the eleventh verse of the eleventh chapter we find these startling words:

"Wherefore the Lord said unto Solomon, Forasmuch as this is done of thee, and thou hast not kept my covenant and my statutes which I have commanded thee, I will surely rend the kingdom from thee and will give it to thy servant."

Could any verse in the whole Bible be more appropriate or better describe what the signing of that armistice meant for those 285 members of German royal families from whom their "kingdoms have been rended" and given to their servants.

Think how this verse coincides with that splendid song of victory by Thomas Curtis Clark and recently published in the Living Church, the middle verse of which runs like this:

God shakes all thrones and jeweled crowns are falling,
"To serve! To serve!" is the clear cry calling,

The hosts of earth are now set free, —
"Tis the dawn—the dawn of liberty."

But this is no time for us ordinary folk to sit back complacently with folded hands and think how extraordinarily this verse of eleven applies to the Kaiser and his ilk.

Every one of us humble individuals is a monarch, too. We are the sovereigns of our own lives. Certain opportunities are given us to be used for God's purposes, and if we do not keep His commandments and His statutes, surely that kingdom of our opportunities will surely be rended from us.

"To serve! To serve!" is the clear cry calling, and if we do not avail ourselves of every occasion of service we may rest assured that God will have the right to feel that we deliberately neglected to heed this message that he sends to us in such a striking manner.

ST. PAUL AND ST. PETER STANDING SHOULDER TO SHOULDER.

St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church and St. Peter's Roman Catholic Church stand upon different sides of the same street, in one of our great Southern cities, almost opposite each other, and there they have stood for some forty or fifty years—stood and scowled across the street at each other and had no more to do with each other than if one had been a Mohammedan mosque and the other a Jewish synagogue.

Then came the Spanish influenza, and St. Paul's and St. Peter's realized that after all they were both Christian saints and they moved up together and stood shoulder to shoulder to withstand the ravages of sickness and want and hunger.

This is the way that they did it: The ladies of St. Paul's Church looked around to see what was the greatest need in the stricken community which they could fill, and they decided that the best thing would be to make and distribute soup in large quantities, and so they proceeded to do it, and for weeks St. Paul's Parish House wreaked with the most appetizing, soupy odors, and gallons of the savory mixture went out to disabled homes.

In the meantime the ladies of St. Peter's congregation were not idle. They, too, "had viewed the landscape o'er" and had decided that they were best equipped for making bread, and they went at it with Christian enthusiasm, and they realized that "man does not live by bread alone," so when a loaf of bread was given at St. Peter's the messenger to whom it was delivered was sent across the street to St. Paul's and a jar of Episcopalian soup went along with that Roman Catholic bread to cheer and comfort some desolate home and bring to it the remembrance of the way that the Master, of whom all these soup and bread-makers were the followers, had fed the hungry upon the mount in Galilee.

Thus did St. Peter and St. Paul stand shoulder to shoulder, and when the doors of their buildings were closed to their worshippers they practiced that Christianity, which for the time they could not hear preached, and who shall say that those two sturdy saints did not smile in satisfaction as they watched the Master's children following in His footsteps?

We believe that "the communion of saints," belief in which is so frequently rehearsed in these two churches, will mean more to these two congregations than it ever has before, because they have really experienced it.

Why should it be necessary to be visited by some great calamity to force our Christian people together? Why can we not act like that in ordinary times and under normal conditions? Perhaps we shall hereafter. Anyway in this instance when the pulpits were closed the hearts of the people were opened and the love of God displayed through care for His children flowed in.

THE SITUATION IN A NUTSHELL.

The ensuing article gives such a clear and concise presentation of the present status of prohibition legislation that we take it in full from "Temperance."

The use of foodstuffs in the manufacture of distilled liquor was prohibited by Congress, effective September 8, 1917.

By presidential order, using the power granted by Congress in the food bill, the use of food products in the manufacture of beer has been prohibited, effective December 1, 1918. (The use of all foodstuffs except barley, malt and hops for beer manufacturing was prohibited, effective October 1, 1918.)

The amendment to the agricultural bill, providing for national prohibition during the war and until demobilization shall have been declared by the President to be completed, as passed by the Senate and the House, becomes a law upon the passage of the agricultural appropriation bill and its signing by the President. Under the provisions of this measure, distilled liquor sales for beverage purposes cease July 1, 1919, and beer and wine sales for beverage purposes except for export cease July 1, 1919. After May 1, 1919, no grains, cereals, fruits or other food products shall be used in beer manufacture and after the approval of the act no distilled, malt, vinous or other intoxicating liquors shall be imported during the period of the war and demobilization.

The prohibition amendment to the national constitution was proposed by Congress in December, 1917. When thirty-six States through their legislatures shall have ratified the proposed amendment, complete and permanent prohibition becomes effective throughout the United States within one year. Fourteen States have already ratified.

Summary..

Whisky manufacture stopped September 8, 1917. Beer manufacture stops December 1, 1918. Manufacture and sale of all intoxicants stops July 1, 1919, for the period of the war, provided the agricultural bill's other provisions can be agreed on by House and Senate, and it is signed by the President.

Complete and permanent prohibition becomes effective one year after thirty-six States have ratified constitutional prohibition.

The Little Crosses of Brittany.

A few weeks ago, in traveling about fair Brittany, I saw a new usage and learned a new lesson. Like all the devout peasants of France, it is the custom of these people to erect wayside crosses, with the figure of the Crucified upon them. In Brittany, however, they have a practice all their own. For at the base of the crosses by the roadside they have laid little wooden crosses, which represent their personal prayers and thanksgivings. It is common to see a cross, where roads meet, with dozens of simple little wooden crosses heaped about its foot.

That is the best thing to do with our little crosses—the cares and perplexities and burdens and sorrows and misunderstandings and bitterness and defects of life. Take them to the Cross of Christ and leave them there. Into His great sacrifice all our little sacrifices may be merged. His Cross is the refuge for our crosses. There is no care too small, as there is no sorrow too great, to be comprehended in the salvation wrought on Calvary's Cross. —William T. Ellis.

The character of the man, not the nature of his achievements, gives abiding value to his work. A man's character is more revealed by what he tries to do than by what he succeeds in doing. His abiding influence is expressed by his aspirations rather than by his achievements. His most fruitful heritage is, generally speaking, his temper, his attitude toward life. The great question is, did he heighten or did he lower the sense of duty of those amongst whom he lived and worked? —Bishop Mandell Creighton.

God Bless Us Every One.

"God bless us every one!" prayed Tiny Tim,
Crippled, and dwarfed of body, yet so tall
Of soul, we tiptoe earth to look on him,
High towering over all.
He loved the loveless world, nor dreamed, indeed,
That it, at best, could give to him, the while,
But pitying glances, when his only need
Was but a cheery smile.
And thus he prayed, "God bless us every one!"
Enfolding all the creeds within the span
Of his child-heart; and so, despising none,
Was nearer saint than man.

I like to fancy God, in Paradise,
Lifting a finger o'er the rhythmic swing
Of chiming harp and song, with eager eyes
Turned earthward, listening—
The Anthem stilled—the angels leaning there,
Above the golden walls—the morning sun
Of Christmas bursting flower-like with the prayer,
"God bless us every one!"

Some Flower Lessons.

Mrs. Louisa A'hmuty Nash.

I was trying to train a "scarlet runner" tendril upon a stick. It seemed very perverse, and I could do nothing with it. Presently I discovered lower down a smaller tendril, twisted round its stem. I carefully released it, and the two together made their way up my stick quite contentedly.

It seemed to me like the difficulty in training an only child, and reminded me of my old English friend, Dinah Muloch Craik. She heard of an infant that apparently had been left out in the snow to die and adopted her. As she grew older, Miss Craik found her very hard to manage; so she adopted another from a large family, and from that time she had no trouble.

Wilted flowers are often restored by water. When they are first gathered, they drink up much more water than they do later on. They have to get accustomed to their new "habitat," and water helps them. Just as when changes come over our life, there are many aids we can make use of to become accustomed to them, even if the changes are not for the better.

One may help another in such times; especially should there be sympathy and perhaps a certain kind of resemblance between them. Just so, we see the "Californian" and "red poppy" growing together in the grain fields. They are in appearance very different, but belong doubtless to the same botanical family. Co-operation is a help to work and happiness.

How to Support the Cut Flowers.

My table vase is very small at the bottom, and it is hard to hold my bouquet. So I cut a few twigs from a near apple tree, which stick tight in its bottom. With this help I could get my lovely blooms to hold up their faces, showing us their beauty. They could stand erect against those poor dried twigs. Thus can we often help each other, even when we have less vitality in old age.

In a larger vase, which I valued because friends had brought it from Italy, I had a different plant. I had some pretty kosmos daisies. To be true to their family name, they should display the "eye of day."

So I began by filling the glass with the wild flax, with its tiny, delicate white blooms, its slender stalks and pale greenery. With this aid, I was able to place my fine kosmos flowers just as I wanted to see them, and they were held securely.

A lovely picture it seemed to me of the all-unconscious help young children may be to their parents. Their baby aid is cheer as well as aid. What a comfort their sweet presence gives in days of trouble and sorrow!

Weeding.

I was weeding in the flower garden, and was perpetually reminded of the similitude of evil habits to evil weeds. How infectious they are to the garden, and how they vary!

The little young grasses are easily picked up, while the old ones take a strong fork to disturb their roots, and then much earth rises, too. There's the thrift, with its underground tendrils spreading in all directions. The young dock rises easily, but the old one is a hard matter.

Sometimes in life we work hard, with apparently no effect; when behold, the seeming impossible is suddenly accomplished, as it was with one of the obstinate roots. Then we learn to give God the praise without taking any to ourselves.

Those underground tendrils seem like some bad personal habits that we are ashamed of others to see, so we try to conceal them. Still they increase; then our prayers ascend to God (to whom nothing is hidden or unseen), and with His help they are eradicated. In the young plant, they are comparatively insignificant. Just so with our children. If bad habits are allowed to grow, they will make life hard to them in the after years, but a little careful weeding of childish faults, with loving tending of tender buds of good will bring a rich reward in the blossoms of gentleness and the fruit of Christian character.

FAMILIAR HYMNS.

There Is a Land of Pure Delight.

The writer of the above hymn, Isaac Watts, has already been given a place in this series. It will suffice to say now that he was an Independent minister of Huguenot ancestry, and to record him as the foremost hymn writer of the eighteenth century.

There Is a Land of Pure Delight is one of the best of his four thousand hymns. It is a true lyric, for it is a single spontaneous emotion—the joyful conviction of immortality—set to sweet singing words. Even a casual reader cannot escape the conviction that it must have welled up from a heart surcharged with sudden holy happiness, and this idea stands confirmed in a passage taken from a recent hymnody.

When Dr. Watts was a young man of twenty, it seems, he was seated one day at an open window in Southampton, his English home. As his gaze crossed the near-lying still water and lingered on the fair fields beyond, the irresistible thought possessed him of another beautiful country beyond another flood, and then and there he wrote his hymn of heaven.

The same book furnishes a striking story in connection with the hymn. One bitter winter night during the Crimean war, a soldier found himself suffering such anguish from cold and hunger that he almost came to a decision to put an end to his existence. While he pondered the terrible question, suddenly he heard a voice singing high and clear above the rack of the storm. The words fell on his ear distinctly—past mistaking:

There is a land of pure delight—

Snatched back to hope again, he called loudly, and the music in response drew nearer and nearer, until at length the singer himself was at his side. It proved to be a musician lost in the storm, who, striving to keep a good heart of courage, was singing in that desolate waste the song of the land whose fields "stand dressed in living green."

It need not be added that he comforted the other wanderer and saved him from his despair. Nor need it seem a puzzling paradox that the hymn which showed forth the desirability of the world to come should have reconciled a weary pilgrim to a longer sojourn in the present world. The soldier caught, in his misery, the true spirit of the lines—that the beauty of Heaven shall light like a star the darkest way of earth.

How many times, we wonder—since most of them are unrecorded or unknown—have the sturdy old hymns of the Church of God rung out on a soul's black night and wrought deliverance and salvation!

There is a land of pure delight
Where saints immortal reign;
Eternal day excludes the night,
And pleasures banish pain.

There everlasting spring abides,
And never-fading flowers;
Death, like a narrow sea, divides
That heavenly land from ours.

Bright fields beyond the swelling flood
Stand dressed in living green;
So to the Jesus fair Canaan stood While Jordan rolled between.

But timorous mortals start and shrink
To cross the narrow sea,
And linger, trembling, on the brink,
And fear to launch away.

O could we make our doubts remove,
Those gloomy doubts that rise,
And see the Canaan that we love,
With faith's illumined eyes.

Could we but stand where Moses stood
And view the landscape o'er,
Not Jordan's stream nor death's cold flood
Should fright us from the shore.

The Four Sons of Mrs. Fogarty.

"I've no sons at all left to me, and I'd be glad to know how anyone was expectin' me to live," shrilled a cracked old voice from an open window.

The Red Cross worker who was passing by stopped, and looked across the garden at the shabby little dwelling tucked away between two tall, important looking business buildings.

"Were you speaking to me?" asked the Red Cross woman.

"I did. Ye guessed it right the first time," came the answer. "I saw ye was wearing one of them Red Cross pins there on you, and somebody was sayin' that ye could tell folks how they could be livin' with all the men folks gone 'way to fight."

"Yes, I belong to the Red Cross. I am a Home Service worker, and I will do anything I can for you. Are you all alone?"

"Sure and I am. Four boys, and all of 'em running off to war like they was meant for nothin' else at all, and me here with the misery in my back somethin' awful, and no strength at all to do the washin' for nobody. There's no money in the house to buy me a thing to eat or to warm me old bones. Now I was hearin' you was the one to fix it up so the Guv'ment would maybe let me have a little somethin' now and then, 'count of all the boys bein' in the army except Jimmy, and him in the marines. Could ye now?" and the old woman twisted her head inquiringly.

"Don't you get an allotment from them?" she was asked.

"Niver a cent," was the terse response. "They was tellin' me that money would be comin' to me reg'lar, but nothin' has come in all the months they been gone. This little place here is me own, thank God, and what with washin' here and cleanin' there, I've got me bit of food, but now—me back," and she winced a trifle.

So the Red Cross worker went in and saw the pictures of all the boys, and heard letters from training camps and overseas; saw the tears of pride that sprang at the proud thought that "all the Fogarty boys was fightin' men and fine lads, too, whether it was being soldiers, or truck drivers, or 'shoffers,' like they was before; only 'twas cruel hard 'times, havin' them all gone and no money free like other times."

When war had come there had been no wait for the draft to call them. Three Fogarty "boys" went down and enlisted. Jimmy, the youngest, was not yet twenty-one, and it was decided that someone should stay at home.

Jimmy had finally acquiesced, but when he reached his majority he came proudly to say that he had joined the marines because "they was first to fight," and maybe he "might be beatin' them others to it, after all."

So the old mother had sent them away with never a word of complaint, had worked hard and "lived awful poor, 'times," until her rheumatism had driven her to ask advice.

The Home Service worker advanced ten dollars at once to buy groceries and coal, and then began an investigation of the allotments.

A week or two later she went into Mrs. Fogarty's, where she had become a frequent visitor.

"I have something to show you, Mrs. Fogarty," she said. "Here is the letter about your allotments:

"We are glad to find Mrs. Fogarty at last. We have three hundred dollars for her from her sons' allotments, but the address was wrong, and we have been unable to get in touch with the sons who are overseas. She will have her money regularly each month hereafter."

"Thanks be to God," sobbed Mrs. Fogarty, "that I was seein' your small little Red Cross that day, and was so low in me mind that I was drove to speakin' to you. To think that I was gettin' all that, and me never knowin'! And me havin', unbeknownst to anyone, hard feelings to them boys and thinkin' maybe they was that pleased at bein' off fightin' that there was never a thought to the old mother! 'Tis a grand world, after all!"—Mary Ashe Miller.

The Healed Ones.

Should I win to Paradise (since even sinners enter there),

I shall not seek the high Saints with crown and aureole,

But I shall find the healed, humble ones, that center there,

Who followed through all gratitude the love that made them whole.

He who once was dumb shall tell me his sight again,

Tell me of the glory that flooded land and sea,

When across his opened eyes surged the golden light again

The yellow sands, the blue waves, the sun of Galilee.

I shall not seek the Martyrs, the staunch souls victorious,

Those who won to ecstasy from faggot and from rod,

But I shall seek the simple folk in no fashion glorious,

The broken straws of mankind that proved the winds of God.

He who one was dumb shall tell me his first word again;

He who long was helpless shall tell his joy to me;

When first his bonds were broken, and his bound limbs stirred again,

He shall tell me of the word and touch that made him free.

Never Saint or Martyr, when Heaven opened wide to him

Knew a greater joy than these whom I shall seek therefore.

And a little lad shall tell me what first his mother cried to him,

When he who limped out sighing, ran shouting through the door.

—Theodosia Garrison, in Good House-keeping.

A Mother's Need.

"What grace do I most need to cultivate in my boy?" asked a young mother of a saintly old lady. "Patience in his mother," was the instant reply. What a world of truth is contained in those four words! Is there anything which so quickly develops stubbornness and ill-temper in a child as impatience in government? And yet how often the mother's patience fails when it is most needed. What can she do? A mother was one day trying to enforce obedience in a headstrong boy. It seemed as if every effort had been made to no avail. Under the strain her patience gave way, and with a torrent of angry words she reproached the boy. Hardly had the words left her lips when she realized what she had done.

Pausing suddenly, she said: "My boy, I ask your pardon; I am very wrong to speak so; I will try to have more patience with you. Shall we both try again?" The boy looked at his mother in amazement, and, as he saw her sad and troubled face, he burst into tears, and said, as he threw his arms about her neck: "Mamma, dear mamma, I will try never to trouble you so again."

Long afterward the boy said: "I never knew till then how I troubled her, and I never felt so mean as when she asked me to forgive her."

The lesson was not lost on either the mother or child. Not only did the mother grow patient, but the boy grew considerate, and the bond between them has grown closer as the years passed.

"But I haven't any patience," said a thoughtless mother. "Things vex me, and I just say what I think." As if that were sufficient excuse for rudeness and often abuse. The one to whom this mother spoke replied quickly, "You are mistaken, my dear; you have patience, but you do not use it toward your own; you keep it for visitors. Yesterday when Mary and her children were here they were a great trial. You remember how the children meddled, and how rude and disobedient they were to you while their mother was lying down? But you never said an impatient word. Was it because you cared more for them than for your own?"

The mother's face crimsoned, and she slowly said: "Indeed, I don't; but it looks that way, doesn't it?"

"Patience in the mother" is a grace pitifully lacking in many a Christian home. How can it be acquired? "Ask and ye shall receive," "If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it."

But asking is not all. There must be effort—real hard, earnest effort—to practice this grace of which we read. "Let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing."—Christian Work.

Picking Out a Clerk.

Little incidents sometimes start successful men on their way to the top rungs of the ladder, but generally it is character that makes the incident possible, as in this anecdote of Charles M. Hays, the builder of one of the Canadian transcontinental railways. A contributor to Opportunity tells the story:

In the beginning of big business in became vice-president and general manager of the Gould lines, with headquarters at St. Louis. Mr. Talmage wanted a confidential secretary, and proceeded to choose him in his own way. He went to the passenger department to look over the clerks, and found all of them except one either chatting or watching the clock. This one he approached and asked the time. There was no answer. Resting his hand on the desk, Mr. Talmage repeated the question. The clerk came out of his preoccupation and looked up with his pen in the air.

"I beg your pardon," he said. "Did you speak to me?"

"I merely asked what time it is. That was all," said Mr. Talmage.

The young man looked around three sides of the room and finally found the clock on the fourth side.

"Eleven-fifty," said he, and he went on with his work.

"Thank you," said Mr. Talmage, and went away. The next morning Charles M. Hays, the clerk who had to search for the clock, was in a new place at the big man's elbow.—Ex.

Divine Order.

'Tis first the good, and then the beautiful,
Not first the beautiful and then the good;

First the rough seed, sown in the rougher soil,
Then the flower-blossom, or the branching wood.

Not first the glad and then the sorrowful,
But first the sorrowful and then the glad;

Tears for a day—for earth of tears is full—
Then we forget that we were ever sad.

How to Forget.

If you were busy being kind,
Before you knew it you would find
You'd soon forget to think 'twas true
That someone was unkind to you.

If you were busy being glad,
And cheering people who were sad,
Although your heart might ache a bit,
You'd soon forget to notice it.

If you were busy being true
To what you know you ought to do.
You'd be so busy you'd forget
The blunders of the folks you've met.

If you were busy being right,
You'd find yourself too busy quite
To criticize your neighbor long,
Because he's busy being wrong.

Letter From Vartan.

Dear Little American Child: I am a little Armenian boy. Last year I was very little and thin, for I had had no good food to make me grow. I had no mother, and no home. I was always cold and hungry and frightened. I had wandered, even in the dark night, with some other children because I was afraid to be alone. We went on, and on, looking always for something to eat.

One cold day, we saw some houses, far off. It was the town of Bethlehem. We were afraid to go too near, but a woman came down the road to meet us. She took me up in her arms. I found a place on her shoulder for my head and went to sleep. When I woke up, we were all in a warm stable. There were no horses or cows there, because it had been made into a place for children like me. Everywhere there were little white beds. The woman held me close to her while I drank all the warm milk there was in a big bowl. Then she wanted to put me into one of the little white beds. I cried, and would not take my arms from around her neck, so she put a warm blanket around me and rocked me. She sang and talked softly to me.

"Long, long ago," she said, "another little boy came to Bethlehem and this is His birthday. It was crowded that night, as it is now, and a woman held him, in her arms, in a stable, as I am holding you. His name was Jesus. The children in America know about Jesus, and for His sake they have sent these beds, and this warm milk, and me, to find you and hold you close. It is their birthday present to Jesus."

Thank you, little American. Your present has lasted all the year. I have good things to eat every day, and I never feel afraid. I am a big, well boy. My eyes are sorry, because I know that a great many children are still walking, walking, frightened and cold, looking for their mothers.

Will you send presents to them this Christmas? You will, because you love the baby Jesus.

Vartan.

Gifts for Vartan and more than 400,000 starving children in Bible lands will be taken by the Sunday-schools of America at the coming Christmas season.

The work is in charge of the Sunday-school Department of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, One Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

The First Christmas Tree.

I wonder how many of my young friends know the story of the first Christmas tree? Here it is:

Winifred, an English prince, left Wessex, with a train of followers to take the Gospel to his heathen kinsmen in Thuringia and Hesse. On Christmas Eve they came upon the people they sought, who were gathered round the Oak of Giesman, sacred to the god Thor, while old Hunrad, priest of Thor, proclaimed the night to be the death-night of the sun-god, Baldur the Beautiful, and that Thor was angry with his people and demanded the most precious thing in the kingdom as a sacrifice, to stay the calamities which otherwise might come. The people bowed trembling, while the priest chose Asulf, the eldest son of Duke Alvold, and the darling of the people. The boy consented and knelt before the great stone altar to receive the fatal stroke. Old Hunrad raised his weapon, but Winifred rushed from behind and turned the blow with his staff, so that the great axe shattered the stone altar, but left the boy untouched. Then Winifred preached Christ to the astonished crowd, and proclaimed the birthday and birthright of the Saviour, "more beautiful than Baldur, the beautiful sun-god, kinder than Freya the Good, greater than Odin the Wise." When the crowd was quieted, and still wondering at his words, he suddenly hewed down the blood-tree of Thor. Behind it unharmed by the fall of the blood-tree, stood a young fir-tree pointing to the stars.

The old priest raged, but the people seeing their god was powerless, listened as Winifred spoke again, pointing to the fir. "This little tree shall be your holy tree to-night. Its wood is the wood of peace, for your homes are built of fir. It teaches everlasting life, for its leaves are evergreen, and see its center points to heaven. Gather about it in your homes, not in the wild forest. There it will shelter no deeds of blood, but on its boughs shall hang loving gifts and round it shall be performed rites of kindness."

They took it home, and in the great hall of Duke Alvold's dwelling, Winifred told the story of Bethlehem and the angels' song. All listened, charmed to stillness, but the boy Asulf, who had been saved from death by the staff of Winifred, and was sitting on his mother's knee, put his lips to her ear and whispered: "Mother, listen now, for I hear those angels singing again behind the tree." Some said it was true, others that it was Prince Gregor with and his companions at the lower end of the hall, softly chanting their Christmas hymn: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, goodwill toward men."

I do not know how much of this beautiful story is true, but when the little folk dance round the tree in your home on Christmas night, the tree will have a new meaning when you have read this.—Morten Joslin.

The Only Flower.

The Violet's had its season,
The Rose has had its day;
The flowers of autumn stayed awhile,
Then softly sped away.
Now, 'twould be weary waiting
With wintry skies above,
Had God not known and sent us
A little flower called "Love."

The world is gay with blossoms—
In summer, autumn, spring;
But had the heart no garden,
Ah! what would winter bring?
But Love blooms on for ever,
Tho' seasons flutter past,
The only flower in all the world
God wills shall last!

In An Automobile.

When Lynn's mother saw him come racing down the street and fling himself through the gate and up the front steps, she knew that something had happened.

"Mother! Mother!" he shouted. "I am going to have a ride in it this afternoon."

She did not need to be told what "it" was. There was only one automobile in the whole town, and Lynn's dearest wish for two months had been to "try how it felt to be in it."

"Now I am going to know. Mr. Duncan has invited me."

"Why did he invite you?" asked his mother.

"Oh, just because he did. Maybe he knew how much I'd like to go, and he remembered when he was a boy and wished something very hard."

"Does he know where you live?"

"Yes. He asked me. He is coming for me at three o'clock. Won't it be fine for the automobile to be standing right outside our gate?"

Soon after dinner Lynn was impatient to get dressed and be ready. By two o'clock he had his best clothes on, and then, you see, he had to be very careful not to "get mugged and be unready" by three. So he sat down on his handkerchief on the curbstone to wait. By and by Harry Deems came along and talked to him.

"Where are you going?" asked Harry.

"I am going with Mr. Duncan in his automobile," said Lynn, trying to speak as if he did it often.

"H'h!" cried Harry. "Aren't you glad?"

Lynn nodded.

"I wonder," Harry went on, "if Mr. Duncan's dog is all right. I found him way off by the pond the other night all wet and cold, and his foot was hurt. I put him under my coat to try to keep him warm, but he shivered the whole way home."

Harry still talked, but Lynn did not hear a word that he said. He understood now why Mr. Duncan had invited him.

"But he did invite me. I didn't try to get him to; he just did. It wasn't my fault. I couldn't help it. He said something about his dog. But I didn't understand it."

He wished that Harry would go on away. He musn't be sitting there when Mr. Duncan came.

Suddenly a voice spoke out plainly from somewhere deep down under Lynn's Sunday jacket. It was a very scornful voice.

"Of course, you couldn't help it when you didn't understand; but now you do, and you can just as well as not. If you pretend to be another boy from yourself, that is cheating. If you take Harry's ride, that is stealing."

Lynn jumped up from the curbstone and took Harry by the arm.

"Go right home," he shouted to him, "and get dressed! Hurry! There'll be plenty of time if you hurry. It was you that Mr. Duncan wanted to take in his automobile. He made a mistake between us. That's all. When I grow up I am going to have sense enough to tell boys apart."

When Harry got the idea, he held back a little. But Lynn was determined.

"It's yours. It was meant for you. I am not going to take it from you. You wouldn't. You know you wouldn't, would you?"

This was why, when the big cream-colored automobile stopped at Lynn's gate, Mr. Duncan found two boys standing on the curb.

Lynn explained.

"I mixed you up, did I?" said Mr. Duncan, screwing his eyes into twinkling slits as he looked from one boy to the other. "You are not just alike, after all. I suppose your mothers can tell you easily. Well, get in. The machine is big enough for you both."

"So I didn't lose a thing by it," Lynn told his mother afterward.

"But you gained something," she said.

"Yes," agreed Lynn.—Sally Campbell, in Sunday-school Times.

For the Southern Churchman. Riddle.

Riddlemaree, round or flat,
Always important—remember that!
White or purple, black, brown or gray,
Each with a place where it ought to stay;
Some at your wrists, some at your side,
Some near the spot where your necktie's tied;

Sometimes on your bureau, but ne'er on your bed,

Off on your feet, but not on your head—
A few about you wherever you be;
I wonder who'll guess this riddlemaree!

Answer to last riddle: Snow flakes.

Answer to A Reader's riddle: A pumpkin.

The Bird-House Guests.

Emily thought it would be a good plan to take down the little green bird-house, in the apple-tree, when the cold weather came.

Father had made the bird-house for her in the summer and it was built exactly like a little cottage with a front piazza and blinds and a shingled roof. The birds had been very grateful for it; first, the Blue Bird family, and later the Wren family, who had lived inside its comfortable walls.

Snow was drifted on the little piazza now, though, and it shook with the wind that rocked the apple-tree.

"I am afraid the bird-house won't be able to stand the weather," Emily said, as she looked out of the window and across the garden at it. "I shouldn't want it to blow down and break, for the birds will need it next year."

"I am sure it can't come off the tree, Emily," her father said. "I nailed it on too strongly."

"Then why not leave it out all winter?" her mother suggested. "There may be some little wild neighbors of ours who will stay near us and need it."

What a surprise that would be, Emily thought! She would not mind one bit having to stay indoors on at-count of the stormy weather, it would be such fun to watch and see if any little tenants came to the bird-house.

And they really did. There was a fat woodpecker who had such a warm red cap and coat of feathers that he could stay north all winter. He sat on the piazza of the bird-house to rest in the noonings when he was boring trees near by.

The next lodger was a crow, but he found it too small quarters and moved to the barn. One morning Emily saw a pair of bright eyes peeping out of the small round door. It was a little red squirrel who had taken some of his winter store of nuts there to eat for breakfast. He looked like a brownie as he came out and tossed nut shells down from the piazza.

Snow lay deep over the garden soon, though, and for days the bird-house was empty. Then the sun shone again and Emily went out in her hood and leggings and fur coat to play.

"Poor, lonely little bird-house!" she said, as she looked at it up in the apple-tree, "there's no one keeping house in you now."

Then she listened. A faint sound came from the bird-house. Mew, mew, mew.

"Why, it sounds like a catbird," Emily said. Then the sound came again. Me-ow. "No, it isn't!" Emily said. "Father, do come, and see what's in my bird-house!"

Father climbed up a ladder and put his hand carefully in the bird-house door. Then he lifted out a tiny, cold, frightened, little kitten, a yellow kitten with blue eyes.

"She was lost and climbed up the tree," father said, as he put the kitten in Emily's arms.

"And she couldn't get down and went to live in the bird-house," Emily said. "I love her already. Oh, isn't it good that we didn't take it down for the winter?"—Carolyn Sherwin Bailey.

The Dewdrops.

Huldah Williams, Aged 11 Years.

Little drops of water
Sparkling in the sun,
Art thou, dear, a fairy,
Art thou truly one?

Twinkling on the roses,
By the light of dawn,
Shining on the posies
On the grassy lawn.

Oh, tell me where you came from,
Little deary mine,
Oh, did you come from Heaven
To the world to shine?

Mrs. Crimson's Afternoon Tea.

It was all ready. The table—a smooth, white toadstool—was spread with a tempting feast. A sliced strawberry represented ice cream and ices, the plates were rose-petals, and the goblets honeysuckle blossoms with a drop of honey in each.

The guests were—Dorothy's dolls? No, indeed! Hollyhock ladies in silky robes of crimson, rose, pale pink, yellow and white, with soft green shoulder-capes. Their heads were green grapes, upon which features were marked with a pin.

Dorothy had worked hard to get everything ready, and was tired. Leaning against the old apple tree root, she closed her eyes for a moment. Suddenly, however, she opened them in surprise, for Mrs. Crimson was saying: "Madame Blanche, do take some of this delicious strawberry cream."

"No," drawled Madame Blanche, peevishly: "you know I don't like strawberry cream? Why didn't you have vanilla?"

Dorothy's face became almost as red as Mrs. Crimson's dress, for she recognized the very words she had used that day at dessert. Mrs. Crimson went on:

"Miss Pink, Miss Rose, won't you have some ices?"

"I hate ices," replied Miss Pink, tossing her head.

"So do I," chimed in Miss Rose.

"Oh," exclaimed Dorothy, "you're spoiling the party! What makes you behave so?"

"You taught us!" they all cried. "Our stalks are just outside the dining-room window, and we hear you complaining at every meal."

"But I don't do so at parties," said poor Dorothy, half crying.

"It's just as bad to do it at home," returned Madame Blanche, severely.

"Besides," cried Miss Pink, in a shrill voice, "you can't expect people with green-grape heads to have pleasant dispositions!"

At this all the hollyhocks pulled off their heads and began pelting Dorothy with them.

"Dorothy, Dorothy!" called some one. Dorothy gave a start and looked about her. There were the hollyhock ladies, their heads all in place, each wearing the same fixed smile she had scratched upon it with a pin.

"Dorothy, come to supper," called mother.

As Dorothy took her seat, father said: "Here's some nice hot toast. Pass your plate, Dorothy."

She began to say, "I hate toast. I wanted muffins for supper," but she thought of Madame Blanche, and, shutting her lips firmly, passed her plate in silence. She ate her supper without a complaint, and, looking toward the window, fancied the tall hollyhocks outside were nodding kindly at her. After supper she told mother about it. "I'm never going to forget that dream!" said she.

"I hope you never will," replied mother, with a kiss.—A. M. Keith, in Our Little Ones.

Popping the Corn.

This is the way we drop the corn,
Drop the corn to pop the corn;
Shower the tiny lumps of gold,
All that our heaping hands can hold;
Listen awhile, and blithe and bold—
Hip, hop! Popcorn!

This is the way we shake the corn,
Shake the corn to wake the corn:
Rattle the pan and then, behold!
What are the tiny lumps of gold?
Pretty wee white lambs in the fold!
Tip-top popcorn.

America's Honor Roll.

"There is no question what the roll of honor in America is. The roll of honor consists of the names of men who have squared their conduct by ideals of duty. There is no one else upon the roster; there is no one else whose name we care to remember when we measure things upon a national scale. And I wish that whenever an impulse of impatience comes upon us, whenever an impulse to settle a thing some short way tempts us, we might close the door and take down some old stories of what American idealists and statesmen did in the past, and not let any counsel in that does not sound in the authentic voice of American tradition. Then we shall be certain what the lines of the future are, because we shall know we are steering by the lines of the past. We shall know that no temporary convenience, no temporary expediency will lead us either to be rash or to be cowardly.

"I would be just as much ashamed to be rash as I would to be a coward. Valor is self-respecting. Valor is circumspect. Valor strikes only when it is right to strike. Valor withholds itself from all small implications and entanglements, and waits for the great opportunity when the sword will flash as if it carried the light of Heaven upon its blade."—President Wilson.

If old George Jones was the most inquisitive man in the village, Sam Morton, according to Answers, was certainly the surliest.

One afternoon, as Gerge perambulated slowly along the one narrow street, he paused at Sandy's garden fence and gazed inquiringly over at Sandy, who was busily nailing a very large box together.

"Afternoon, Sandy!" said the old man genially. "Whatever be'ee puttin' that great box together for?"

Sandy paused in his hammering long enough to retort curtly:

"To hold all your questions, if so be as it's big enough!"

George eyed him in pained silence for a few minutes. Then he took an empty match box from his pocket and threw it over to Sandy.

"Then that'll do for yer civil answers, if so be it's small enough!" he retorted quietly.

The Two Pilgrims.

Tolstoi tells a lovely story of two pilgrims who set out for Jerusalem. Yesei stopped to help a starving family. He bought food, fetched water, split wood, started the great oven fire, redeemed the mortgage on the home, and bought back the cow, horse and scythe with which the living was earned. His money was all gone, and he could not hope to overtake his companion on the road, so he returned home and devoted himself again to daily duty. Yefim would not pause to help anyone. He reached Jerusalem, visited the sacred places, obtained earth from Calvary, water from the Jordan, and blessed amulets of every kind, but because of the throng he could not reach the holy sepulchre. Yet, "under the lamps themselves where the blessed fire burns before all," he saw a vision of Yesei, wearing a halo of shining glory about his head. For Yefim had brought his body to the Holy Land, but Christ Himself had come to the soul of Yesei. "And he learned that in this world God bids every one do his duty till death—in love and good deeds.—Expositor.

Perfect Peace.

"Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee, because he trusts in Thee."—Isaiah 26:3. There is the secret of peace: that was the source of Daniel's peace in the den of lions. I can imagine Daniel walking through the streets of Babylon on his way to be cast to the lions, according to the king's decree. He was the greatest character that ever walked the streets of Babylon. He moved like a giant, like a conqueror; they cast him to the lions. There was no music in the palace that night. The king was in great distress; he could not sleep, and early the next morning you could see an unusual sight—the king abroad in his chariot; and you could hear the chariot go rattling over the pavements of the streets. What does it mean? I see that royal chariot sweeping up to the lions' den, and the king goes to the mouth of the den and cries to Daniel, "Is thy God, whom thou servest continually, able to deliver thee from the mouths of the lions." And a voice comes up out of that den: "My God has sent His angels and shut the mouths of the lions." The calmest man in all Babylon that night, in my opinion, was Daniel. He prayed with his face toward Jerusalem, and after prayer took a lion for a pillow and lay down to sleep with a clear conscience. The king took him with him back to the palace, and then sent out a decree that the one hundred and twenty should be cast into the lions' den, and they were all devoured before ever they came to the bottom of the den. "There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked," but the man who trusts in the Lord need never be troubled.—D. L. Moody.

Drafts on Heaven.

A Scotchwoman who received kind letters from her son found bank-bills inside them, but, having never seen such money, thought they were only pretty pictures and put them aside. Many people think the promises found in the Bible are very pretty pictures, and perhaps some of you have put them away in an old tea-pot. Is it not time to understand that they are drafts on the bank of heaven that will be honored night and day? God make us ashamed that we have such a poverty-stricken spiritual life, when all the resources of the Holy Ghost are ready to supply our need. God does not want us to be beggars, but sons.—A. J. Gordon.

Repentance is not a painful duty, but an inexpressible privilege. There is nothing degraded in it; the degradation is all in the state it takes us out of. It is degrading to stay in sin, not to get out of it.—A. K. H. Boyd.

JOHN C. BLEIGHT, JR.

On the "field of honor" in France, November 1, 1918, in the fierce fighting in Argonne Forest, JOHN C. BLEIGHT, JR., laid down his life here to receive the crown of everlasting life in the land of peace and joy and love, leaving all that young manhood holds dear. He answered his country's call, volunteering his services in one of the most dangerous positions in the A. E. F. No braver, truer or more gallant spirit went forth to the battle front, in the words of his officer who was close by when he fell—"The fiercer the fight, the greater the danger, the more cool and quiet was the courage and forethought of this absolutely dependable soldier."

Surely these are the deathless dead, Who for humanity their blood have shed.

Though in the trenches for many weary months until the last terrible fight, his letters to loved ones at home were full of hope and cheerfulness, helping all to bear their burden of care and anxiety, like his own dear self, bringing a ray of sunshine to the most troubled heart. Though we mourn his early death, we know for him there breaks a still more glorious day when the full fruition of every loving thought and kindly deed makes that land the home of the blest. Hymn 243, verses 3, 5, 6, 8.

For a space the tried body
Lies with face towards the dawn;
Till there breaks the last and brightest
Easter morn.

Soul and body reunited,
Thenceforth nothing can divide,
Waking upon Christ's own likeness, Satisfied.

Oh, the beauty! Oh, the gladness!
Of that resurrection day,
Which shall not, through endless ages,
Pass away.

To that brightest of all meetings
Bring us Jesus Christ at last,
To thy cross through death and sorrow,
Holding fast.

RESOLUTIONS.

Whereas, the Rev. John Lewis Gibbs has tendered his resignation as rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Forest Hill, Richmond, Va., effective December 31, 1918, to accept a call to Emmanuel Church Staunton, Va., where there appear to be opportunities for greater service; and

Whereas, said resignation in its terms is positive, and, in the reasons assigned therefor, displays unmistakable evidence of the fact that such action has been taken by our rector only after long and mature deliberation, and in conformity with the urgent counsel and advice of the bishops of this Diocese, and of others, as well, whose wishes, in the circumstances, are almost mandatory; and

Whereas, the Rev. John Lewis Gibbs came to the Church of the Good Shepherd at a critical time in its life, and has by his marked ability, his genial personality and devotion to duty done a splendid and constructive work and endeared himself not only to all the members of our congregation, but to the entire community; and

Although this vestry realizes the serious consequences which must result to this church and parish from the loss of our esteemed rector, to whose guidance, under our divine Master, its affairs, both spiritual and temporal, have been committed for more than six years past, yet it, at the same time, recognizes its duty, in its present action, to conform to what has been urged by our bishops as being for the good of the Church at large;

Therefore, be it resolved, That the said resignation of our rector be, and the same is, hereby most reluctantly and regretfully accepted; and we, the members of the vestry of the Church of the Good Shepherd, take this opportunity to express our deep sense of personal loss and the loss to the congregation, our abiding appreciation of the service rendered to our church and to this community by Mr. Gibbs and the obligation which the church feels to him; and

Be it further resolved, That, though we are losing our rector, we shall cherish always in our hearts the love we have for him, and, knowing the affection which he bears for the Church of the Good Shepherd, of which he has been the guide and inspiration, we wish him to be assured that he carries to his new field the friendship, the love and the best wishes of those with whom he has been so closely associated; and a weak and struggling mission to a strong and vigorous parish.

Be it further resolved, That this resolution be published in the Diocesan papers of this State, and a copy thereof sent to Mr. Gibbs by the registrar of this vestry.

St. Andrew's: The many friends of the Rev. F. Creswick Todd deeply regret the necessity of his standing aside on account of health for a year, from his work at St. Andrew's, South Orange. The parish, unwilling to accept his resignation, gave him a leave of absence, and there is good reason to expect him back in his place after proper rest. Archdeacon Carter is caring for the parish at present.

A great naval rifle range has been established back of Caldwell, which will probably be permanent. A small building costing one thousand dollars has been erected with the hearty approval of the officers in command at the entrance of the camp to be the headquarters of the Rev. James T. Lodge, chaplain, with room for small gatherings of men, and the Sunday school Advent offerings are expected to pay for it. The building has been so made that if there should be no further need of it at any time it could be put down in one of the mission stations of the Diocese.

Thirty-two of the clergy of the New-ark Diocese have now been for a considerable time absent from their parishes in the service of the government, whether in France or in the military camps at home. This is about one-fifth of the whole number of the clergy and a much larger proportion of those in active service.

The Honor Roll of the Diocese, made by Mr. John C. Crawford for preservation, shows that the number of men from the parishes and missions has gone far beyond 3,000 now, with record of nearly one hundred who have lost their lives in the service.

CUBA.

Rt. Rev. H. R. Hulse, D. D., Bishop.

Holy Trinity Cathedral, Havana. Service of Thanksgiving for the Restoration of Peace.

In the course of the last four or five years Holy Trinity has gradually become the religious center for the whole city of Havana on all great international occasions. The great service held on November 17th to celebrate the restoration of peace was an instance and a most memorable one. The large building was more than filled, many people standing throughout the service. The entire diplomatic service in the city was either present or represented. Drs. Desvernine, Secretary of State, and Cancio, Secretary of the Treasury, represented the President of Cuba; Dr. Manuel Varona Suarez was present, together with the American and British ministers and their staffs, and the French, Italian and Belgian ministers and their families, all occupying the spacious choir of the church, and quite filling it.

The clergy present and taking part in the services were Bishop Hulse, Dean Myers and Canon Gibbons, of the Cathedral; the Archdeacon of Havana, together with two visiting chaplains; the Rev. Ernest Paugh, a regular chaplain of the navy, passing through the city en route to his new station at Guantanamo, and the Rev. Edward Chorley, D. D., of Garrison, N. Y., also on his way to act as chaplain for the time being for the United States forces at Santiago.

The magnificent Municipal Band of Havana accompanied the singing of the hymns and played the national airs at the beginning of the services. This band has given its services freely on various occasions, and has even offered them for the regular Sunday services.

During the marching of the clergy and choir to the main entrance of the church the national airs were played. Then followed the dedication and placing of the Roll of Honor by the dean. A shortened form of Morning Prayer, including the Te Deum, was followed by the Holy Communion. The Bishop was the celebrant and the preacher.

They That Are Christ's.

They do not want to shine in the world, or to be rich or popular, or to have their own way and assert themselves, or to enjoy the relish of success. . . . With all simplicity their hearts are bent on moving, doing, suffering, as the Spirit of Christ in them may will. They have done with worldliness; they have done with self-seeking; they do not look for an easy life in the world where Christ was crucified. . . . Their faces are set towards God, and the light that glows in them comes from Him.—From Bishop Paget's "Christ the Way."

Men are better helped by geniality than by austerity, by kindness than by terrorism. On a small scale daily experience teaches this; on a large, history shows us that it is in the times of pestilence that great cities are most licentious. And strange as it may seem at first sight, the method of geniality is a more difficult matter to master than that of austerity.—Sunday Magazine.

LETTERS FROM RHEUMATISM

Possibly you have imagined that you could never get your own consent to write a testimonial letter, but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of Rheumatism you can at least appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking the Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring at Shelton, S. C. This water overcomes many diseases, including Indigestion, Gout, Uric Acid Poisoning and Liver and Kidney diseases, but no patrons of the Spring are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water than those who have been relieved of their Rheumatism. Hundreds of letters like the following have been received by the Management:

Dr. Cosby, a South Carolina physician writes:—"I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes:—"I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists and still I was not benefited. I had about despaired of living when I began to use Shivar Spring Water and in a short time was cured."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes:—"Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were cured of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes:—"The water has done more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes:—"My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely cured of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes:—"Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

Doctor Says Crying Need Of The Woman of Today Is More Iron In Her Blood TO HELP STRENGTHEN HER NERVES AND PUT COLOR IN HER CHEEKS

Any woman who tires easily, is nervous or irritable, or looks pale, haggard, and worn should at once have her blood examined for iron deficiency. Administration of simple Nuxated Iron will often increase the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, careworn women in two weeks' time and help make them look years younger.

In commenting on the unusual demands being made today of women in every walk of life, Dr. Ferdinand King, New York Physician and Medical Author says: "There can be no healthy, beautiful, rosy cheeked women without iron. I have strongly emphasized the fact that doctors should prescribe more organic iron—Nuxated Iron—for their nervous, run-down, weak, haggard-looking women patients. Pallor means anemia. The skin of anemic women is pale, the flesh flabby. The muscles lack tone, the brain fags and the memory fails, and often they become weak, nervous, irritable, despondent and melancholy. When the iron goes from the blood of women, the roses go from their cheeks.

"In the most common foods of America, the starches, sugars, table syrups, candies, polished rice, white bread, soda crackers, biscuits, macaroni, spaghetti, tapioca, sago, farina, degerminated cornmeal, no longer is iron to be found. Refining processes have removed the iron of Mother Earth from these impoverished foods, and silly methods of home cookery, by throwing down the wastepipe the water in which our vegetables are cooked, are responsible for another grave iron loss.

"Therefore you should supply the iron deficiency in your food by using some form of organic iron, just as you would use salt when your food has not enough salt. But avoid the old forms of metallic iron which may injure the teeth and corrode the stomach and thereby do more harm than good. Take only organic iron—Nuxated Iron.

"I have used Nuxated Iron widely in my own practice in most severe aggravated conditions with unflinching results. I have induced many other physicians to give it a trial, all of whom have given me most surprising reports in regard to its great power as a health and strength builder.

"If people would only take Nuxated Iron when they feel weak, or run-down, instead

You can tell the women with plenty of iron in their blood—beautiful, healthy rosy-cheeked women full of life, vim and vitality—while those who lack iron are often cross, nervous, irritable, weak, tired, complaining creatures whom nobody wants to have around.

of dosing themselves with habit forming drugs, stimulants and alcoholic beverages there are probably thousands who might readily build up their red blood corpuscles, increase their physical energy and get themselves into a condition to ward off the millions of disease germs that are almost continually around us. It is surprising how many people suffer from iron deficiency and do not know it.

If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five grain tablets of ordinary Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks, then test your strength again and see how much you have gained.

Manufacturers' Note: Nuxated Iron which is prescribed and recommended by Dr. King is not a secret remedy but one which is well known to druggists. Unlike the older inorganic iron products it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black, nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed in this city by all good druggists.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Christianity is eternal life in the midst of time.

If there is good in us it will bring out good in others.

Wherever there is suffering, somebody's sin has caused it.

In God's living temple there is a place for stones of every size and shape.

Prejudice, more than anything else, robs life of its educational value.—Van Dyke.

Our Christian life is a failure if the Church to which we belong is not made stronger by our membership.

To educate his heart, one must be willing to go out of himself and to come into loving contact with others.

God is Life, and giveth life and healing to all: death is the miracle; when He raises the dead He is doing His own work.—Rev. M. G. Scherer.

"O would thy heart but be
A manger for His birth,
God would once more become
A Child upon the earth"

Doubts are, in many cases the birth-pangs of clearer light. They are the means by which we grow in knowledge, even in knowledge of heavenly things.—Bishop Temple.

If I can only place one little brick in the pavement of the Lord's pathway, I will place it there, that coming generations may walk thereon to the heavenly city.—Phillips Brooks.

It is a maimed Gospel which only says that Christ died to save us from our sins. It is equally true and just as important to say that He lives to give us union with the Father.—Walter J. Carey.

Pray for patience toward men and patience toward God. Pray for bright eyes to find out the light even in the darkness; pray ever to lean wholly upon God and stay yourself upon Him.—C. H. Spurgeon.

The only kind of thing that is worth saying is the thing that is conceived in perfect sincerity. . . . If one does not originate it one must, at least, give it the impress of one's own inmost mind.—A. C. Benson.

"Do not say that your condition hinders your perfection. . . . There is no condition, save one of mortal sin, which, so far from being an obstacle, to your good, may not work for it, together with God's grace.—Bossuet.

Jesus Christ has the human hands to bless, He has the human heart to sympathize, He has the human voice to intercede. He feels for all our anxieties, all our sorrows, all our sins. He feels; therefore, He helps. Trust, then, His sympathy, His intercession for you.—Manning.

Hide not thy talent in the earth;
However small it be,
Its faithful use, its utmost worth,
God will require of thee.
Go, then, and strive to do thy part,
Though humble it may be;
The ready hand, the willing heart,
Are all heaven asks of thee.

—W. Cutler.

Every man is a missionary now and forever, for good or for evil, whether he intends or designs it or not. He may be a blot; radiating outward to the very circumference of society his dark influence; or he may be a blessing, spreading benediction over the length and breadth of the world; but a blank he cannot be.—Chalmers.

Service is the noblest conception of life. "The opportunities to do things for others are the substance; the things one gets are the shadow." Not on the mountain top of rare privilege, but on the low level of ordinary life is the chance to serve, for that is where men are. Christ helped us most in the walks of everyday life, where were the children and beggars and sick folk. Only on the lowly plane of common experience can we look into men's faces, shake their hands, speak comfortingly to them, do them kindly service.

Christmas in Palestine.

By the Rev. Denzil C. Lees, (Sometime Resident in Palestine.)

A few years ago I left the city of Jerusalem by the Jaffa Gate and took the white road that led to Bethlehem. It was Christmas Eve, and I was going there to be present at the midnight service which is held in the Church of the Nativity. The distance is between five and six miles. I had chosen to go on foot, and expected to get there before sunset. Perhaps you wonder why I was going so soon to a service that does not begin till midnight; but the hundreds of others traveling in the same direction told me that I must be at Bethlehem hours before the time of the service if I expected to get into the church at all.

What a strange crowd we are, stretching along the road and out of sight, travelers of all nations—some riding in carriages, on donkeys, on mules and on horses, but the greater number are walking and they the simple peasants from Russia, who have spent all their life's savings to visit the Holy Land. Most of them look old, some very old. Many will never return to the White North, the long pilgrimage will be too hard, and the cholera, that silent enemy of the caravan, never fails its share. It is, perhaps, the most touching sight in the Holy Land—these children of Russia with the one word "pilgrimage" written on their faces, bending beneath their bundles which never seem to be taken off—like Pilgrim up the Hill of Difficulty—singing as they go. And their voices go straight to the heart. One always sees them everywhere. In all the holy places they kiss the ground. Wherever they think the Saviour suffered or was sad, they weep in silence, men and women alike.

Bethlehem is situated on two sides of a lime-stone hill, in which are cut terraces with olive groves and vineyards. In these days it is a good-sized town of about 12,000 inhabitants, and does a large trade in mother-of-pearl ornaments, which are made chiefly by women, at the small wage of twenty cents a day. It lies in a stony country, with a background of bare hills. Beyond the city stretch the fields of the shepherds and where Ruth gleaned and met Boaz. At the very edge of the hill on which the town stands is the famous old church founded by the mother of Constantine the Great, Empress Helena, looking more like a fortress, as it was practically made in the days of the enemies of the cross.

At last we enter the "little town," and thread our way between the houses strongly built with stone, with dome-shaped roofs of stone. There are stalls in the crowded streets with various things for sale, such as bread, olives, cheese, sweetmeats and small articles of all kinds made of mother-of-pearl. The head-dresses of the married women of Bethlehem are unique. They are tall and round as a fez and entirely conceal the hair; chains of silver on which hang rows of silver coins ornament the front, and a long white cotton veil, with embroidered edge, drapes down the back and shoulders. Their costume is distinct, differing from all other costumes of women in the Holy Land, and very beautiful.

The Church of the Nativity is entered through a doorway so small that I had to bend my head in order to pass through it. It was made so many years ago to prevent the rude soldiery from riding their horses into the sacred building. Inside it is very large, but very plain. There are no seats or pews for the convenience of the worshippers, but just a rough stone floor. The roof is of wood from the cedars of Lebanon, and is supported by double rows of pillars.

Although it is six hours before the service begins, the church is already well crowded, and I make my way to a pillar that I may lean against it and wait.

Hundreds of the Russian peasants are gathered in groups, some sitting on the stone floor, munching black bread; others cross themselves in prayer, but they are all very silent, waiting with their extraordinary patience for the dream of years. A few Turkish soldiers, scattered here and there, rest upon their rifles with tired eyes and well-filled cartridge belts, for, sad to say, the Latins and Greeks and Armenians, who jointly own the church, do not always live in peace.

On a previous visit I had seen the Grotto of the Nativity, where it is believed that Christ was born. To reach this second cavern, round and over which the great church has been built, you pass through a screen into a very beautiful chapel, glittering with gold and silver hanging lamps, roofed with cedar and paved with marble, and come to two flights of marble steps forming a half circle. These steps are very narrow and lead down into the cavern which is cut out of the solid rock. On that day four Armenian priests, in gorgeous vestments, were conducting a service before a very large silver star, while some Russian pilgrims sat on the steps and knelt and wept. The place was dimly lighted with candles and lamps, which are never allowed to go out. The star is inlaid in marble and around it are the words, "Hic de Virgine Maria Jesus Christus Natus est." The place where the star is is called the Recess of the Nativity and the small space before it is called the chapel of the Nativity.

It is, indeed, very probably the place of the birth of Christ. There are many such caves in the limestone hill of Bethlehem, which are still used as stables and places of shelter for cattle. They are warm and shield from the wind. The very roughness and simplicity of them emphasize the lowly state of His birth. And one still sees in the unchanged life and customs of the village folk of Palestine the same practice as at the birth of the Saviour.

When a child is born the babe is immediately rubbed all over with salt. This is an ancient custom. "Under the similitude of a wretched infant is shown the natural state of Jerusalem," in Ezekiel 16:4: "Thou wast not salted at all, nor swaddled at all." After salting the babe is wrapped in swaddling clothes so tight that it cannot move. "Ye shall find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger" (Luke 2:12). After seven days the child is unfastened, washed with fresh oil, rubbed again with salt, then bound up once more in the swaddling clothes. This continues until forty days have elapsed, when it is dressed in ordinary garments, like its parents.

It is nearing midnight and the church is now filled to its utmost capacity. A great hush fills the place, but dimly lighted by hanging lamps. A movement of the crowd tells me that the service is about to begin. At last, softly, upon the intense silence comes the sound of singing. Then louder and coming nearer. It is very beautiful, for the voices are the best in Europe, hired for this service alone. They are singing the "Gloria in Excelsis" in procession. The choir comes first, then the clergy with the archbishop, who carries a golden cradle in which is the wax figure of a babe. They pass between the hundreds of worshippers, who bow their heads at the symbol, through the screen into the chapel and down the steps to the star, where the singing stops and the short service is conducted. Then the singing is resumed as they all ascend to the body of the church again, and out into the streets of the town, for hundreds are not able to get into the church. At last they return and the service is over.

It takes quite a while for the church to empty. Many of the Russian pilgrims stay upon their knees till the daylight appears. They do not seem to know fatigue.

As I left the church, sitting near the entrance, I saw a woman with a child in her arms; she, too, had come from Russia, and I will never forget the radiance on her face as she looked at her sleeping babe. The first signs of gray dawn began to appear, and I remembered it was Christmas Day, and felt as I had never done before the meaning of those two opening words of the Lord's Prayer. Most of the visitors talked and laughed as they left the city. Only the children of Russia were silent and solemn as they bent beneath their bundles toward Jerusalem in the light of the rising sun.—Oklahoma Churchman.

"Merry Christmas."

In the Bible the word "merry" usually occurs with the word "heart." It always means gladness, happiness, not mere liveliness. "A merry heart maketh a cheerful countenance." "He that is of a merry heart hath a continual feast." "It was meet that we should make merry and be glad." "Is any merry? let him sing psalms." It was in this sense that the word wrought its way into the very familiar expression, "A Merry Christmas." Mere gaiety, liveliness of conduct, lightness, do not reach down to the depths of the heart and take hold there in such a way as to make "a continual feast." A truly "Merry Christmas" is one that takes hold of Christ and sends its roots down into the rich soil of His grace and drinks up life and fatness from Him, and, deriving its fullness from Him, has in it continual feasting. The true "Merry Christmas" is one that runs, in spirit, through the whole year. In wishing one a "Merry Christmas," therefore, if we are not light and flip-pant in doing it, we are wishing a year long, nay, years long, joy and peace in Christ.—Presbyterian Journal.

For Christmas.

O Blessed Lord Jesus, give us thankful hearts today for Thee, our choicest gift, our dearest guest.

Let not our souls be busy inns that have no room for Thee and Thine, but quiet homes of prayer and praise where Thou mayst find fit company, where the needful cares of life be wisely ordered and put away, and wide sweet spaces kept for Thee, where holy thoughts pass up and down, and fervent longings watch and wait Thy coming.

So when Thou comest again, O blessed One, mayst Thou find all things ready, and Thy servants waiting for no new master, but for one long loved and known.

Even so come Lord Jesus. Amen.

Whatever the Christian prays for he ought to be willing to live and die for.—Ex.

PREPAREDNESS FOR THE CHURCH

Never in the history of the country has the Church's responsibility in upholding the ideals of the nation been so great. In rendering its share of the essential work, its buildings should provide for maximum efficiency in every department. Consult the leading specialists in all branches of church improvement, construction, alteration, etc.

Designs will be prepared indicating how contemplated changes, etc., can be effected. Local labor will be availed of when desired for the constructive work, the artistic and elaborate enrichment being executed under the supervision of our New York artists.

Send for photographs of church interiors showing changes and improvements that have been accomplished, with memorial gifts included as a part of the scheme.

"ON EARTH PEACE."

The angels' song will sound in our ears with a special significance at this Christmastide. As on Thanksgiving Day and Advent Sunday our thoughts were almost of necessity colored and heightened by the great events of contemporary history, so will it be at this season. The magic word "peace" has acquired almost a new meaning in these past few weeks and a value little appreciated before. We used to think of actual warfare with its terrible cost in carnage and agony and desolation as a thing far off from us and that could not happen to us. Such a war as we have seen our imagination could not even picture. We wonder now to think that for years the world was sleeping over this volcano; that it was in the power and the wicked will of a single group of arrogant men to turn the civilized world into an inferno. We thought "the common sense of most" would forbid such a catastrophe, that the cost of modern warfare would make it impossible, that an occasion for it could never arise. So we took national peace as a matter of course. It was something that could be safely left to the wisdom and diplomacy of our statesmen backed by the power and resources of our country. From that dream we had a rude awakening. Our leaders were strong and trustworthy, our resources all that we had supposed and more; but war came, despite our efforts to avoid it. War; and then peace, when the pride of men had been chastened and the nations brought to their knees to cry mightily to God; peace, at such time and in such ways that thoughtful men could but acknowledge the hand of God in it and accept it as His gift to His redeemed earth.

And therein lies a lesson for the day. It is not a poetic fancy or pious fiction that links Peace on Earth with the coming of the Saviour Christ, but solid fact, as inevitable as it is gracious. Whether it be the peace of reconciliation with God, or peace of conscience and heart, or the peace of love and kindness in the home and among friends and neighbors, or peace between classes and social interests, or peace between nations and peoples, it is all one. The Prince of Peace is the personal Christ ruling in men and in the world. The essential basis of all peace, without which it can nowhere exist, is found in the truths of His evangel, its sanction is in His Divine Sacrifice and its law is enforced by His indwelling Spirit.

For the things which Christ came to destroy, lumped together as the "works of the devil," are always and everywhere the things which destroy the peace of men, producing discord, variance and strife. Be it the smallest sin that brings distress to the most sensitive conscience, or be it the diabolical ambitions of empires and their rulers that set a continent aflame, they fall together in this class and under His ban. They are destroyed only in His name, under His rule and by His power. While the things that make for peace, in every sphere and in every degree, are the things which He hath implanted, the counsels He hath enjoined and the works He hath wrought in the earth.

It may be taken as one of the many tokens of the Divine goodness working in the affairs of men that the Peace Conference is gathering and beginning its momentous task just at this Christmas time. The heart and the hopes of Christendom go forth to that assembly. They will go laden with Christmas thoughts of the coming and reign of the Prince of Peace, of the heavenly acclaim of Peace on Earth. God grant that they may go so pure, so insistent, so prayerful, that their spiritual impact may be felt in every council chamber and in every counselor's heart; that the will of the world may be the will of the world's Saviour, Christ the Lord, and that He may speak the word of peace to the men of His good pleasure.

SHALL IT BE "THE PEACE OF JERUSALEM"?

The proposition presented in the contribution in our issue of last week by the Rev. Edmund L. Woodward, M. D., entitled "The Jerusalem Angelus of World Peace," appeals to the imagination with peculiar force. That the word of peace should go forth from Jerusalem, that center around which have clustered, as nowhere else on earth, the most sacred associations of a thousand generations, and from which emanated the gospel of peace to all nations, strikes one instantly as a thing pre-eminently fitting and beautiful. What a coronation of history it would be; what a vindication of lofty prophetic vision; what an augury for the fulfilment of yet higher aspirations of men!

The dynamic of religious sentiment cannot be overestimated. All history proves it to be one of the most potent forces which has actuated mankind. It is not, therefore, to sentiment alone that this proposal appeals, but to consequent considerations of the most practical value. The peace-pact is to be, as we hope and believe, not a mere accommodation of differences or settling of balances, but the basis at least of a solemn covenant and league among the nations. It must win the common consent of mankind if it is to be sure and abiding. It will need to be fortified by every sanction that can attach to it. Direct religious avowals will be barred of necessity from the written concordat. But by sending it Jerusalem to be proclaimed, and so identifying it by name with the ideals and associations for which the Holy City has stood in the traditions of the ages, the Peace Commissioners would indicate in an unobjectionable but most forceful manner their own conception of the sacredness of their work and the source of its inspiration, and impart to it in the minds of multitudes of every nation and tongue a significance, an authority and a sanctity of untold meaning.

The proposal of Dr. Woodward, and substantially that of the Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells in England, is, first, that the final ratification of peace shall, even if not signed there, be officially proclaimed and heralded to the world from Jerusalem; second, that the treaty shall consequently be forever known as the Peace of Jerusalem; and, third, that the Peace Commissioners, well in advance of the event, shall appoint and proclaim a time coincident therewith for a universal Peace Celebration throughout the world, calling upon all the nations thus to signify their assent and express their grateful welcome to the end of war and the inauguration of the new era of world peace.

The proposal has already been well received by religious leaders, publicists and journalists to whom it has been presented. Difficulties readily present themselves to the mind, but they are by no means insuperable and would doubtless vanish before a general expression of favorable opinion. Large publicity should be given to this plan to make it successful, and the co-operation of religious, fraternal and patriotic organizations should be engaged to bring it to the attention of the high authorities.

"O Come, All Ye Faithful."

"O Come, All Ye Faithful," is sung at the Christmas festival in one language or another by all the Christian people in the world. The Christians of Japan and China, of the Philippines and India, in all their various tongues; the great Russian Church in the Greek; fifty-one different tongues of Africa; the great Roman Church in the sonorous Latin; fifty-nine different dialects of North American Indians, and I know not how many from Brazil to Peru and the islands of the great ocean; the ubiquitous English—all join that noble summons to rejoice at the nativity of our Lord. It rolls round the whole world as the sun lights the morning of Christmas Day. Yea, though it be midsummer Day at the Antipodes, the chorus swells from Australia and New Zealand, and it bursts forth even from regions where the sun does not penetrate at all at that season, from the Lapps and the Greenlanders, from Herschel Island and Point Barrow. I do not know if there be any other hymn that is sung at one special season so widely translated as this is, and it thrills me to think of the sons of God all over the world joining with the thought and one voice, at one time, yes, and to one tune, in hailing the Birth of the Son of God.—Spirit of Missions.

A Religion of Joy.

The coming of Christ brought joy to the world. "I bring you good tidings of great joy," was the angels' message to the shepherds. The world was full of sorrow before, and there was no comforter. Jesus went about among the people dispensing joy. Every one who met Him went on his way a little happier. He said to each person He saw, "God is your Father," and that is joy. He declared forgiveness of sins, and that set hearts rejoicing. He spoke of the Resurrection and immortal life, and that dried mourners' tears. A legend says that as Jesus walked away from the grave on the morning of the Resurrection, sweet flowers grew in the path behind Him. It is true, at least, that wherever He has gone all these years He has left gladness in His path. Christianity is a religion of joy. It does not remove all sorrow, but it takes the bitterness out of tears, and puts into the heart the new song which sings in the darkest night. We do not well or fitly confess our Lord unless we have learned to be rejoicing Christians.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

Here and There

To grasp and visualize the full meaning of the recent report of the Secretary of Agriculture stating that this year's crops of cereals (oats, wheat, corn, rice, etc.) amount in round numbers to over 5,000,000,000 bushels, it is necessary to do a little figuring. A bushel contains one and one-fourth cubic feet. Figuring on this basis we find that we have produced this year a pile of grain six hundred feet high—higher than the Washington monument—and covering forty square miles. Think how God has prospered us!

The results of the English elections held on December 14th seem to assure the Lloyd George Coalition Ministry a continued majority in Parliament. The election presents a queer trick of politics in that it maintains the present Prime Minister in power by the support of conservative voters, although he is one of the most advanced radicals in England. The women voted by the million and showed a marked contrast to their American sisters, who have been decidedly apathetic to their new responsibilities in States where they have received the vote.

The assassination of the President of Portugal last week brought that little European republic into prominence and reminds us that it is a country which tried to make itself "safe for democracy" just before the war, and that it has an ex-king and queen who have the distinction of having been exiled for more than three years, which ought to give them some prestige in that royal group, which has just had two hundred and eighty-five accessions from Germany.

The trouble in Portugal also calls our attention to the adjoining kingdom of Spain, where one of the provinces, Catalonia, is threatening to secede on account of some distasteful legislation by the Spanish Parliament. This thing of "self-determination" will have to be "handled with care" in some parts of the world.

In the excitement of other events the completion of a standard gauge railroad from Cairo to Jerusalem, which was finished last July, has been almost overlooked in the country. Through trains with Pullman cars are now running regularly. The schedule is so arranged that the Suez Canal and Sinai Desert are crossed at night, and the traveler has daylight for the more interesting scenery.

The Jerusalem peace, which consists in having the final treaty of peace proclaimed from Jerusalem is a plan which is making rapid headway both in this country and in England. Meetings are to be held to urge our peace delegates to get other members of the great conference to concur in it.

The Golden Gate of Jerusalem, which was built by the Emperor Julian in A. D. 362 and subsequently walled in by the Mohammedans, was accidentally struck by a stray shell in the bombardment previous to the capture of the city by General Allenby's forces.

There is a very ancient legend that the Saviour would return through this gate to restore the city to Christian rule, and it is singular that an accidental shot should have broken away the masonry from around this gate just before the successful entry by the Christians.

The German Secret Service in America; 1914-1918. By John Price Jones and Paul Merrick Hollister. Boston; Small, Maynard & Co. Pp. 340. $2 net.

Eventually, we suppose, the full story of German intrigue in America, so far as it has been or shall be discovered, will be published under the imprimatur of the Government. It will be wanted for a full understanding of one of the reasons why America was forced to go to war, and also of one of the international evils which the war, we trust, will have made infamous if not impossible. Meanwhile this substantial and carefully prepared volume will serve to impress these and other needful considerations upon the minds of its readers. The enormous proportions and thorough organization of Germany's secret service in America before and during the war, the purposes for which and methods by which she intended to use this country in her scheme for world domination, and the machinations of her agents up to the spring of 1918, are set forth in sufficient detail to make us marvel at the dangers we so largely escaped and rejoice the more at the downfall of the unscrupulous enemy we had to contend with. The book is well written by one whose business it was to know the facts he states and whose qualifications for his task are well attested.

Georges Guynemer, Knight of the Air. By Henry Bordeaux. Translated from the French by Louise Morgan Hill. With an introduction by Theodore Roosevelt. New Haven. Yale University Press. 1918. Pp. 256. Illustrated.

The romance and glory of military aviation have found exemplification in Guynemer, the outstanding "hero of the air" of the late war. This fascinating biography, by a distinguished writer of his own nation, introduces one not only to a remarkable character who won distinction of the first order by invincible determination, courage and nerve, but to that "battle field of the air" upon which he rode forth to fight, where danger is eluded only by daring and death by defiance. Let us hope that the invasion of the heavens for purposes of war will now cease, and that the conquest of the air made by the inventiveness of men of war may open its wide spaces to the arts of peace alone; that so these intrepid pioneers may have won a double reward.

Use Your Government. What Your Government Does for You. By Alissa Franc. New York. E. P. Dutton & Co. Pp. 390. $2 net.

"This book," as stated in the author's introductory note, "is an attempt to show how many and varied are the ways in which the Government co-operates with and serves the people of the United States." A mere glance at its pages would prove a revelation to many persons who consider themselves pretty well informed on public affairs. The average man thinks of the Government as functioning chiefly in raising taxes, making appropriations and influencing elections. He knows little or nothing of what scores of bureaus connected with the several departments under the supervision of Cabinet officers are doing for the development of the country and the advancement of its material and social interests in numberless directions. They offer information, assistance and advice for the farmer, the business man, the laborer, the educator, the housekeeper, the home-seeker, etc., which is of the greatest value, but of which larger advantage could be taken by individual citizens if it were better advertised. The object of this book is to tell how this help may be obtained and used, and its general circulation would prove very useful.

The Mulatto in the United States. Including a Study of the Role of Mixed-Blood Races Throughout the World. By Edward Byron Reuter. Boston. Richard G. Badger. The Gorham Press. Pp. 417.

We took up this book with the unpleasant feelings which its title suggests, to find it, however, a worthy and useful study of one phase of the "negro problem," stressing a factor which has received too little attention. It is, first of all, a sociological, and not a biological, discussion of existing facts, which are inductively presented, and which will serve to enlighten many who know our colored people only theoretically and from a distance. The conclusions of the author, who seems to write without personal bias, are in the main, we believe, correct. The book needed to be written and is worthy of careful reading by those who would understand real conditions among the colored race and would try to help them wisely.

WORK FOR THE LAYMEN.

(Abridged.)

Mr. Editor:

In your issue of November 23 you published an editorial from a secular paper with the comment of the correspondent sending it: "Alas! Earthliness and worldliness have taken such hold upon the Church that a secular paper feels constrained to raise its voice, etc." Could we not as well say that religion has taken such hold of the secular press as to make it, what it should be, a great power for good?

The godly laity must be depended on to build up the Church. The idea recently advanced of using the Diaconate more largely according to its original intention is a valuable one. The first deacons were chosen by the early Church to lighten the labors of the Apostles that they might have more time for spiritual things. They gave their time and attention to what we might now designate as secular matters and which the Church has permitted other organizations like the Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., etc., to take up. We need a real order of deacons as we have of deaconesses, to give to the laity opportunity to meet their responsibilities.

The Methodist Church in Washington has for years sustained a deaconess in the Union Station, who has given help and comfort untold to women, especially young women coming to a strange city. No man, no clergyman, could fill this woman's place. We must use the power of the secular press and of the laity to do the work of the Church. A newsboy may be a king's messenger.

FILIALISM AND SOCIALISM.

From the Advent Pastoral of the Bishop of California.

If a Christian Church is ever to use a Christian Year to count for a Christian Era, now would seem to be the time. Christ must sit at that peace table. And the sphere of His peace-making only needs its old re-statement in modern terms to be Twentieth Century efficient. That sphere is first one of making mankind more truly the Children of God, and second, of making mankind more truly a brotherhood. Our Call is a Call not to lose the opportunity for either.

We must, however, keep the first things first. And the first and great commandment bears upon our relation to God. Duty to God is origination of duty to neighbor, as parent precedes family circle. Sound Socialism is the outgrowth of humanism and humanism to the Christian implies Divinity. Fatherhood ranks Brotherhood. A recent warning of Bishop Gore is much to the point here: "Social Service is everywhere and always a necessary part of the Gospel, but it is a secondary part, a fruit rather than a root. The service and this sense of Brotherhood comes as a result of the Fatherhood found in God. Civilization finally and fundamentally depends on the idea of God in every nation." The danger is that Socialism will not only be unrelated, but unrated.

Since 1835, when the word was coined, "Socialism" has served as a masterful rallying word for the dimension of duty to our fellowman. It goes everywhere and is seized as descriptive of the aims of many groups. It makes an excellent term to conjure with the world over. The Christian Church seems to lack a word of corresponding point and currency for the dimension of our primary duty to God. Especially is this true of our duty towards our Heavenly Father as reciprocal to His Providence toward us. In a word, what appears desirable is a term to fix and foster our filial as well as our social obligations. Now as we have Socialism for the vogue of championship of the rights and duties of man to man, is there not a congruous gathering up of those filial duties of man to God, in a term Filialism?

Filialism, as the source and synthesis for Socialism, and both as brought into the world in their right and remedial purpose and agency, these are most suggestive and timely to us. Let us make the preparation for the angelic message of good tidings and its undying vitality a very republication of a Filial Gospel and a Social Gospel symmetrical in teaching and rounded in life.

IF THE HEART MAY SPEAK.

By the Rev. Will S. J. Dumvill.

It was my privilege to be one of two clergymen who heard our beloved Bishop Funsten preach in the Cathedral on Thanksgiving Day for the last time. His sermon was unlike any other which I had ever heard on such a day.

After the service I went into the vestry room to greet our dear friend. The Bishop was removing his vestments. I reached out my hand and said, hello, Bishop. He turned instantly and grasped my hand with a grace peculiar to himself. Strange to relate I saw a glory, a beautiful light in his eyes, a glow and beauty to his countenance which I had never seen before. I did not know the meaning then, I understand it now. It was the soul of the man speaking through his eyes. It was the soul of the shepherd of the mountains of Idaho reflecting the beauty, the effulgent glare, the silvery light that plays at eventide on the top of these mountains over which he traveled and on which he planted the Cross of Christ. I can think of no other sentence descriptive of this pioneer missionary, except it be an utterance from the lips of the silvery tongued pulpiteer, from out the "ivory palaces," the Prophet Isaiah. "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!"

"Thy God reigneth!" was his every day message. "Peace on earth, good will to men," the climax of every sermon.

The Bishop was a poet, with the spiritual vision of a prophet and the intellectual balance of a mathematician. A Churchman with the heart of a saint, a Christian with the genius of a man born a hundred years before his time, a statesman, with an eye single to the glory of God and the planting of His Kingdom on every quarter of the globe. Truly, he was a man "that had been with Jesus and learned of Him."

He towered over our heads like the mountain peaks, but in lowliness of spirit and in the beauty of his soul filled our hearts and minds with the grandeur and beauty of the foothills. He never played the monarch, he was a true gentleman of the South. While I pen these clumsy sentences in honor of our Bishop, who was so good and kind to me, my heart is aching with a bitter pain.

THE PROCESSIONAL.

By P. Whitwell Wilson, Author of "The Christ We Forget."

In the summer of 1897—how long ago it seems!—a great queen, having reigned sixty years, celebrated her Diamond Jubilee. From the whole world there gathered the kings and the captains to do her honor, and royalty blazed forth in one of its final, comprehensive pageants the like of which we shall never see again. As the glory of empire unrolled its splendors over land and sea, a man of letters, who had talked much of many countries, sat in a room by himself and the Spirit of the Lord came upon him. As a writer of barrack-room ballads, Rudyard Kipling was famous, but the poem which he now jotted down was so unlike his usual style that, with curious impatience, he threw it into the waste-paper basket. Happily he had a wife, and she found the verses, read them, saved them, and sent them to the press. Next morning mankind was awakened by the chorus:

Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet;
Lest we forget—lest we forget.

Thus, were we given "Recessional." It is an unfamiliar word—a choir slowly singing its way out of Church, or some wayfarer, walking along a road that clings to a mountain, who looks back on the scenes which he must leave behind as he skirts some rocky headland. To Kipling, the pomp and circumstance of navies and armies were as the ceremonial of an ancient and commanding religion. The flags, the parades, the national anthems, the salute of millions, the boom of guns, the sense of order, of power, of broad and irresistible progress led him to the fatalism of the Moslem—There is no night, no majesty, saye in Allah, and Allah meant domination. But in the silence of his solitude a still small voice reminded him of Nineveh and Tyre, and he wrote:

The tumult and the shouting dies;
The captains and the kings depart:
Still stands Thine ancient sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart:
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet;
Lest we forget—lest we forget.

I did not witness that Diamond Jubilee, but after the great queen had died I stood in Palace Yard at Westminster and watched nine monarchs, one of them William Hohenzollern himself, gathered around the bier of her son, King Edward VII. I recall the coronation that followed; how, amid a feast of color, and fanfares of trumpets, the Crown Prince of Prussia, seated resplendent beside his young wife, was hailed with genuine enthusiasm by the British people who still hoped for, and believed in, the best in their neighbors. How soon have these glittering visions, the mirage of happiness in a desert of militarism and tyranny, vanished into thin air! An attorney from Wales, called David Lloyd-George; a journalist in Paris, called Georges Clemenceau, and a college professor, called Woodrow Wilson, ordered the Kaiser from his throne; the Kaiser obeyed, and his throne is vacant. As the Virgin Mary sang, when she awaited her first Christmas, "He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree." You and I, the common folk, alone remain to rule the world. One is our Master, even Christ; and in the era, new-born of blood and tears, we sing, with a new emphasis:

Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet;
Lest we forget—lest we forget.

The Jubilee was recessional—sixty years complete. People then looked backward, on men and things that grow inevitably old. Our Christmas is something, better than a trembling memory. It is not recessional, but processional. All the men who came to Christ in His Cradle were looking forward and upward. They were not thinking of Herod the King, or of Caesar Augustus the Emperor, but of the Star, the Lode Star, or Love Star of Bethlehem, that drew them on, while angels and archangels and all the company of heaven made music. No Church could contain that illimitable congregation of worshippers, who, as they came near to the child, also came near to one another; shepherds and astronomers forgetting their distinctions of creed, race and schooling, in their united reverence for One whom none could discover save as he knelt in humility on the common soil of this planet. How high and noble were their aims as they hurried towards Him! How lowly their demeanor when they found themselves in His Presence!

That was two thousand years ago. How about today? Why tell us the old story when all is new? The answer is that the old never dies. Past, present and future are all part of the one eternity. "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today and forever." We here belong to those who went before us, and to us will belong those who shall come after. * * *

Bethlehem is still the source of profoundest wisdom. Like David, when in difficulty, our statesmen still sigh and ask of their followers, "Oh, that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Bethlehem which is by the gate," and it takes a mighty man of valor to draw that water. Here on my desk lie, side by side, a letter from my wife and a newspaper cutting. The letter tells me that, under the rationing laws of England, my household has had to sign names no fewer than seventy times on various cards. This means that London has to face, even today, the privations of war. What about the newspaper cutting? The printed paragraph says that, with the ink scarcely dry on the armistice, and with London thus under rationing restrictions, the leading Allied and American statesmen are ready to send provisions into Germany, where dwell the most treacherous and cruel foes ever recorded in human history. Surely this suggests a deep draft of water from the well of Bethlehem? Our statesmen order the Kaiser from his throne, and then they are faced by a Greater than He—by the King of Kings, the Lord of Lords, the only Ruler of Princes, who said, "If thine enemy hunger, feed him." Don't feed him only when he becomes your friend—feed him as an enemy. We argue about it—we are irritated by it—we don't understand it—of course we don't. As a Counsellor, this Child born to us is Wonderful—I quote from what Isaiah prophesied—he is Incredible—Unsearchable—no one would have even suggested the mystery of His Wisdom. For He knew what was in man. He realized that few perils are less suspected or more actual than a beaten enemy who is hungry.

Feed the enemy?—I am not surprised at the protests. Yet it is not the judgment of pacifists and dreamers and preachers, but of the most responsible rulers, the hardest fighters, of our time. Do you perceive what they are showing to Germany? After pulling down the anti-Christ, they are, perhaps without knowing it, lifting up the Christ—the anti-Kaiser. Having defended good against evil, they are now overcoming evil with good. Jesus returns to us today, not as a homeless waif in an overcrowded hotel, but in power and great glory as Prince of Peace. Not Advocate of Peace, but Prince of Peace, speaking as one that has authority and not as the scribes. At His feet kings and emperors have to cast their crowns, unable to govern any longer save on His principles. Armies protect us against aggression; they win for us a complete and final victory for justice; but what save Christ will help us against the Bolshevik? We look at the wheels within wheels and imagine that they are omnipotent, but Ezekiel perceived the spirit of life within the wheels. He saw not only the locomotive, but the man who would drive it. Even in a complicated civilization, he knew that the soul of man is ultimately supreme.

* * * Has any man or has any nation lost happiness by bringing gold, frankincense and myrrh, frankly and generously, to the cradle of the Christ? Is it not better to have a little less wealth, a little smaller empire or fleet, if thereby He is honored in all that remains? A century ago England was a small community, much exhausted by twenty-five years of incessant fighting. But she paid one hundred million dollars to liberate her slaves, or more accurately the slaves in her dependencies, and who has ever regretted it? Who would exchange citizenship in the United States which returned the Boxer Indemnity to China in 1902 for citizenship in Prussia which exacted an enormous indemnity from France in 1870? When Christ moves among diplomats, there is a sudden revision of political values.

All of us want peace, but we are not all as ready for good-will. Yet you cannot have one without the other. The Wise Men were much more attentive to relieve the innocent than to punish the guilty. They could have taken up the case against Herod, and assuredly it was a bad case. In essence, it was the case in which Germany stands condemned. Herod, like the Hohenzollerns, massacred the children as the best device for murdering Christ and thus ending forever what Christ means among nations. But the Wise Men went home another way. They refused to be obsessed by the enormities which appalled the conscience of the nations. The people who demand vengeance are always sincere, their emotions are entirely genuine, their indignation is absolutely just; but what God says is that vengeance, however inevitable and righteous, belongs to Him. He will repay. Let us never forget that Christ died for the ungodly. Our business is to help Belgium, and France, and Serbia, and Turkey. The country, to which we as wise men must return after our worship, is any country where the weak need our strength and the wounded our healing.

As I write this I am thinking, not of the men with the Iron Cross, nor of the men with the Victoria Cross, nor the Cross of War, but of the men whose only memorial today, like Christ's, is a cross of wood, which, like His, will soon be lost in oblivion. We say, we rightly say, that, crucified with Him, these men saved civilization, but did they save it alone? They themselves would not have said so; they only claimed that they did their bit. Their sacrifice is thus included in the one supreme sacrifice of Him who died for the world, and what we have to decide is whether the world, for which we are left trustees, shall, in future, be exactly the place that He wants it to be, and nothing else. Only such a world as Christ approves will be worth the price that brave men have paid for it; and if we are satisfied with less, we defraud them. For, as our boys come home, let us not forget—how that word returns to our lips!—that there is a vast army in France and Flanders which will never be demobilized, but will ever stand on guard—the serried lines of just men made perfect, holding eternally their lonely trenches against all that is mean and unlovely in the minds of men.

The world is full of people who sincorely want to do the right thing and are ready to take trouble, but decline the only complete wisdom and power whereby right things can be rightly achieved. We discuss methods. We ask ourselves why this, that and the other failed? We use long words, having lost faith in short ones. The one place that we fight shy of is Bethlehem. It means such a surrender of our pride, such an exposure of our philosophy, to join with shepherds and admit that they hear more of heaven's music than we do.

But let us not be deluded. God rules this world, and intends to have His way, and whatever be our disobedience towards the Babe in the Manger, the Government will none the less be upon His shoulders. Even the Moslems are finding this out. More of them are ruled by Christians than by themselves, and they prefer it. They find that an imperfect regime of love is better for them than a triumphant regime of force. It is not any special virtue in the Englishman that helps him to influence India, or in the American that makes him arbiter of continents other than his own. Queen Victoria said a right and obvious thing when she told the negro chieftains that the Bible is the secret of England's greatness. The nation which reads the Bible most carefully will win the confidence of other nations most assuredly. And America may be that nation.

Just a Babe at Bethlehem! How small, how weak, how tender! No "language but a cry," no faculties save for suffering and sacrifice! The Christian faith is still as young and as fresh as that. It is still only at the beginning. Those who worship are still the few and, on the whole, the despised. The Tree of Life is still a root in a dry ground. The man who wins Christ still enjoys all the pleasures of an unchallenged monopoly. And no one can rob him of his exceeding great reward. But as it was in the inn, so will it be in that man's heart. Either there is no room for the Messiah, or there is no room for anything else. Christ went nowhere without becoming the supreme and central figure, commanding, healing, pardoning, condemning, dying and rising from the tomb. We may live with Him or we may live without Him, but if we live with Him we must be His subjects, and He must be our King. The cleverest men have discovered this, and the simplest men have discovered this, and we, too, must make our choice.

"If, drunk with sight of power, we loose Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe,

Such boastings as the Gentiles use,
Or lesser breeds without the law—
Lord God of hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget—lest we forget!"

ARMENIAN AND SYRIAN RELIEF.

A Proclamation.

For more than three years American philanthropy has been a large factor in keeping alive Armenian, Syrian, Greek and other exiles and refugees of Western Asia.

On two former occasions I have appealed to the American people in behalf of these homeless sufferers, whom the vicissitudes of war and massacre had brought to the extremest need.

The response has been most generous, but now the period of rehabilitation is at hand. Vastly larger sums will be required to restore these once prosperous, but now impoverished, refugees to their former homes than were required merely to sustain life in their desert exile.

It is estimated that about 4,000,000 Armenian, Syrian, Greek and other war sufferers in the Near East will require outside help to sustain them through the winter. Many of them are now hundreds of miles from their homeland. The vast majority of them are helpless women and children, including 400,000 orphans.

The American Committee for Relief in the Near East is appealing for a minimum of $30,000.00 to be subscribed January 12-19, 1919, with which to meet the most urgent needs of these people.

I, therefore, again call upon the people of the United States to make even more generous contributions than they have made heretofore to sustain through the winter months those, who, through no fault of their own, have been left in a starving, shelterless condition, and to help re-establish these ancient and sorely oppressed people in their former homes on a self-supporting basis.

The Presiding Bishop has appointed Bishop Page, of Spokane, to the charge of the Missionary District of Idaho.

Presiding Bishop.

December 8, 1918.

Church War Commission.

The quarterly meeting of the War Commission of the Episcopal Church took place on Tuesday, December 10. Fifteen members were present:

Much of the time was spent in discussing the future of the Commission and the budget with which the Commission would come before the churches. It was decided that the Commission should appeal for $250,000, and that the date of the appeal should be Sunday, February 9.

The following kinds of war work should be financed: Chaplains, Brotherhood of St. Andrew, women's work, social service and communities, summer school of theology, churches in Europe, merchant marine, Diocesan budgets, Church Periodical Club, General War Time Commission of the Churches, overseas work, local office. In every one of these instances appropriations will be made only to aspects of work intimately connected with the war.

The total expenditures for November were $46,624.17.

The Rev. W. H. Mayers has been appointed civilian chaplain at Naval Proving Grounds, Lower Station, Va.

The following civilian chaplains have resigned: The Rev. W. H. Willard-Jones from Camp Perry, the Rev. F. W. Pratt from Fort Bliss, the Rev. G. Sherwood Whitney from Camp Hancock, the Rev. John G. Currier from Camp Colt, the Rev. Harwood Sturtevant from Camp Logan.

Brotherhood of St. Andrew.

For at Least a Year: The Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew is advised from the office of the Chief of Staff in Washington that there will be a million men in the home camps for at least a year. These men will come in large numbers from overseas, and during the slow process of demobilization will be in greater need of service than ever before.

Benjamin F. Finney, Chief Secretary of the Brotherhood's Army and Navy work, states that the Brotherhood's plan is to remain in the field for the coming year at the fullest possible strength. Not only are all the old secretaries to be retained, but new secretaries are being recruited for this work which has called already more than seventy consecrated laymen from secular fields.

The call to laymen to enter this field is imperative. They will be assured of no curtailment of plans for at least a year, and what is to transpire after that year is a matter yet to be worked out.

Christmas Greetings: The Army and Navy Department of the Brotherhood has sent to every Churchman in the service on its lists a Christmas letter and an attractive Christmas card. The card is of celluloid and shows a picture of the Nativity of Our Blessed Saviour, and has the following verse:

On Earth Peace, Good Will Toward Men.

Only through Me! . . . The clear high call comes pealing
Above the thunders of the battle plain;

Only through Me can Life's red wounds find healing;

Only through Me shall earth have peace again.

On the reverse side of the card is a calendar for the coming year.

Personal Service: During the influenza epidemic, that wrought so much havoc in camp and home alike, the secretaries of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew were assigned to very important work, in virtually every camp in the country, by the camp authorities. The personal service program of the Brotherhood was never called upon to better advantage. Every Brotherhood secretary, trained for personal, individual work, found his hands full, and found also opportunity to show other workers the way.

The quarantine regulations forbade gatherings of any sort, and the worker who knew how to swing the crowd was in many instances lost when he was called upon to handle individual cases. Not so the Brotherhood Secretary, this personal work was his forte. In some of the camps the Y. M. C. A. authorities asked the Brotherhood man to direct the hospital work of their secretaries.

Meeting of the Board of Missions.

The regular meeting of the Board of Missions was held in the Church Missions House, New York, on December 11, 1918. As noted last month this was called in extraordinary session to consider the very serious financial situation facing the missionary work of the Church. An unusually large attendance was present. It was noted that the Second, Third, Fifth and Seventh Provinces were represented in their full membership. Of the twenty-three elected by the General Convocation, seventeen were present, including the President and Treasurer.

The order of the day was the consideration of the Treasurer's report. This showed that $556,898.54 is still needed this month to complete the apportionment. In addition to this we will need $281,858.05 to cover the obligations of the Board to January 1st, already incurred. This makes a total of $838,756.59 needed by the Board to close the year free from debt.

This report engaged the most earnest consideration of the Board. The discussion was finally summed up in a resolution offered by the Rev. Dr. Mann, of Boston, that a telegram be sent to each Bishop of this Church, stating the condition of the treasury and urging every possible effort to raise the amount necessary to cover the deficit. In accordance with this action a night letter was sent to every Bishop, as follows:

"Treasurer's report shows eight hundred and thirty-eight thousand dollars required to meet appropriations for the year. Of this deficit five hundred and fifty-six thousand dollars due to failure of Dioceses to meet apportionment and one hundred and ninety-three thousand dollars due to increased rate of Chinese exchange. This wire goes to every Bishop. Will you inform by night letter, at Board's expense, all your parishes, requesting special offerings to be made before January first, perhaps on Christmas Day and transmitted this month to the Treasurer of the Board. Missionary work of Church faces serious conditions and the Board appeals to Bishops to arouse the Church to prompt and generous action.

"For the Board,
"Right Rev. Edwin S. Lines,
"Rev. Alexander Mann,
"Mr. Mortimer Matthews."

The suggestion to use Christmas Day as the time for special offerings for this purpose was made by the Bishop of Albany in view of the fact that the offerings on that day were no longer used especially for aged and infirmed clergy, as heretofore, and no other special offerings were generally scheduled.

The Executive Committee presented a cablegram from Bishop McKim, of Tokyo, endorsed by the Foreign Secretary who is now in Tokyo, asking the authority of the Board to complete an additional wing to the academic building in order to provide enlarged classroom facilities for the students applying for admission to our St. Paul's College in Tokyo. When the present buildings were being planned it was thought that if we had two hundred and fifty students in the course of five years we would be doing well. We have that number already and seventy applicants were turned away when the school opened. The students are all paying for their living, and in addition pay six yen for tuition. In a letter from Dr. Wood he speaks of the beauty, convenience and substantial construction of all the buildings so far erected.

The Executive Committee referred this request to the Board with the statement that it did not see its way at this time to grant permission to build the additional academic wing, in view of the large deficit, the Board was compelled to accept the view of the Executive Committee.

Miss Frances H. Withers presented to the Board her plan for unifying the parochial system of teaching and training the young life of the Church by a week day extension of the Sunday-school. The Board adopted a resolution commending the plan and urging its adoption in parish life.

The death of the Bishop of Idaho on December 1 was reported to the Board, and the following minute adopted by a rising vote:

"Whereas, the Board of Missions has been informed of the death of the Rt. Rev. James Bowen Funsten, D. D., Bishop of the Missionary District of Idaho, in his see city on the night of Sunday, December 1, 1918:

"Resolved, That this Board, in regular meeting assembled, receives this news with those mingled emotions which come to believers in the Life of the World to come, when they learn that a trusted and valiant leader in the battle for righteousness has been suddenly taken from the field of earthly endeavor, while his hold on the standard of advance was still apparently unshaken, and every action betrayed the vigor of good health.

"While we lament what seems to us an interrupted career of good works, at the same time, we thank God for the good example of His faithful soldier and servant who, from the days of his youth in Virginia, until the night when he 'fell in action' in that spiritual combat which under his direction was being carried on in the Commonwealth of Idaho, never faltered, but always went breast forward in the line where duty clearly showed the way.

"Born in 1856, as school boy, collegian and priest, James Funsten lived amid the highest traditions of missionary achievement, so when in 1898 the Church called on him to take the spiritual oversight of the district called 'Boise' (which then included Western Wyoming and Southern Idaho) before he could accept his election, he had to overcome the natural modesty which he felt when he measured up himself with the task that was set before him. In the light of subsequent events, the Board rejoices over the record which the Bishop of Idaho leaves behind him, for it is good testimony to the fact that his election and consecration were of God, the Holy Ghost. Made Bishop in July, 1899, August of that year found him at work with nine clergymen to help him in a field seven hundred by three hundred miles in extent; forty-four church edifices, fifty-seven organized parishes and missions, and eighteen hundred and twenty-five communicants made up his ecclesiastical heritage. On the verge of the twentieth year of his episcopate, he was summoned from the spiritual oversight of twenty-six clergy, sixty parishes and missions, nearly three thousand communicants, and a school and hospital where 'the truth as it is in Jesus' is constantly exemplified and taught.

"Patient, persistent, with a clear vision of evangelical truth, and a firm hold on Apostolic Order, he managed his household well; and all who knew him are sure that though sudden death came to him, it did not find him unprepared in any department of his personal or official life.

"The Board prays God to reward the soul of Bishop Funsten according to his deservings; we invoke the Divine Redeemer to bless the memories of the Bishop's relatives and friends, so that they shall be moved to carry on and carry out to a happy fulfillment all the plans that he had made for the extension of the Church in the State of Idaho.

"We are certain that the comfort and joy which comes from the consideration of a life well spent, must be the blessed heritage of his immediate household, for whose individual and collective consolation we do now pray.

"Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to send a copy of this minute to the family of Bishop Funsten, as an expression of our desire to bear witness to the fellowship we would have with them in their hours of trial."

Mr. Mortimer Matthews, of Cincinnati, offered a resolution asking the Executive Committee to investigate and report what, if any, rural mission stations there may be in the domestic field, so located and circumstanced, as to afford suitable opportunity to try the experiment of providing for such and other rural stations, a partial support, by means of glebe-land, to be worked in whole or in part by the incumbent, and upon which he may reside.

There was a vacancy in the lay representative from the Seventh Province due to the death of Mr. Rufus Cage. On nomination of the President of the Synod of the Province, Mr. A. J. Dossett, of Waco, Texas, was appointed to fill the vacancy and to serve until such time as the Synod should fill the same by election.

January 1, 1919, marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the occupancy of the building of 281 Fourth Avenue, by the Board. It will also mark the retirement from active service of Mr. E. Walter Roberts, who for thirty-four years has served as Assistant Treasurer. The Board assured Mr. Roberts that after his retirement from active service he would still be a welcome guest at the meetings.

Meeting of the Executive Committee.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Missions held its regular meeting on December 10, 1918, with a large attendance.

Among the items of business transacted was the appointment of Miss Lucy N. Carter as United Offering worker among the Indians on the Pyramid Lake Reservation in Nevada, and the appointment of Mrs. Katherine Webster as United Offering worker in East St. Louis, in the Diocese of Springfield. The cancellation of the appointment of Mrs. Lula H. Kelly was requested, owing to her inability to accept the appointment as missionary in the Diocese of South Carolina.

The allowance made to the retired Bishop of Spokane, in accordance with the Canon, was decreased by $300 per annum at the Bishop's own request.

In the Latin American field, the Secretary reported the resignation of Deaconess Claudine Whitaker, Miss Elena Guerra and Miss L. M. Ramsay, of Mexico. Archdeacon Mellen, whose resignation had been accepted as Archdeacon and missionary to date from December 31, 1918, expressed his willingness to continue as Treasurer of Mexico after his resignation had been accepted. The Executive Committee expressed its great appreciation of this act.

The Bishop of Porto Rico was given permission to employ in the field Miss Minnie Palmer as his secretary.

In the foreign field, the resignation of Miss J. E. Prichard as United Offering worker in the District of Hankow was accepted.

In Liberia, the Rev. F. A. K. Russell was employed in the field at Tobacco Station, and Mr. Gibson Montgomery as teacher at the same station. Mr. Samuel P. North was employed as teacher at Royeville, and the Rev. William H. Ramsaur was appointed to Cape Mount.

Owing to the absence in Siberia of Mr. John Reifsnider, the Rev. Charles Reifsnider, LL. D., was appointed Acting Treasurer of the District of Tokyo.

At the request of the Bishop of Honolulu, Miss Laura L. Baugh was appointed to that district. Miss Baugh had been employed in the field. On account of ill-health, the Rev. E. J. Lee and Miss M. A. Hewitt of the District of Anking were compelled to come to this country in anticipation of their regular furlough.

Sister Constance Anna of the Community of the Transfiguration was appointed missionary in the District of Anking, at the request of the Bishop.

The Rev. John C. Ambler, who for twenty-nine years has been one of our faithful missionaries in the District of Kyoto, Japan, was retired, and a suitable allowance provided for his support.

The Executive Committee approved the request of Dr. Harry B. Taylor, of St. James Hospital, in Anking, to ask for an appropriation of $6,275 from the China Medical Board of the Rockefeller Foundation for the purchase of an X-Ray equipment, a small electric light plant, for additional surgical instruments for the hospital, and also for a residence for an additional physician and toward the salary of a woman technician.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. R. A. Gibson, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Coadjutor.

Consecration of St. James Church, Richmond.

Sunday, December the 15th, was indeed a red letter day for the congregation of St. James Church, when they reached the climax of their hopes and prayers in seeing the new church, completed about five and a half years ago, paid for and consecrated to the service of Almighty God.

Founded in 1835, the first building at Fifth and Marshall Streets was completed and occupied in 1837, and consecrated the following year, it being the third Episcopal church in Richmond; the inspiration for its building being what was believed to be the need for an Episcopal Church in the extreme west end of the city.

Here the congregation worshipped and was ministered to by saintly men—Emple, Cummings, Peterkin, Mason and Clark—until the encroachment upon it of stores and market made its environment so bad that it was evident that the very existence of the Church demanded its removal. On the last Sunday of September, 1912, the final service was held in the old church, and on the first Sunday in October the congregation worshipped for the first time in the parish house of the new church. On the 22nd of June, 1913, the first service was held in the new church building, the sermon being preached by the Rt. Rev. George W. Peterkin, of West Virginia, the son of the honored and beloved rector for thirty-seven years. Nor during the years that have intervened between then and this joyous completion of this work has the missionary spirit of the Church in any degree abated; but to missions at home and abroad the contributions have steadily increased. And so, the joy of giving has blessed this congregation, while liberally contributing the money to pay for their new spiritual home.

St. James Church has during its life of more than eighty years had but seven rectors—the Rev. Drs. Emple, Cummings, Peterkin, Mason, Clark, Darst and its present rector, the Rev. G. Freeland Peter, but during its career there have been many notable men among its assistants—the Rev. T. G. Dashiell, the Rt. Rev. George W. Peterkin, the Rev. Mr. Maurv, the Rt. Rev. Robt. Atkinson Gibson, the Rev. H.

St. James Church, Richmond, Va.

B. Lee, the Rt. Rev. James R. Winchester, the Rev. Henry A. Wise, the Rev. D. F. Sprigg, the Rev. George W. Daniel, the Rev. Preston Nash, the Rev. George Sutton, the Rev. Dr. William J. Morton; and its missionary spirit has been manifest in the establishment of a number of churches—St. Phillips (colored), St. Marks, Holy Trinity, and by its fostering care it has aided others, notably St. James the Less of Ashland, Va.

In passing, the Rev. Dr. William Meade Clark in his sermon at the last service in the old church, stated that during the sixteen years of his ministry the church had raised $200,000.00, which it had distributed, considerably less than half having been for the support of the parish.

The church has a large auditorium, and a most attractive chancel, which during the past summer was richly embellished by the installing of a reredos by the Peterkin Guild as a memorial to the Rev. William Meade Clark, D. D., the center panel being a rich carving of the Ascension, the material used being polished black walnut, the panelling around the chancel, choir stalls and prayer stalls being of the same wood. Over the reredos is a handsome memorial window to Mr. John Williams (one of the founders of the church) and his son, Mr. John L. Williams.

The services opened with Holy Communion at 8 A. M. Morning Service, beginning with the Order of Consecration, was at 11 A. M., the Bishop of Virginia, the Rt. Rev. Robert Atkinson Gibson, D. D., being the consecrator. The Bishop and attending Bishops and Clergy proceeded to the front door of the church, where on knocking for admittance, the doors were opened by the senior and junior wardens. The Bishop entered, followed by Bishops Brown, Coadjutor of Virginia, and Lloyd, President of the Board of Missions, and attending Clergy, followed up the aisle by the vestry of the church; the Bishop reading the sentences, the appropriate responses being made by the attendants and congregation.

After entering the chancel, the instrument of donation was read by Dr. J. N. Upshur, register of the vestry. The Bishop then proceeded with the prayers and sentences, followed by the reading of the Sentence of Consecration by the rector, Rev. G. Freeland Peter, as appointed by the Bishop. Morning Prayer then followed, with the Ante Communion, then the hymn, "The Church's One Foundation."

The Rt. Rev. William Cabell Brown was the preacher, the sermon, eloquent and appropriate to the occasion, being from the text, "Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only," that being the inscription around the walls of the chancel. The service closed with the celebration of the Holy Communion. Thus ended a service joyous and inspiring. How appropriate at this time, the war ended, and on the eve of Christmas, when all Christian lands will sing with deepest feeling and emotion the joyous anthem, "Peace on earth, good will to men."

At the night service for missions the joyous spirit of the morning was still to be felt. The Rt. Rev. A. S. Lloyd was the preacher. A full and appreciative congregation greeted him and listened with the most intense interest as he spoke of the "Reconstruction Work of the Church at Home and Abroad Following the War."

And so ended this blessed Sunday. No doubt all who were there, and participated, especially of St. James congregation, felt deeply grateful for participation in its rich and blessed influences.

J. N. U.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. Jos. B. Chesbro, D. D., Bishop.

The yearly statement of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Raleigh, the Rev. C. A. Ashby, rector, showed betterment for the year of $3,168.39, the most of this being Liberty Bonds given on the old church debt. Current expense contributions increased $1,741.54.

The Rev. Mark H. Milne, who recently took charge of St. Luke's Church, Salisbury, is making a most favorable impression there.

Christ Church and the Church of the Good Shepherd both maintained Red Circle club-rooms for the soldiers at Camp Polk, near Raleigh. Two or three times each week parties were given in these rooms, and as many as seven hundred men would attend. The War Work representative stated that the clubs of the Episcopal churches were decidedly the best he had seen in a large experience.

Bishop Cheshire is recovering from an attack of the influenza.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Rt. Rev. W. A. Guerry, D. D., Bishop.

Bishop Guerry is now visiting the war camps near Paris and other parts of France. It is expected that the Bishop will return some time during Lent.

Bishop Reese, of Georgia, is now making visitations in the Diocese of South Carolina. Bishop Darst, of East Carolina, and Bishop Mikell, of Atlanta, will come for similar duty later.

The Rev. Mercer P. Logan, D. D., rector of St. Paul's Church, Charleston, S. C., and Chairman of the Relief Committee of the Charleston Chapter of the Red Cross Society, has been appointed Associate Field Director of Civilian Relief. This appointment was made by the director of the Atlantic Division on Red Cross Work. Dr. Logan has devoted most of his time during the past six months to Red Cross work.

The Rev. H. D. Bull, rector of Christ Church, Charleston, has returned to his parish after an absence of a number of months.

The Rev. William Way, rector of Grace Church, Charleston, has delivered a number of addresses during the past month on "Educational Evenings" at the training camp in the Charleston navy yard. There are over 5,000 young men located in this camp.

The community service conducted under the auspices of the Episcopal churches of Charleston continues to attract great crowds of soldiers and sailors from the camps near the city. The Rev. S. C. Backwith, rector of St. Philip's Church, is in charge of the services.

The Advent Call was observed in every part of the Diocese of South Carolina. Mrs. W. P. Cornell, President of the Auxiliary in the Diocese, organized the movement with wonderful efficiency. The week ended in Charleston with a united communion service in Grace Church Saturday morning, December 7th, with two hundred women present.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop.

Missionary Campaign.

A city-wide Campaign for Missions, which had been in preparation since the summer and was postponed in October because of the influenza epidemic, has just been completed in Mobile, with exceedingly gratifying and encouraging results.

The Rev. Louis G. Wood came November 21st for final preparation and remained over Sunday to assist the Rev. R. W. Patton, D. D., in presenting the campaign in the several pulpits on that day. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday there were conferences and instructions afternoon and evening, and Thursday night a largely attended supper to prepare for the Every-Member Canvass on Sunday. Friday evening was given to the instruction of the canvassers.

The canvass was made on the first Sunday in Advent. The churches taking part were Christ Church, the Rev. Louis G. Tucker, rector; Trinity, the Rev. V. C. McMaster, rector; St. John's and All Saints' and the Church of the Good Shepherd (colored), and in the suburbs, St. Paul's, Whistler; St. Mark's, Toulminville; St. Paul's, Spring Hill, and Grace Chapel, Oakdale. Other churches in the two neighboring counties, at Citronelle, Oak Grove, Bay Minette, Loxley, Robertsedale and Bon Secour participated in the campaign as far as was practicable, but it was found impossible to include their figures in the report.

On the evening of the second Sunday in Advent, a final meeting was held at St. John's Church for reports of results of the canvass. Six clergymen were in the chancel.

Partial returns from the Every-Member Canvass show the following gains over former subscriptions: Parish support, gain of 262 subscribers, $2,078; for missions, 378 subscribers, $2,292.

All Saints' reports canvass unfinished, 25 per cent. of members still to hear from.

St. John's reports canvass unfinished, but a heavy increase.

St. Paul's, Whistler, reports a 300 per cent. increase, but no figures because of illness of treasurer.

Conspicuous features of the report are 120 subscribers among the colored people, all of whom made pledges on both sides of the envelope. Three hundred per cent. increase in amount pledged at St. Paul's, Whistler. Christ Church, the mother parish of Mobile, showed a very large increase, both for the parish and for missions.

As a result of this long-planned-for joint enterprise, the Church in Mobile enters upon its new year with renewed enthusiasm and hopefulness and with deep gratitude to God for the blessings it has brought. The two Secretaries of the Board of Missions did their work admirably, and resolutions of appreciation were adopted at the final week-day meeting.

James F. Plummer.

The Advent Call in Mobile.

A Campaign for the Church's Mission immediately preceded the Week of the Advent Call, and the Rev. Louis G. Wood and Dr. R. W. Patton, of the Church Missions House, each gave excellent counsel for its conduct. Mr. Wood's address was on its spiritual privilege, a field for the peculiar gift of women of fine sympathy, while Dr. Patton gave practical details for carrying out the work, included particularly the noteworthy advice as to courage needed for such spiritual enterprise. "When you are in doubt, do it," he said in regard to the Messengers offering to pray with those whom they visit.

The city was districted and the visiting well organized when the first service was held, a corporate Communion at Christ Church, the mother parish of the city. But it was soon found at the informal conferences, held after the daily celebration at the different churches in turn, that the plans for Intercession had not been so well formulated, and we have missed something of what might have been a great strength to us.

At each celebration the rector gave a charge to the workers, full of hope and confidence in the work, as preparing for the King Who cometh and the inspiring Day of the Lord, now dawning with peace again on earth.

Extension of the work of the Advent Call is planned by beginning with a regular weekly appointment the year round, open to all women for Intercession and Bible-study. And it is also hoped that follow-up work will bring results from the Messengers' visits, in rekindling the flickering loyalty of many to personal, family and public worship.

FLORIDA.

Rt. Rev. E. G. Weed, D. D., Bishop.

The Rev. W. C. Charlton, D. D., rector of St. Andrew's Church, Jacksonville, will become rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Long Island City, N. Y. Dr. Charlton was well known for his work for local and State-wide prohibition.

The debt on the Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, the Rev. M. R. Worsham, rector, has been reduced to $35,000. The expenditures have amounted to over $90,000.

At the Bishop's direction, victory was celebrated in every church in the Diocese with appropriate thanksgiving.

NEW YORK.

Rt. Rev. David H. Greer, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. C. S. Burch, D. D., Suffragan.

Down Town Church Co-Operation.

A victory thanksgiving service, arranged by six down town parishes and held on Sunday afternoon, December 15, filled in every part the great Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory. The parishes were led, it was said at the meeting, by St. George's in planning the demonstration, but heartily joining in it were Grace, St. Mark's, Holy Communion, Calvary and Ascension parishes. The people filling the vast space of the armory, and the vaster galleries, were from these parishes almost wholly, for the occasion was almost unknown beyond their limits. And this at a time when it is charged in some quarters that down town churches in New York are weak and growing weaker.

The presiding officer was George Zabriskie, Esq., of Calvary Church, and Bishop Greer gave the benediction at the close. The speakers were the late Secretary of the Treasury, the Hon. William G. McAdoo and Lieutenant-Colonel Charles W. Whittlesey, late of the American Expeditionary Force in France, the hero of the lost battalion in the Argonne forest. Their addresses were upon war conditions and lessons growing out of those conditions, the relation of the Church to reconstruction, and especially expressions of gratitude for splendid work done by American boys.

There has just been formed by the members of these six parishes a Council of the Associated Parishes, as it is called. It points out that in addition to the rectors there are sixteen assistant clergy, 246 paid workers and 1,286 voluntary workers. There are some 18,000 children in their Sunday-schools, and the list of social activities is so long that it fills a paragraph in the program announcement.

Attention is called in the announcements of the purposes of the new Council in regard to the tremendous and rapid changes in population going on all of the time, and liable at almost any time to leave equipment without people to use it. Churches must meet new conditions with new methods. No mention is made of giving up fields, or of consolidating two parishes, or of hardships incident to the desperate needs and the uncertainties of ways to meet them. It is pointed out, however, that if all parishes study problems together and then co-operate in putting new methods into practice far more successes are likely to be scored, and fewer mistakes to cover up and pay for.

There is mention of neighborliness and co-operation, and also of the large number of social activities not identified with churches, but which have their centers in the same down town communities. At a meeting held within a day or so of the church meeting in the armory the Community Councils of National Defense, its strongest centers in this same down town region, pointed out that 10,000 saloons of New York are almost immediately to close their doors. It is charged that 1,000,000 persons have regarded them as recreation centers, and the Community Council people asked what the churches, what anybody else, proposes to put in their places. The Associated Parishes propose to attack this problem among many others, it says.

MISSOURI.

Rt. Rev. D. S. Tuttle, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. F. F. Johnson, D. D., Coadjutor.

A special committee appointed in the Diocese to secure additional gifts toward the anticipated deficit in the treasury of the Domestic and Foreign Missionary Board has been busily at work and reports good progress. At this writing it looks as if at least $6,000 would be raised toward the emergency call in the Diocese of Missouri. And the indications are good that the Diocese will go over the top this year on its apportionment. It is reported that givings for Diocesan Missions have kept up unusually well, spite of war drives of every kind. The treasurer of the Missionary Board at a recent meeting reported that the condition of the treasury was better than at this time last year, for the reason that offerings had been coming in more steadily and in larger sums.

The St. Louis Clericus was recently treated to a most excellent and thought-compelling paper on "How Shall We Set the Layman at Work in the Church," by the Rev. B. T. Kemerer* of St. George's. The paper aroused much wholesome discussion, which has been made the order of the day for three successive weeks. At one meeting, Mr. Vincent L. Price, a leading business man of the city and an earnest Churchman attended by invitation and participated in the discussion. The Clericus has been entertained at luncheon this month by All Saints parish and by St. Peter's parish.

Mr. Carl W. Minch, Secretary, Treasurer and Choir Director of St. Paul's Church, St. Louis, died in that city on December 10th, after a short illness from the influenza, followed by pneumonia. Mr. Minch was one of the most active of the younger generation of Churchmen in the Diocese, and will be a great loss to the congregation where for so many years he has been a devout worshipper and supporter of all good works done under the auspices of the Church.

A tall flagstaff and beautiful flag were dedicated recently on a Sunday afternoon by the Rev. Carl Reed Taylor at Grace-Holy Cross Mission in North St. Louis. A large assembly of people of the neighborhood participated in the singing of patriotic songs, and an address on the duties and privileges of citizenship in these stirring times was delivered by a leading member of the St. Louis bar. The church and parish house and dispensary of Grace-Holy Cross surround an attractive little park which is also the property of the mission, and the flag will fly in the center of the park. The worship work of this important mission has been seriously handicapped for nearly two months by the influenza ban. But the beneficent work has gone on and increased. The dispensary is proving of unusual benefit to the people in these days of epidemic.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

The Cathedral: On Sunday afternoon, December 15, at the four o'clock service, Mr. Edgar Priest gave his regular monthly recital at the Washington Cathedral. These recitals are given the third Sunday in every month and the seating capacity of the chapel is always taxed to its utmost. The music on Sunday was unusually beautiful, and a real inspiration to all who heard it.

A most charming number was "A Christmas in Sicily," by A. P. Yon. As this was the last recital before Christmas, it seemed most fitting that this number was on the program.

The mass meetings for soldiers and sailors on Sunday afternoon at St. Thomas Church continue to be popular. These meetings, which started in a very small way, have grown to large proportions, largely through the untiring efforts of Mr. J. Harris Franklin, who has led the singing and put much life into the meetings. Mr. Franklin is a grandson of the late Dr. Murdaugh, of Fredericksburg. These meetings have given many delightful afternoons and evenings to men who otherwise might have roamed the streets or been obliged to return to their camps.

Trinity Parish has been taken over by the Diocese and the Cathedral staff will in the future take care of this work. This seems to be a splendid arrangement, as there is a great field for work there and every promise now of great enlargement of the work. A beautiful victory service was held there, in charge of the Cathedral. Bishop DuMoulin was the preacher, and the church was filled to overflowing.

The Rev. David Ransom Covell, rector of Christ Church, navy yard, has been appointed social service secretary of the Diocese of Washington, and has tendered his resignation as pastor of the church. He expects to begin his new work February 1.

It is the hope of Rev. Alfred Harding, Bishop of Washington, to establish a large community house in Washington, where all modern social service activities will have their home. Deaconess Viola Young, of New York, has been called to assist Mr. Covell.

ARKANSAS.

Rt. Rev. Jas. R. Winchester, D. D., Bishop
Rt. Rev. E. W. Saphore, D. D., Suffragan.

Ordination of the Ex-Prince of New Zealand in Arkansas: On St. Andrew's

Day a very unusual event took place in Little Rock, Arkansas, in the ordination to the priesthood of the Rev. Dr. Edward de Claybrook, the Ex-Prince of New Zealand, who is a full blooded Maori. He is the eldest son of the late King Guillermo Eldabo De-Barroarryo (William Edward de Claybrook) and was born in New Zealand on August 5, 1870. At the age of fourteen his father rebelled against the English Government, and being overpowered was taken prisoner and banished to St. Helena, where later he died in the house in which Napoleon passed away.

The entire royal family, consisting of the mother, three brothers and a sister, were exiled and allowed to settle in France. Later the subject of this sketch was sent to the United States by the London Missionary Society and educated at the University of California. From there he went to the Roger Williams College at Nashville, Tenn., where he took his degree of B. A. He returned to England, where he was made Superintendent of Missions by the London Missionary Society, and spent four years in its service in Africa and other fields. Returning to this country he entered the regular ministry of the Baptist denomination and was for four years the pastor of Zion Baptist Church, Denver, Col., the largest colored congregation in the West. In 1900 he accepted a commission as interpreter of five languages in the Philippines, which position he filled for eight years. He then went to Pekin, China, where he acted as Chinese interpreter for two years, and returning again to this country he was called as pastor of the Metropolitan Baptist Church at Kansas City, where he served two years, but on account of poor health he resigned and took charge of the Zion Mission at Vancouver, B. C.

In January, 1917, he came to Arkansas, where Bishop Winchester discovered him and brought him into the Church. He was placed in the care of Archdeacon Johnson, of Little Rock, to prepare for the ministry, and was ordered deacon May 29, 1917, and placed in charge of St. Mary's Church, Hot Springs, Ark., where he worked and studied under the direction of the Rev. Dr. Lloyd.

He was ordained priest at St. Philip's Church, Little Rock, on November 30 by Bishop Winchester, assisted by Bishop Demby, Archdeacon Johnson, the Rev. Samuel E. Wells and the Rev. Walter E. Bentley, rector of the Church of the Ascension, Brooklyn, and temporarily in charge of Christ Church, Little Rock.

The Rev. Mr. De Claybrook received the degree of D. D. from the University of China on May 19, 1908.

A special service of thanksgiving for victory was held on Sunday morning, November 17, in Christ Church, Little Rock, the Rev. Walter E. Bentley, minister-in-charge, the Rev. Samuel E. Wells, vicar.

NEW MEXICO.

Rt. Rev. F. B. Howden, D. D., Bishop.

San Marcial: Recently church services have been revived at Christ Church here. Owing to changes and removal of people in railroad employ, the people interested in our church services had been greatly reduced in numbers. A lay-reader, Mr. Robert N. Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

THE COOK QUESTION.

"The kitchen with its adjuncts may be omitted from the model house of the future."

This is the startling statement with which an article begins in the last number of the Literary Digest.

In view of the fact that in many of our kitchens one very important "adjunct," namely, the 'cook, is already omitted it is worth while to see how we can eliminate the kitchen as well, and we, therefore, quote the rest of the article in the hope that it may "start something":

"In England, the so-called national kitchens established to do community cooking during the great war have proved such a success that many urge that they be continued as a permanent contribution to national health and efficiency in time of peace. Dr. C. W. Saleeby, who takes this view, describes the working of the kitchens in The Graphic (London). They have, he asserts, cut down waste and inefficiency, promoted health and ease of household administration, and are actually helping to increase the birth-rate. Public kitchens have been frequently operated as charities; but this kind of kitchen, Dr. Saleeby points out, is no more a charity than a public water-supply or a postoffice. In the face of their success, it would be as much of a mistake to discontinue them now as it would to resume the private transportation of mail matter, or to substitute wells for the city water works. Writes Dr. Saleeby in substance:

"The establishment of national kitchens in this country, on principles which have been assumed and followed nowhere else, has been so successful, except where those unique principles were departed from, that I submit them to thoughtful students of social and domestic problems throughout the world, in the belief that they will be no less valuable, mutatis mutandis, elsewhere, and without reference at all to the war which has here furnished their occasion.

"In no other sphere of present-day civilized life can be found such waste and inefficiency as are connected with the daily supply and preparation of food. Cooking, further, is not only one of the lower arts, but is a department of applied chemistry. Such being the facts, we usually assume that every properly constituted woman is a 'born cook,' or could be made into all that is needed by a brief course of training. In no other sphere of technique do we make this assumption; in no other do we delegate practically the whole of the problem to small-scale production by amateurs or the half-trained. Yet upon the proper use of food every other activity, personal, social, industrial, national, international, depends.

"Everything that public kitchens have everywhere been in the past ours are not and are not to be. Every one of these kitchens is, and must be, on a sound economic basis. Only on the absolute understanding that the public kitchen is no more a charity than the public water-supply, or drainage-supply, or postoffice, can we eliminate the sentiment that only the poor will go to the kitchen, which the self-respecting accordingly boycott. So long as this sentiment exists the kitchen will be found to fail.

"Seeing that there is nothing to apologize for, and that the enthusiastic support of all classes is essential, the kitchen must not be in a side street, but as well and conveniently and handsomely housed as possible. The mechanical side of the kitchen must be thoroughly equipped. In many instances it will serve the local needs to have a restaurant attached to the kitchen. The greatest success has been attained in large cities by these national restaurants, which also have the advantage of simplifying the financial problems of the kitchens.

"Seeing that the community consists of many kinds of person, with differing dietetic needs, each kitchen should have—and, I am hoping, ere long will have—special departments concerned with the preparation and distribution of the appropriate dietaries for such special classes of the community, as, for instance; expectant and nursing mothers, infants not naturally fed, school children, heavy manual workers. The infant welfare center, the day nursery, the school, public institutions of all kinds whose work includes feeding, will draw from the kitchens as the nutritive centers of the nation."

Kitchens of this kind, Dr. Saleeby points out, are also agents of food conservation, both because the waste of the private kitchen is cut down and also, through the superior digestibility of well-cooked food, by eliminating the less obvious waste in the alimentary canal. The question of fuel is scarcely less important. He goes on:

"For the past eight months, including the coldest and hottest of 1918, I have profited every day by the Kensington National Kitchen, and it has not been the least boon that the expenditure of fuel in the hot months has been minimized, so that one's little flat is cooler and more bearable in sultry weather. But the consideration that transcends all others is the economy which permanent national kitchens are beginning to effect in the vital energies of our working women. As a life-long student of the birth-rate, which is now everywhere indicating to all but the glass-eyed that, as civilization is now going, it is doomed, I submit that to eliminate the perpetual demands of purchasing, preparing and cooking food, and washing the cooking implements, is our only chance of preventing the birth rate from falling to a level which means, in a few generations, racial extinction.

"For decades we have demanded too much of the working class wife and mother. Her achievements under cruel handicaps are a miracle. To-day she finds herself free in two particulars. She need have no more children than she pleases; she can leave her home and earn a good wage at any of half a hundred occupations. What is to become of motherhood and the racial future under such conditions, totally unprecedented in human history? The vital statistics of all civilized countries furnish the answer. At the least, let us ameliorate the home life and increase the prospects of survival and health for children by abolishing the endless and unnecessary demands of the private kitchen."

IT'S COMING FAST.

The ratification of the prohibition amendment to the Constitution by the Florida Legislature, which took place last week, makes the fifteenth State to take favorable action upon this measure.

So far no State has failed to ratify it, and there is little doubt that the necessary thirty-six States will have acted favorably long before the expiration of the present emergency dry legislation which is to remain in effect until complete demobilization, so that there is little likelihood that alcoholic beverages will ever again be manufactured in the United States.

Now, let us take up the fight to make a dry world as well as a dry nation.

Large as this program may seem, it has already been eagerly adopted by an enthusiastic convention which met at Columbus, Ohio, and at which so practical a leader as Governor Whitman, of New York, was one of the principal speakers.

Prohibition for the world, with such areas as the United States, Canada and Russia already practically committed to it, has a much better prospect of fulfillment to-day than prohibition for the nation had fifty years ago.

HOME SERVICE INSTEAD OF CHARITY.

At the demobilization conference in New York City, November 29-30, fears were expressed that after the war the Red Cross would extend its home service to civilian families and oust organized charity. We do not think that there is great danger of this, for we believe that both organizations would be large enough in spirit and heart to co-operate rather than antagonize each other. If such co-operation could bring about two things it would be well worth while. First, it would be a great help to organize charity to get its name changed to Home Service, and secondly, it would be a tremendous advantage if the present enthusiastic support and interest in Red Cross work could be held and transferred to the work now being done by organized charities, simply using the agencies already in the field.

Christmas.

Allica Parker Benton.

Merrily the bells are ringing;
Joyous message they are bringing
Of a manger, rude and lowly,
And an infant, pure and holy;
Of a Mother, tender, sweet,
Paying homage at His feet;
Of the Shepherds from afar
Guided only by a star;
Of their costly gifts of gold,
And the wondrous tale they told.
Let us offer gifts most rare—
Love and service everywhere;
Born a child, and yet a Saviour,
Ruler—King—Emancipator.

O Lord, raise up, we pray Thee, Thy power, and come among us, and with great might succor us; that whereas, through our sins and wickedness, we are sore let and hindered in running the race that is set before us, Thy bountiful grace and mercy may speedily help and deliver us; through the satisfaction of Thy Son our Lord, to Whom, with Thee and the Holy Ghost, be honor and glory, world without end. Amen.

A sunny temper will penetrate the knotty problems of arithmetic as well as those of the wood pile, and will untangle the intricacies of a foreign language or transform a disordered kitchen, better than a sullen one. The cheery disposition is likely to be a part of the victorious character. Popularity may not be a very high recommendation; but, other things being equal, it is better to be popular than grouchy. The grouchy person is most woefully handicapped, and must needs have many excellent qualities before he can hope to rise to equally high esteem with his less gifted but more cheerful comrades.

Real politeness is the kindly expression of a kindly intent. Ill-nature and politeness are antagonistic and cannot dwell together for long in the same individual. Politeness in its genuine essence contributes toward the well-being of all, even to long life; while impoliteness and irascible temper may shorten life.—The Lutheran.

There are other things besides pastry that need shortening. "Ah, say, mister," said the Yorkshire man to the minister, "you preached a goodish sermon to-night; but if it had been cut short at beath ends, and set afire in the middle, it wad a dean us more good."—The Christian.

For the Southern Churchman On Christmas Night.

Roxana Byrd White.

A glistening sheet of white is spread
Beneath the velvet, blue-black sky,
And folds in quiet peace the dead
Who underneath it sleeping lie.
The song by herald angels sung
Has hushed the groan and stilled the sigh

That from their fainting lips were wrung.
Clear in the night and hanging high,
The brilliant eyes of heaven, the stars,
Look down in radiance new to them;
They shine on calm—the end of wars—
They gleam as once on Bethlehem;
They lighten snows unstained and pure,
Not crimson dyed with human blood;
They promise peace that shall endure
The coming of the reign of good,
Not lives poured out to death like wine.
The silenced gun, the sheathed sword,
The coming of the One Divine,
Whose hosts have crushed the cruel horde.

He walks where strife grim havoc wrought,
Blessing the dead; renewing still
The ancient hope the Christ-Child brought
Of peace on earth, to men good will.

His Last Night of Poverty.

Carriell Travis White.

Gaunt, hungry-eyed, he stood looking into the black night. Not a sound, except the wind moaning a lullaby among the palm trees. Anger burned fiercely within him—consumed him. Why were others rich and he poor? He would be poor no longer. This was his last night of poverty. It had been only one week ago that he had heard that Caesar Augustus had decreed the whole world must be taxed. Many would be coming to Bethlehem—all of the house and lineage of David would come—and they would bring shekels with them. But all would not take them away, for he, Barabbas, would have some of them; he would be rich! He laughed gleefully and ran his fingers through his coarse, black, matted hair. He was tired of fishing every day for others to eat; tending flock for others to wear the wool; working that others might live in ease—for what? A living. And of what use was a living if one hadn't time to live?

He thought of his mother, satisfied to live humbly, nursing the sick, given to alms and prayer. He would show her what wealth would do. She should have purple and fine linen.

The road to Bethlehem was filling with travelers. He could hear the feet of their horses from where he hid in the darkness. There were too many now for him to attempt to carry out his purpose, but later—. There was halting near him now a man leading an ass upon which sat a woman. They were a little apart from the highway.

He stalked out of his hiding place and came near. They looked like well-to-do people—from Galilee, probably. He could easily throw the man and seize the bag he carried over his shoulders. The man was giving the woman to eat from a small bag strapped at the side of the ass. Barabbas stealthily crawled back of him, straining his eyes in the darkness. He came on him unawares, and with one deft blow hurled him to the ground and seized the bag. It was heavy, and he knew it was well filled. But in turning to run his glance fell upon the woman. She sat perfectly still, but her eyes were on him. He hesitated, stopped; then he laid down the bag and lifted up the man.

"My name is Joseph, Joseph of Nazareth. I came to be taxed. Did I fall?" the man asked.

"No, I threw you. I meant to steal. Forgive me."

"Go," said Joseph.

And Barabbas turned back to his hiding place with fear in his heart.

He was a fool. Why had he failed? Because a woman had looked at him. Bah, he would try again. He would go down into Bethlehem where the crowds were gathering. He would boldly enter an inn and ask for drink—drink would give him courage.

There were many in the inn, and they drank together. When he came out the streets were deserted. He wandered up and down wearily. The face of the woman was always before him, and his thoughts dwelt on the bag he might have had. He met three men trudging along, as if looking eagerly for something. Every once in a while they would scan the sky with interest. One of them separated himself from the others and came over to him, saying, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" And Barabbas laughed. They, too, must have drunk new wine, he thought. The man went back to the others and they all three gazed again at the sky.

Barabbas did not look at the sky; he hated to look up. The face of the woman always seemed clearer when he looked up. He crept off into a side road back of a clump of trees. Although it was night, it seemed to be getting lighter—too light to rob. He thought he had drunk too much. He would find a place to sleep. He bent low down to hide himself from any passersby and sought a building he saw in the distance. He crawled in the low window and found himself in a stable filled with hay. A big cow slowly turned her head and looked at him; he stretched forth his hand and laid it on the cow's warm back; then huddled down in the straw. Barabbas slept.

He was awakened by a movement under his hands. Sleepily he opened his eyes. The cattle were kneeling. Barabbas thought again, "I have drunk too much wine."

Then there was the sound of faint music in the air, and Barabbas knew it was not the wind among the palm trees; and he knew, too, that this was no dream.

The music became a little clearer, although it was still faint and far away; it was a song he had never heard, and soon it filled the stable with melody. There seemed to be a multitude of voices singing—"Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will toward men, good-will toward men."

Then the air was filled with an odor, pungent and exhilarating. Barabbas drank it in exultingly. It was the odor of frankincense and myrrh. A great light, as the light of many stars, filled the stable. The lights, the music, the incense, had made what was once he thought an humble stable seem like a holy temple.

He raised himself slowly and gazed. Over at the door were shepherds with wondering faces. The three men he had met were kneeling before a manger. The one that had asked him "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" was lifting high over his head precious gifts. In the background he saw the man who had called himself Joseph, and bending over the Child was the woman who rode on the ass. And her face wore the same look, and her eyes gazed in adoration—the adoration of the mother for her First Born, which lay in swaddling clothes in the manger.

Barabbas raised himself higher that he might look upon the manger. And looking, he beheld the Christ, and beholding, his heart was cleansed from sin and his lips took up the refrain—"Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good-will to men."

And he thought not more of robbing to gain earthly wealth, for to him had been revealed the Unspeakable Gift of God.

A Christmas Message.

Anna B. Bensel.

In the quiet joy of the holy season

My thoughts go forth to you,
Whose heart is yearning in tender sadness

For the boyish face you knew.

And my mind goes back to a fair young Mother

Who lay among cattle mild
On a heap of straw in a stable gloomy,
And looked on her Holy Child.

She has known the pangs your own heart beareth,

But her anguish you have not borne,
For she saw her Son on the Cross up-raised;
His brow by the thorn-wreath torn.

A wonderful gift God sent to you
When your own fair child was laid
In your mother-arms. Did your thoughts go there
To Bethlehem's Holy Maid?

Ah! the little lad that you treasured so
Had a soul too pure and sweet
To tread the ways that are steep to go
And rough for the tender feet.

God gives you now a radiant crown
Through tears of sorrow won,
For you have a child in the Court of Light
By the side of the Holy One.

I think you know that your life is blest
In the priceless treasure given.
You have not lost your child, but gained
A closer link with heaven.

The Great Christmas Gift.

The gift of Christ to the world is an unspeakable gift. All the gifts of God are good, but here is one which in its intrinsic value and the importance of its bearings infinitely transcends them all. Without exaggeration, we can say it is "unspeakable." "Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift!"

A writer has told us about a teacher in Alaska who took one of her pupils, a bright and talented girl, to do some sketching. As the afternoon waned the western sky glowed with a marvelous mass of color. "Try to paint that sunset," said the teacher. The girl looked at the sky and replied, "I cannot paint glory."

If God had merely given us His Son in order to show us the beautiful life, and had called upon us to imitate Him, we might have answered, like the girl, "I cannot imitate glory." But the gift of God is a transforming gift. It enters into us, becomes a part of our deepest being, and lives through us. God has not only given His Son to the world, once for all; He gives Him to each one of us all the time. So when we open our hearts to receive Him, He begins to make us like Himself.

It is an unspeakable work Christ does for us. It is also an unspeakable work He does in us. Christ, the Christmas Christ, is God's best gift to man. He is the pearl of great price. In Him are laid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge and grace. His riches are unsearchable. In Him dwells all the fullness of God. In giving Christ, therefore, God has given us Himself and all He has. The gift is unspeakably great and unspeakably valuable to us.

Most gifts can be weighed or measured, analyzed or fully tested; therefore they are not unspeakable gifts. They can be estimated in value pecuniarily, or as beauty, utility, or stored-up force. Love can make a little thing great, and the heart of the giver, except the recipient be in direst need, is worth more than the gift. But Christ as a gift! Who shall describe it, who shall estimate it, who shall measure it, or weigh it; who shall dare to analyze it? "Thanks be unto God for His unspeakable gift!"

In many countries the birth of the king's son is a signal for the pardon of criminals, the opening of the palace to all, and the giving of great benefits to the people. So Christmas is the symbol of the mercy of God to sinners, of free entrance into eternal mansions offered to each, and of the gift of everlasting joy given to all who will receive it.

In the Metropolitan Museum of Art, in New York, there is a picture of L'Hermite, called "Among the Lowly." A man of singularly beautiful and benign countenance stands, with hands uplifted in blessing, at the table of a peasant's family. In the door stands the head of the household, who has just returned from his day's labor, holding in his arms his youngest child, who has evidently run out to meet him. In seeing the Man at the table, he uncovers and stands in an attitude of devotion. In view of what the Carpenter of Nazareth has done for the workman and his household, this should be the posture of the handicraftsmen of the world today. May this blessed Christmas season find men everywhere bowing in reverence to Christ—the Friend of the lowly—yea, the friend of all people. And they need Him—how much the people of this war-worn, worn-torn world need the Christ!—Rev. G. B. F. Hallock, D. D.

Christmas in Virginia in 1864.

Christmas Day, 1864, was the Confederate Christmas par excellence. Outside supplies of all kinds had disappeared, and whatever comforts were provided were of home manufacture. The Confederate dollar was now worth just two cents in gold, and flour was $500 a barrel; sugar was $30 a pound; salt, $1; butter, $40; and beef, $24 to $40 a pound. Wood at $100 a cord and coal was not to be had, save in a few of the cities, owing to scarcity of transportation. The day was Sunday, which in itself would have tempered the usual merriment.

At a country residence below Richmond, and not far from the lines of the contending armies, a party of seven—ladies and gentlemen all in the strictest Southern sense of the term—were assembled at dinner. The mansion had been proverbial for its hospitality before the war; now the welcome was as cordial as ever, but the board was spread in accordance with the necessities of the time. At the head of the table was placed a large ham, worth $300; at the foot was the last turkey the farm could boast, worth $175. The vegetables consisted of cabbage, potatoes and hominy, worth at a reasonable calculation $100. Corn-bread was served, flour having been unknown in this house for months. The meal of which it was made was worth $80 a bushel and the salt that seasoned it $10 a pound.

Dessert there was none, but in its place the hostess provided a coarse black molasses, worth $60 a gallon. The same kind lady, as a rare treat for her guests, brought out with a glow of pride a steaming urn of real—not sassafras—tea, $100 a pound, at the same time warning the company that they must expect but one cup apiece, as this was the last of her store. After this there was “coffee” made from sweet potatoes cut into little bits, toasted brown and ground to powder.

Such was a Confederate Christmas dinner in the last winter of the war. From this superb repast the scale descended to army rations—a bit of salt pork, corn-bread and sweet potato coffee without sugar. The company consisted of three ladies and four gentlemen. The ladies’ toilets the writer cannot venture to describe, but they were largely made up of “home-made” articles in the fashion prevailing at the beginning of the war. The tresses of one were fastened with “Confederate hair pins,” made of long black thorns with the heads tipped with sealing wax and the dress was of simple homespun. —Baltimore American.

A Christmas Prayer.

At Christmas-time the garnered fields are white,
And every roof and haystack all bedight
With snowy splendor, while afar on high
The cawing crows sail black across the sky,
Mourning for Summer's store and generous days gone by.

Who heeds? Behold, we deck the church and hall
With clustering holly, coral-branched and tall,
With balsam-breathing pine, and hemlock
bright,
And where the Yule log flings its dancing light
We tell the old-world tales of love, and field, and fight.

We give and we are given! We pile the board
With plenteous viands of Earth's harvest stored,
And 'mid the lilting laughter and the glow
We sing a tender carol, soft and slow,
And kiss our own once more, beneath the mistletoe.

Such is our Christmas. But, O God of all,
Bid us to heed thy lowliest creature's
call.
To crown with blessing heads grief-bowed and low,
Give of our plenty to the wide world's woe,
That cruel need may cease, and brother's love may grow.

Let no heart go uncomforted today.
May children, loss-forgetting, still be gay.
As thou hast given us peace, give peace
to all!
Bid carnage cease, and war's red banner fall!
So shall we keep once more our Lord
Christ's Festival.

The Worshippers.

When Jesus came to Bethlehem,
To Judah's captive land,
There came to worship at his bed
A wondering shepherd band.
I wish I'd been a shepherd then;
How swiftly had I sped,
Through Bethlehem's dark and silent street
Unto the cattle shed.
And then, when many waited by,
And stars were bright above,
I'd kneel by the infant Jesus then
And tell Him of my love.

When Jesus came to Bethlehem
So many years ago,
The wise men journeyed from afar
To bow before Him low.
Rich gifts they brought the new-born
King
Of gold and spices rare.
I wish that I'd been one of them
To kneel before Him there.
Then all the treasures that I had
All gladly had I brought
To lay them down before the feet
Of Jesus whom I sought.

We cannot find in Bethlehem
Our new-born Saviour King.
Nor yet unto the manger bed
Can we our tribute bring.
But better gifts than frankincense,
Or myrrh, or even gold.
Can we unto the Saviour yield,
Messiah long foretold.
So unto Him, who years ago
In manger cradle lay,
We'll give with joy our loving hearts
This happy Christmas Day.

For the Southern Churchman. The Song of the Christmas Harp.

Eugenie Du Maurier.

A long time ago, among the shepherds who saw the angels on the first Christmas night, there was a youth who loved music with all his heart. And he longed to be able to express the sweet melody that was in his soul. But he could not. He had a harp. And he often tried to play on it. But his clumsy fingers only made discords. And his companions laughed at him and mocked him and called him foolish because he would not give it up, but would rather sit apart by himself, with his arms lovingly clasping his harp, his eyes gazing into the sky, while the other shepherds gathered round the fire and told tales to pass away their long night vigils as they watched their sheep on the hillsides. But to the young shepherd the thoughts that came out of the great silence were far sweeter than his 'companions' mirth. And he never gave up the hope, which many times left his lips as a prayer, that some day he might be able to express those thoughts in sweet music to the tired, weary, forgetful world.

On the first Christmas night he was out with his fellow-shepherds on the hills. It was chilly and dark. And all except him were glad to gather round the fire. He sat as usual by himself with his harp on his knee. And there was a great longing in his heart. Suddenly there came a marvelous light in the sky. It shone over the hills, as if the darkness of the night had suddenly blossomed into a wonderful meadow of flowery flame. And all the shepherds saw a host of angels and heard them singing a marvelously beautiful song: "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, goodwill to men! For unto you is born a King." And as they sang, the harp that the young shepherd held began to play the same strains very softly, as his fingers moved without his volition over the strings.

And as the young shepherd realized that it was playing the same music that the angels sang, he was glad that all his secret longings and aspirations and strivings were expressed in the accompaniment of his beloved harp.

From that first Christmas night, whenever the young shepherd took his harp in his hands, it played the same music. And he wandered all over the world carrying it. Wherever the sound of its music was heard, hate and discord fled away. And peace and goodwill reigned. No one could feel hopeless or despairing or bitter or angry under the influence of the harp's sweet tones. When anybody had once heard that music it entered into his soul and heart and life and became a part of him forever.

Years went by. The shepherd grew old and bent and feeble. But still he roamed over land and sea that his harp might carry the message of that first Christmas night and the angel song to all mankind. At last his strength failed him entirely, and he fell by the wayside in the darkness. But his harp played as his spirit was passing away.
And it seemed to the shepherd that a shining one stood by him, with a wonderfully beautiful face and lovely starry eyes, and said to him: "Lo, the music thou hast played for so many years has been but the echo of the love and sympathy and purity and beauty in thine own soul. And if at any time in thy wanderings thou hadst opened the door of that soul to evil or envy or selfishness, thy harp would have ceased to play. Now thy earthly life is ended. But what thou hast given to mankind will never end. And as long as the world lasts, so long will the heavenly music of the Christmas harp ring in the ears of men."

Baby's Christmas.

Glad Christmas has come, little darling,
for thee!
The first one of many, God grant you may see!

A baby like you, the Christ-Child once lay
In His sweet mother's arms, that first Christmas day!

He came that glad day to walk the true
road,
That leadeth through earth up to heaven and God.

God plant your firm steps, through life
in that road
On, on, with the Christ-Child, up to heaven and God!

In the deepest night of trouble and sorrow God gives us so much to be thankful for that we need never cease our singing.—Coleridge.

A Lesson From the Manger.

When Jesus left His heavenly throne
A babe on earth to be,
He chose a manger for His birth
In great humility.

No room might that sweet mother find
In all the crowded inn
For her dear babe, who came to save
The world from death and sin.

Ah, chill and bitter was the night!
Sore spent the mother lay
Her Holy Babe in peaceful rest
Upon a bed of hay.

The dumb beasts, with their patient eyes,
Upon Him wondering gazed;
Almost they felt His majesty
And trembled sore amazed.

Yet still the tender love they knew
Of Him who nestled there;
And nearer drew in reverence meted
Around the blessed pair.

Their rugged coats, their warm soft breath,
Brought cheer that chilly night
To Him who lay in lowly guise
Beneath the lantern's light.

His baby eyes looked lovingly
On these His creature kind,
The Prince of David's royal race
No lordly hosts may find.

They gave to Him, as still they give
To us, their humble best,
These dumb friends of the gentle
Christ—
By burdens sore distressed.

Their patient backs still bend beneath
The crushing weight of toil,
Still win for us on countless fields
The blessings of the soil.

On gory plains of war they strive
Unmindful of grim fate;
How strong their voiceless woes make plea
To hearts compassionate!

All are His own, no sparrow falls
Without His tender care—
"The cattle on a thousand hills
Are mine," His words declare.

So must we love them, as He loves
His creatures great and small,
And loving and remembering find
The Christ in each and all.

Animals*.

Amelia's Christmas Sacrifice.

Thomas Richard Waring, Jr.

"Just think, mother, only one week before Christmas; isn't that grand?"
These words of joy came from the mouth of a dear little light-haired girl who sat in the bay window of the drawing-room.

"Why yes, dear, I have realized that,
and I have thought of the kind of Christmas those little French children and little Belgian children will have," said her mother, who was sitting before the grate in the farther end of the room.

But before we listen any more to this conversation, let me explain who this little girl was. She was the daughter of a man of good business, who could give his family, not luxuries, but the comforts of life. This little girl's name is Amelia Dix. She is ten years old, and I must say with regret that she is inclined to be a little selfish.
But you little folk will see how mean and hateful selfish little girls (and boys too) can be, and I know that none of you will ever be anything but loving, sweet and kind.

Returning to the little sitting-room,
we find Amelia has gotten up from her seat in the bay window and has gone over to talk to her mother. "Oh, mother, dear, don't worry yourself about them; why, they will have good things now; the war is over, isn't it?"

"Yes, my darling, but you must realize that war has done its worst for those poor little children, and I am afraid they will have a very sad Christmas indeed."

Amelia did not pay much attention to these words, for she was too busy putting on her coat and hat to go.
She gave her mother a kiss and ran out to play with some schoolmates who were waiting outside for her.

I don't know exactly what could have been said between Amelia and her schoolmates, but when she came back she was quite a different little girl from what she had been when she left;
her face was subdued and her whole manner was altogether changed. Closing the door softly behind her, she went up to her mother and said:

"Mother, you were right. Those poor little children will not have a merry Christmas, and many another person will not either. I was wrong in thinking only of my pleasure. And I will see that one French child has a happy
Christmas."

In the next two or three days Amelia was very busy, and about the third or fourth day a package left her house addressed to France. And that Christmas Amelia did not have her doll three feet high and a tea set and many other precious things, but instead a French orphan was made happy by Amelia's sacrifice. And so as we draw near the glorious day of days, let us, too, make some kind of sacrifice; it does not have to be like Amelia's sacrifice, but just a prayer for those whose hearts have been pierced by the hand of cruel Germany. Let us think of the mothers whose hearts can never be mended again, and pray God to give them strength to bear their sorrow, and never to let such a cruel war come again to this earth.

A Christmas Carol.

Listen to the joyous ringing
Of the merry Christmas bells.
Listen to the old sweet story
That their glad some chiming tells.

Long ago in far Judea
Was a little baby born,
And we celebrate His coming
On this happy Christmas morn.

Sing the song of peace and gladness
That was sung by angels then,
"Glory be to God in the Highest,
Peace on earth, good-will to men."

Glory and Goodness.

A Christmas Tale.

There were just two of them—Freddie and Winnie—or perhaps should say Winnie and Freddie—for ladies come first. But she was a very little lady as yet, being only six years old.

And now they were sitting by the fire, or rather Winnie was—sitting very prim and proper in a little cane chair;
but Freddie was lying on the rug, half curled round. Like a dog.

They had been very quiet for a time, for they had said almost all that could be said about the picture-book and the Noah's Ark, and the soldiers who could have their heads turned in a moment, and their arms pushed up or down,

and who always wore the same smile whether they stood on their feet or were shot down, as true soldiers should;
and they hadn't found anything fresh to say about what they were going to do next day, and what Winnie was going to wear; for next day was Christmas, when little ladies have a deal of thinking to do about their dress. So they were quiet, quiet for such a time!
—full five minutes by the clock, looking into the fire and seeing many, many a wonder there.

"I say, Winnie," said Freddie, in his drawing way, as if he were speaking in a dream; "do you know what 'the glory of the Lord' is? Jane says the shepherds saw it, for 'the glory of the Lord shone round about them.' I don't understand it."

"Don't you?" said Winnie in a matter-of-fact, indifferent way; "then it is time you did. You are eight years old now," she added severely; "and if you don't understand things now, when will you?" That was a little hard upon Freddie, but he didn't seem to mind it. I fancy he had heard something of the kind often before.

"But what was it, Winnie?" he repeated in his dreamy fashion. "Was it a big light, do you think?"

"Of course it was," she said decidedly, as if she had been there and knew all about it; "it was the light of God."

"But what kind of light was that, Winnie?" and he now turned his head and looked eagerly at her as he spoke;
"that's just what I can't make out, for teacher says that Jesus is the Light of the World."

"To be sure He is," said Winnie,
"and if you grow up good, and love
Him and pray, He will make His light shine round you too; but isn't it time you were off to auntie's?"

That had really nothing to do with it, but you see, Winnie was a wise little woman, and knew when to change the subject as soon as it became difficult, and then Freddie had to go to auntie's to bring home something mother wanted. So he got up and wriggled into his jacket (the blue one with the brass buttons), and managed to put his cap on so that it just wouldn't fall off, and then slammed the door.
He couldn't help slamming it, because he was a boy.

But, as you will have guessed, he was rather a thoughtful kind of boy, and he had a good deal to think about now, for he hadn't quite made up his mind about that glory of the Lord that shone round about. It must have been a light; he was satisfied of that,
for Winnie had said so; but he knew,
too, that there was a glory in being good, and a glory in being brave, and a glory in being kind, and he couldn't see how that kind of glory could ever shine like a light. It was a bit difficult to make out, so it is no wonder he didn't notice where he was going, till, after walking on and on and on,
he found he had lost his way. And then, what was worse than all, the fog came on. It had been grey and misty all the morning, but now it grew darker and darker, till he could hardly see a yard ahead of him. He had better not go on, he thought; he had better get home again, or they would be frightened about him. So he turned round and walked on and on, feeling quite safe now, for hadn't he turned round? Then he began dreaming and thinking about that glory again, till he found he couldn't go any further.
There was a wall before him and trees all around, and he could tell by the beds and borders at his feet that he had wandered into a garden. He tried to get out as fast as he could, but only found himself at the back of a great house which had all the windows up above brightly lighted, while the lower ones had just light enough to let him dimly see a great hall with a long table laid out with beautiful things of silver and gold, but with no one there. Up above he could hear them laughing and cheering, as if there was a big party there.

Suddenly he heard something moving close beside him, and it gave him such a start! He listened again, but all was silent; and then heard something, like a man breathing very hard. Poor Freddie! he couldn't run—it was too dark for that—but he did what he had always done in his troubles. Dear little man, he went down on his knees and folded his hands and prayed—"Lord Jesus, it is very dark, and I don't know my way: let the glory of the Lord shine round about me"—and when he opened his eyes there was such a bright, strong light beaming all about him! But it faded away in a moment, for it was only a servant-man turning up the gas and lowering it again when he had found what he wanted.

Freddie crept about and crept about till he found the gate by which he had entered, and had the firm, hard pavement under his feet again. How he hurried along!—on and on and on, he didn't know where, only he thought he must be going home, for hadn't he turned round on purpose?

At last, high up through the fog and the darkness, he saw such a great, far-spreading light shining from a building that looked like a palace, with walls and roof of glass. Such a light he had never seen before; it was brighter than lamps, brighter than gas, bright as the sun, and yet not like it. The gate of the palace was open, and Freddie went in.

What a sight! A great round building, filled with the roar of machinery, the clashing of hammers and dashing of sparks, with fiery furnaces here and there, and half-naked men, like grim giants, moving about with red-hot bars of steel! And the whole place was flooded with light, the blue-white light that came from the great lamps hung high in the air. Freddie was lost in wonder; could this be the light that shone round them? While he was staring at it a strong hand was laid on his shoulder, and a large man was looking down upon him.

"Well, little 'un, what do you want?"

"If you please, sir," asked Freddie, in his simple, honest way, "is that the glory that shone round about them?"

"The what?" asked the giant.

"The glory," said Freddie; "the shepherds saw it, you know, on Bethlehem—the glory of the Lord shone round about them." Is that it?"

The big man with the wild curly hair looked steadily into the little fellow's face for a moment, and then, quick as a thought, whisked him up in his arms as lightly as you would lift a feather, and without another word marched off with him toward one of the furnaces. But, strange to say, Freddie wasn't a bit afraid; there was something so kind about the face of this giant.

"What have you got there, Bill?" man after man shouted, as Bill strode along with the boy in his arms.

"An angel," he cried, "an angel; you come round here and have a look at him!" and he stood Freddie on a high bench where the light was strongest. A little crowd of men was soon round about, chaffing and laughing, and expecting some fun. Bill didn't seem to notice them for a time; he kept pushing his fingers through his curly hair and scratching his head as if he had got an idea or two that needed waking up.

"Don't you be afeard, little 'un," he said at length, "but speak up bold and free, and ask these gents just what you asked me—about the light, you know."

Freddie was a little shy, yet he spoke up—

"If you please, is that the light that shone round the shepherds at Bethlehem?"

"That's it," said Bill, chuckling, "Bethlehem! You know about Bethlehem, my lads," he said, turning to the men; "you learnt something about it at Sunday school, and you ain't forgotten it neither, though you've forgot a good deal you got there. He's straight from Bethlehem, this little 'un is—and ain't he an angel! He is an angel, I can tell you, for he's come just as an angel should in the thick o' time, to help me out of a difficulty, and help you to do a good turn. There's Ben Wiggan, as good a mate as ever we had among us, and never a stroke o' work has he been able to do these months with his asthma; and I know as his wife and kids is starvin', and I thought what a shame if we couldn't give them a lift. But I didn't know how to get at you, my lads, and we knock off work tonight, and it'll be a bit rough upon Ben if Christmas comes and there's nothing to give the children. And just as I was a-botherin' over it, if this little angel shouldn't come walking in and ask about the light on Bethlehem! Then I got a notion. Look here, little 'un," he said, turning to Freddie, "I want you to do me a favor. Take off your cap, if you please, and hold it out. Now, my lads, who'll give something for poor Ben Wiggan? There's my lot first," and he cast some silver coins into the boy's cap.

"Bravo, Bill," cried the men, while a giant shouted, "Bring your angel round," and Freddie was lifted down and walked among the men, while man after man put something into his cap, many of them patting the fair head of the boy as he passed along. Round and round the works they went—big Bill and little Freddie—followed by a group. In the end the boy's cap was filled with silver and copper, two tobacco boxes, a Meerschaum pipe, a silver chain that was broken, and a brand new breast-pin.

"Let's finish this job at once," said Bill. "Let's make a depyttation and go round to Ben's now."

Two men were appointed to go with Bill and Freddie, and off they went just as they were. They knew their way even in the fog; it was only a little distance, and they knocked at a door.

It was opened by a thin, pale-faced woman, holding a small lamp in her hand.

"Oh, it's you, Bill? Come in—and take care of the step. But who is this you have with you?" she asked, as she saw Freddie.

"That's my angel!" said Bill, with a grin; "my Christmas angel; and I want Ben to have a look at him."

The woman led the way, and the four followed, the last man gently closing the door. (He didn't slam it, not being a boy.)

It was a poor kitchen, with only a morsel of fire, and a tall, thin man sitting bowed before it.

"A merry Christmas to you, Ben," said Bill, in his hearty way, "and I hope as the asthma's better."

The man looked up with such a sad, sad, weary face, and great, hollow eyes.

"We've had many a better Christmas than this, old man, but I'm glad to see you all the same, though I haven't a chair to offer you."

"And we couldn't sit down if we wanted, for we must get back to the works; but I've a curiosity here to show you—a real live angel, fresh from Bethlehem!"—and he put Freddie forward where the light fell full upon him.

How Ben started!—sprung to his feet—looked hard again at the boy—gave such a frightened, suspicious, despairing glance at the men around—and then sank down on his seat and buried his face in his hands.

Bill looked puzzled for a moment, and then said—

"Don't be afeard of him, Ben; he's quite tame for an angel and won't hurt you. You see, it's like this"—and he told all the story of how they came to be there.

While he was speaking the man had slowly lifted his face again, and was looking hard at Freddie, while the big tears came rolling down his cheeks.

"Wasn't you at Mr. Gurney's house this afternoon?" he asked.

"I don't know Mr. Gurney's house," said Freddie.

"A big house, with a garden. Didn't you kneel down there and pray for the glory of God to shine round about you?"

"Yes, I did pray beside a big house when I had lost my way. Was you there, sir?"

"Yes, I was there," said the man slowly. "God forgive me, I was there. I could have touched you with my hand when you was praying. I was driven to it, mates," he said, lifting his head, half fiercely; "I couldn't stand it no longer. To see wife and children get weaker and thinner and whiter day by day for want of food. I couldn't stand it. I had lived honest all my life, and tried to stand it with God, fair and square, as a true man should, but I forgot Him today, and forgot myself, and I went out to steal. I knew Mr. Gurney had company, and I thought while they were upstairs I could lay my hand on something below, and I hid in the shrubbery, and in another minute I would have been a thief and a robber, but this little fellow came and prayed beside me. I couldn't do it—no, I couldn't do it after that. And to think I should see him again, and see him like this!" and the poor, hungry man broke down and cried like a child.

His wife stood white and pale at what she heard, and the big men were silent because of something in their throats.

"Here, Missus," said Bill, after a pause, "spread out your apron, if you please, and hold hard. Now then, little angel, pour your cap into that. There's something will make a bright Christmas for you, and a Happy New Year besides."

Then laying his hand gently on Ben's shoulder, he said:

"You've got to stand in with the Lord yet, my lad. He's got His angels for us still, you see, when things is at the worst; and, maybe, this little 'un will say that prayer again for us all."

And Freddie did it. He knelt down while the big men stood about him with their heads bent low.

"Dear God," he prayed, "make the glory of the Lord shine round about us for ever and ever. Amen."

Bill went home with Freddie—after he had returned to the works and washed his face, and tried to straighten

THRIFT Pays the Bills

This world is full of bills. The grocer sends them, the butcher, the baker, the coal man, the ice man and the tailor.

his wild curly hair, and put on his jacket—and explained all about it to Freddie's mother. But when Freddie and Winnie talked it all over again, Freddie didn't need to ask any more what the glory of the Lord meant. He had his own ideas about it now. He had found out that God hears prayer wherever we are, and that God makes great, great use of us, though we may not know it, as long as we are trying to be like Jesus, and that God puts kind thoughts into people's hearts—and all that is His glory—and He can make His glory shine round about a boy or a girl as well as round a man or a woman; for, if only we are good, we are bound to do good, though we may not see how at the time, and so we can't but be like His angels here—to give "Glory to God in the highest," and spread "peace and good-will among men."—Mission Herald.

JOHN CAMPBELL BERKELEY.

JOHN CAMPBELL BERKELEY, born May 4, 1891, son of N. William and Linda Wood Berkeley; baptized by Rev. George W. Dame, D. D., rector of Epiphany Church, Danville, Va., December 13, 1891; God-parents John L. Berkeley and Mrs. Jean S. Venable; confirmed in Epiphany Church March 17, 1907, by Rt. Rev. A. M. Randolph, D. D., in a class of twenty-three presented by Rev. J. Cleveland Hall, the rector of the parish; entered into life eternal October 11, 1918, dying of pneumonia in the twenty-seventh year of his age, while in the service of the United States in France, as a member of Company F, 304th U. S. Corps of Engineers. On December 23 his parents received word from the War Department that John Campbell Berkeley had died of pneumonia, "Somewhere in France."

There were no particulars given, as to hospital, length of sickness or place; just that: "died of pneumonia on October 11th."

But to the writer some things are as clear concerning Campbell Berkeley's "passing" as if all was set down in the government's committal record.

As his pastor and friend since his childhood, the writer had such intimate acquaintance and knowledge of his character, ambitions and desires, as gave him unbounded admiration for his quiet self-possession, his broad-minded view of life, and his ready courage. He was clean all through; a Christian gentleman; a naturally disciplined soldier, modest and unafraid.

While his large circle of friends and kin-people may regret in their sorrow that if he was to fall it was not upon the battle field of active duty, knowing that this would have been his choice, yet those who best knew him know also that to the last his courage never faltered and that if he were conscious when the call came, Campbell Berkeley met it with a smile.

In memory of a loving friendship which has been a strength to me, his pastor, for many years, I am constrained to write this in sincere appreciation.

A brave soldier of Virginia has gone to meet a soldier's reward, promotion to high rank in the armies of the Prince Emanuel whom he loved with trust and confidence and to whose service he was consecrated.

THE REV. DALLAS TUCKER.

The death of the REV. DALLAS TUCKER, at Charles Town, W. Va., on the 29th of November, though not unexpected, brings sorrow to many who knew and loved him.

Mr. Tucker was the grandson of George N. Dallas, Vice-President of the United States and Minister to Russia and to Great Britain, and the grandson of Judge Henry St. George Tucker, President of the Court of Appeals of Virginia. He was descended from families whose ideal of life was that of service. As a young man in Richmond he gave himself to mission work in what was then a neglected part of the city. He was soon conscripted into the ministry of the Church by love to Christ and his fellowmen. He served first at Christ Church, Richmond; afterwards at Wooster, Ohio, then at the Church of Our Saviour in Philadelphia.

For ten years he was rector of Zion Church, Charles Town, and after efficient service in Southern Virginia at Bedford and Bristol, he finished his active ministry at Hilton, W. Va. Wherever he went he took with him high ideals of life and service, and gave himself unstintedly to his ministry. A faithful pastor, a strong and helpful preacher, an ardent and zealous worker in the Diocese, his work, whenever he served, was marked by definite results.

With a kindly gift of humor, with a charming personality, and above all, with a life hid with Christ in God, he made his way into the hearts of his people.

He lived so he died, in intimate touch with Christ, going to his rest with unclouded faith and unflinching trust in his Father and his God. May God comfort those who mourn, and may He bless to the Church the memory of the consecrated life of this His servant.

Angel Heralds of the Christ.

O lovely voices of the sky,
That hymned the Saviour's birth!
Are ye not singing still on high,
Ye that sang, "Peace on earth"?
To us yet speak the strains
Wherewith in days gone by,
Ye blessed the Syrian swains,
O voices of the sky!

O clear and shining light, whose beams
A heavenly glory shed
Around the palms, and o'er the streams,
And on the shepherd's head!
Be near through life and death,
As in that holiest night.
Of hope, and joy, and faith,
O clear and shining light!

O star, which led to Him, whose love
Brought hope and mercy free!
Where art thou? 'Mid the host above
May we still gaze on thee.
In heaven Thou art not set,
Thy rays earth might not dim,
Send them to guide us yet,
O star which led to Him!

HOW SHIVAR MINERAL WATER RELIEVES RHEUMATISM.

According to the standard medical books, Rheumatism is not a germ disease but is the result of imperfect nutrition. The food is either imperfectly digested or imperfectly assimilated. Poisons accumulate and these irritate and inflame the delicate linings of the joints, the heart and other organs. To cure rheumatism it is therefore necessary to stop the formation of these poisons and get rid of those already formed.

The celebrated Shivar Mineral Water acts on the stomach and kidneys it corrects the digestion and washes out the poisons through the kidneys. This is the opinion of physicians who prescribe it. If you suffer with rheumatism, dyspepsia, indigestion, gall stones, disease of the kidneys, bladder or liver, uric acid poisoning, or any condition due to impure blood, read the following letter, then sign it, enclose the amount and mail it. Only two out of a hundred, on the average, report no benefit.

Shivar Spring,
Box 64 B, Shelton, S. C.
Gentlemen:—I accept your guarantee offer and enclose herewith two dollars for ten gallons (two five-gallon demijohns) of Shivar Spring Water. I agree to give the water a fair trial in accordance with instructions which you will send, and if I derive no benefit you are to refund the price in full upon receipt of the two empty demijohns, which I agree to return promptly.

Victory Celebration in Oskaloosa.

At 4 A. M. Monday, November 11, the beautiful chimes of St. James' Church, the Rev. Arthur M. Lewis, rector, were playing "America," "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus," "Rally Round the Flag" and "Maryland, My Maryland." Then all the bells and whistles were turned loose, and the celebration was on. At 9 A. M. there was a meeting of all the business men arranging for the details of the day's celebration. The Rev. Mr. Lewis appeared before them and asked that he might have their backing for a great thanksgiving service to Almighty God for the great victory that He had vouchsafed to us. Immediately there was a hearty response and a pledge of co-operation, and arrangements were made for a great union thanksgiving service, which was held in the park on Tuesday at noon. All business houses were closed from 12 to 1:30. A choir of one hundred voices rendered the national anthems and patriotic hymns, and addresses were made by the President of the Commercial Club, Mr. Warren Kalbach, the pastors of the Christian Church, the Congregational Church and St. Mary's Roman Catholic Church. The pastor of the Reformed Church read the lesson, the fourteenth chapter of Isaiah. The rector of St. James' Episcopal Church acted as Chairman and read the prayers, and the benediction was pronounced by the Free Methodist minister.

At least three thousand people gathered in the park to take part in the service, and there was deep interest and devout attention throughout.

The women of St. James' observed the Advent Call the week of December 1-7. There was a celebration every morning at 10 o'clock, and at 5 P. M. the women gathered for prayer and study of the Holy Scriptures and for meditation.

PUBLIC IS WARNED Against Taking Substitutes for Nuxated Iron

Physicians Below Say That Ordinary Metallic Iron Preparations Cannot Possibly Give The Same

STRENGTH, POWER AND ENDURANCE

As Organic Iron—Nuxated Iron

United States Judge Atkinson Gives Opinion

Careful investigation by physicians among druggists and patients has revealed the fact that there are thousands of people taking iron who do not distinguish between organic iron and metallic iron, and that such persons often fail to obtain the vital energy, strength and endurance which they seek, simply because they have taken the wrong form of iron.

Therefore, physicians mentioned below, advise those who feel the need of a strength and blood builder to go to their family doctors and obtain a prescription calling for organic iron—Nuxated Iron—and present this to their druggist so that there may be no question about obtaining the proper article. But if they do not wish to go to the trouble of getting a prescription for Nuxated Iron then be sure to look on the label and see that the words NUXATED IRON are printed thereon—not Nux and Iron nor any other form of iron, but Nuxated Iron.

The remarkable results produced by Nuxated Iron and its widespread sale (it being estimated that over three million people annually are today using it), has led to the offering of numerous substitutes, and these physicians say that health officials and doctors everywhere should caution the public against accepting substitutes in medicines and they especially warn against accepting substitutes for Nuxated Iron. Which, instead of being organic iron may be nothing more than a metallic iron compound which may in some cases produce more harm than good. The widespread publication of the above information, has been suggested by Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital; Dr. Ferdinand King, New York Physician and Medical Author and others, so that the public may be informed on this subject and protected from the use of metallic iron under the delusion that it is Nuxated Iron or at least something as good as Nuxated Iron.

It is surprising how many people suffer from iron deficiency and do not know it. If you are not strong or well, you owe it to yourself to make the following test: See how long you can work or how far you can walk without becoming tired. Next take two five-grain tablets of Nuxated Iron three times per day after meals for two weeks. Then test your strength and see how much you have gained.

Manufacturers' Note—Nuxated Iron, which is prescribed and recommended above by physicians is not a secret remedy, but one which is well known to druggists. Unlike the older inorganic iron products it is easily assimilated, does not injure the teeth, make them black nor upset the stomach. The manufacturers guarantee successful and entirely satisfactory results to every purchaser or they will refund your money. It is dispensed by all good Judge G. W. Atkinson.

United States Judge G. W. Atkinson, of the Court of Claims, Washington, D. C., says: "It is without hesitation that I recommend Nuxated Iron to persons who in the stress of physical or mental labors have permitted the system to become debilitated, the body exhausted or the nerves run down. It has restored my appetite and my vitality. I feel that I have dropped off the burden of months of toil in the few weeks that I have been following the very simple directions for the use of Nuxated Iron."

A NEW DEPARTURE IN THE STUDY OF FRENCH

Some Stumbling Blocks

OF THE

French Language

AND THE WAY TO AVOID THEM

By Prof. GEORGE NESTLER TRICOCHÉ
B. L. L. D. (Univ. Gall.)

FIFTH EDITION, WITH A SUPPLEMENT

12mo. Cloth. 119 Pages, with more than 40 pages in three colors

A TEXT-BOOK FOR ADVANCED
STUDENTS

There has been a long-felt need for some work that would do for the foreigner studying French what has been done for the French and English scholars respectively in the study of their own language: a book in which the MOST COMMON MISTAKES in pronunciation, expressions, verbs, sentence building, quotations, etc., are comprehensively enumerated and carefully corrected.

In that respect Prof. Tricoche's manual fills a gap in the long series of French educational works. But it goes still further. It contains a very extensive list of familiar expressions or words which, although CONSTANTLY USED in conversation and current literature, are too near related to slang to be found in ordinary dictionaries.

Moreover, a highly appreciated feature of the book is its very large collection of explanatory notes on French types or characters frequently alluded to in conversation as well as in the standard works of French writers.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Heaven at last will be the perfect sight of Christ.—Phillips Brooks.

Little duties are the greatest duties, when they are the ones God chooses for us.—Ex.

Our vanity would do all things at once; God takes His time and puts us all to shame.—Aaron Watson.

The man who wants to do better than he has done may look to Christ and say that he will do it.—Ex.

The purpose of prayer is not to get God to see things as we do, but to get ourselves to see things as God sees them.—Ibid.

Christ came all the way from heaven to help us, and every Christian ought to be willing to go to the ends of the earth to help Him.

Adversity is hard upon a man, but for one man who can stand prosperity, there are a hundred who will stand adversity.—Carlyle.

Then I saw that in this life, which is a continuous death, everything dies to us, everything detaches itself and goes away to grow, to flower, to bear fruit on its own account.—Giosue Borsi.

We may not climb the dizzy height That towers far above us; But all may make the wayside bright For those around who love us.

Unlock the door this evening
And let the gate swing wide,
Let all who ask for shelter
Come speedily inside.
What if your yard be narrow?
What if your house be small?
There is a Guest who's coming
Will glorify it all.

—Joyce Kilmer.

Have no fear for the unsettlement or the disturbance of the kingdom of heaven. It began in eternity, it will go on through everlasting; there is no panic in the divine personality. God is peace, God gives peace, God gives rest.—Joseph Parker.

If we can learn how to control our thoughts by trying to reflect God's thoughts, then our whole life will become a prayer and by degrees the same mind will be in us that was also in Christ Jesus.—E. V. H.

To pray for abundant blessings without putting forth our best efforts to obtain them by our labor, is like praying for plentiful harvests with the plow in the barn and the furrows unturmed. God answers prayers for the harvest after the furrows are turned and the drill has done its work.

"Only a manger cold and bare,
Only a maiden mild,
Only some shepherds kneeling there
Watching a Little Child;
And yet that maiden's arms enfold
The King of Heaven above,
And in the Christ Child we behold
The Lord of Life and Love.

There are more treasures in Christ than even in the Bible. He could not transfer all the treasures of His Person into a book. Blessed be God for the treasures contained in the precious volume, but the day will arrive when they shall be all exhausted. But after exhausting the treasures of the Book, the treasures of the Person will still remain. Blessed be His name for the treasures which have come through Christ, thrice blessed for the treasures that are in Christ. Dwelling in him are treasures enough to make a dozen new Bibles, the Bibles of eternity.—J. C. Jones.

Armenia's Woe.

The Niobe of Nations, Byron wrote,
With Rome to point the moral, long ago—

From cities thronged and villages remote,
From wide-flung plains to pastoral use devote

And vales 'neath peaks of everlasting snow,
Rose anguished cries as fell the dastard blow

That the fell Turk and treach'rous Teuton smote.

The wasted remnant of this ancient race
Implore our aid in their most bitter need;

Bread, to keep life, is all they humbly ask.
Lacking were we in very truth all grace

If we respond not with the utmost speed,
And count the aid a truly joyous task.

—Walter Carruth.

What Are You Sowing?

A man's habits are his harvest.
How did he get them? Well, you know the old word, and I cannot find a better, "Sow a thought and you reap an act; sow an act and you reap a habit; sow a habit and you reap a character; sow a character and you reap a destiny." But I am inclined just to fix my thought upon the earlier phrase in this sentence, "Sow a thought."

Young people, one thought with the soul behind it deliberately held and fixed upon God—one thought—not fifty squandered anywhere, anyhow and anyway—one thought, then another, then another and always deeply and seriously until you will acquire a mental mood—a mood of prayer.

Sow an act. It may be a very simple act—I have sometimes said even the very act of kneeling. Sow an act of kneeling quietly, sincerely, reverently, repeatedly until the act of kneeling in body becomes an attitude in spirit, and your soul asks what it needs when you go about your daily work. Or sow an act of praise, sow another, until the single thanksgivings have become the mood, and as St. Paul says, "We give thanks without ceasing."—Selected.

A Prayer.

O Lord, take Thou our hand
And guide us through the unknown land

Of this New Year.
And help us to forget
The grudge and folly, doubt and fret,
And crushing fear;
But give in place, a Song
And Love and Power and Faith most strong;

O be Thou near!
May health, true wealth, success,
Be also blessings with the rest;
For the New Year.

Prayer For the New Year.

O God of the endless years: Give to each of us in this little day of life which remains some share in the working out of Thy eternal purposes for men. Show us where we may stand in the battle, and arm us for the fight. Fill our weakness with Thy strength; touch our hearts with Thy love; gird us with a measure of Thy great patience, and cheer us with the confidence of final victory through Thee, that so, through the life which we now live in the flesh, there may shine some token of Thy presence, to our own eternal benefit and to the blessing of our fellow-men; through Him who is the Captain of our salvation, and the rich reward of those who give their lives to Him; Thy Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

Property "for use," what a man needs for true freedom, is a very limited quantity. Speedily as it expands it becomes "property for power." That is where property has manifestly gone wrong. In our own civilization, we find vast masses who cannot be reasonably described as having any adequate measure of property for use. They cannot go out into life with the security of free men. The conviction rises in our minds that we need by peaceful means and, if it may be, by general consent, to accomplish such a redistribution of property as shall reduce the inordinate amount of "property for power" in the hands of the few, and give to all men in reasonable measure property "for use."—Bishop Gore.

The New Christmas.

Nancy Byrd Turner.

This year the Christmas bells have been
Like angels in the towers singing;
A note of ancient ecstasy
Our hearts have caught amid their ringing—
A message new yet ever old,
Strange music in the air again—
The sad earth thrilled to hear it told:

Peace among men!

This year the Christmas stars have shone

As once a certain star alight
Shone in the sky of years gone by,
A sign, a beacon in the night.
So deep our dark, and suddenly
A wonder in the skies again,
A glory over land and sea—
Peace among men!

"All Your Care."

There is no sorrow, Lord, too slight
To bring in prayer to Thee;
There is no burdening care too light
To wake Thy sympathy.

Thou, who hast trod the thorny road,
Wilt share each small distress;
The love which bore the greater load
Will not refuse the less.

There is no secret sigh we breathe
But meets Thine ear Divine;
And every cross grows light beneath
The shadow, Lord, of Thine.

Life's ills without, sin's strife within,
The heart would overflow,
But for that love which died for sin,
That love which wept with woe.

FIFTH EDITION, WITH A

STUDENTS

There has been a long-felt need for some work that would do for the foreigner studying French what has been done for the French and English scholars respectively in the study of their own language: a book in which the MOST COMMON MISTAKES in pronunciation, expressions, verbs, sentence building, quotations, etc., are comprehensively enumerated and carefully corrected.

In that respect Prof. Tricoché's manual fills a gap in the long series of French educational works. But it goes still further. It contains a very extensive list of familiar expressions or words which, although CONSTANTLY USED in conversation and current literature, are too near related to slang to be found in ordinary dictionaries.

Moreover, a highly appreciated feature of the book is its very large collection of explanatory notes on French types or characters frequently alluded to in conversation as well as in the standard works of French writers.

THE CHURCH AND THE WAR.

The Chairman of the Church War Commission, the Right Rev. William Lawrence, D. D., has sent a circular letter to the clergy giving a brief account of the activities of the Commission for the past year and the uses to which the contributions of about $600,000 given for its work last February have been put. A more detailed report is promised later. The work of the Commission has been large and varied, and not being hampered by rules or instructions or precedents they were able to use their common sense and seem to have done so with unusual efficiency. Since demobilization has begun the Commission will not have to call on the Church for the whole of the $1,000,000 which they had expected to ask. But not a little remains to be done. Conditions growing immediately out of changing conditions involve new social and moral as well as religious problems which need to be studied and met, while many former expenses will continue for a time. On February 9, therefore, the Church will be asked for $250,000 to carry on the work the Commission has set for itself until the meeting of the General Convention.

The Living Church Annual for 1919 has nine closely printed pages of the names and addresses of our clergy in war service as of about December 1. Many more have been so engaged during the preceding twenty months who are not included. This list contains 480 names, divided as follows:

Commissioned Army Chaplains.....	174
Hospital and Red Cross Chaplains.....	64
Naval and Marine Chaplains.....	25
Clergy in American Y. M. C. A. Service	99
Clergy Serving as Officers or Privates	43
Civilian Chaplains	43
Miscellaneous War Work	32

The editor of the Annual adds: "All told, it is probable that at least eight hundred of our clergy have been engaged in some form of war service away from their homes for some considerable period during the war; while they must be few indeed who, in connection with parochial work, have not assumed greater or less war responsibilities in their own communities as well as contributing, by their preaching, to the high idealism which has prevailed among the American people." This latter remark is certainly true. Nor must it be forgotten how many clergymen there were whose services as active Chaplains were offered but were not required. Always there was a long waiting list of those seeking to join their more fortunate brethren in this work.

Our Church, we are sure, may look with some degree of satisfaction on her part in the great war. Her laity no less than her clergy, her women no less than her men, have fallen behind no others in patriotic service and with the purest motives. And a full proportion of the price of victory has fallen upon the homes and hearts of her children.

What shall she have therefore? Surely an enrichment of her life and an enlargement of her powers, if only she will receive it and use the opportunities of the hour with something of the same zealous purpose that has characterized these last momentous months. Wisdom and hopefulness from experience, new ideals and a new sense of strength and capacity must have come to her, not to be lost unless by her own lethargy and lack of leadership and of recognition of her responsibilities. She has tasted the joy of service as well as the grace of sacrifice. God give her the "more grace" that these may abound in her to new warfare and yet more glorious victories!

We look for much from our returning clergy. It cannot be without great effect upon the Church that about one in six of her active ministers, and those the most vigorous and among the most able of them, have passed through the experiences of camp and army life. We have read much of their work among the soldiers; we hope to see something of what the soldiers have done for them. They have been in closest touch with the very marrow of American manhood and ought to know as never before its needs, its difficulties and aspirations. They have affiliated with Christians of every name and degree and ought to bring back a broader spirit of fellowship and sympathy. They have grappled in the open with problems which concern the deepest things of the soul and have seen the life of men in its naked reality. Moreover, these men have seen them, and know what to expect, yes, and to demand of them. They will return, please God, fit to be leaders of men in a new crusade against indifference, error and sin and to impart new visions of spiritual warfare to the Church.

HAPPY NEW YEAR!

To all of its readers, and especially to its contributors and correspondents, its kind friends who have helped us through a trying year with good words and more substantial tokens of good will, its devoted office force and its patient printers, the Southern Churchman wishes from the heart A Happy New Year.

The year that is closing has been marked by sorrow as well as gladness to very many of our wide family circle, and bonds of sympathy have been more closely drawn as we have hoped and prayed, rejoiced and suffered together. But hearts are stronger, let us believe, and purposes are purer and hopes brighter than a year ago. And the future is aglow with promise. Heaven seems to be bending closer over the earth and making its meaning plainer than of old and its message clearer. "The best of all is, God is with us!" We will go into the New Year unafraid, expecting new tokens of the Divine goodness, rejoicing in new opportunities of service, seeking new understanding of and conformity to the holy will of our Heavenly King. "He is our Peace"; may His dwelling be in each of our hearts, and then our best wishes will all come true.

Here and There

Karl Rosner, the German military correspondent of the Lokalanseiger of Berlin, pays an unintentional tribute to the military genius of General Foch when he tells us that General Ludendorff is one of the hardest working men in Germany, being at his office by 7:30 A. M. and not leaving his desk until 12 or 1 at night. We do not hear of any such extraordinary exertion upon the part of the French commander, but he got what he went after, while the German's long hours at his desk were all in vain.

The London Times estimates that 6,000,000 people have died from Spanish influenza throughout the world within the past twelve weeks, a death toll three times the number of men that the United States sent to Europe. Probably no form of sickness has ever before reached so many parts of the world at one time.

The European Aerial Passenger Company has been organized in London with the object of establishing worldwide travel by air. Already a forty-passenger Super-Handley-Page plane has flown over London carrying nearly three tons. The first regular passenger route will be established between London and Paris. Tickets for the initial trip have already been sold, and many distinguished persons will be among the passengers.

An instrument called a geophone has been devised with which the exact distance and direction of the origin of a sound can be detected. Its object was to locate artillery, but like many other war-time inventions, it can be used for peaceful purposes in discovering entombed miners after explosions.

The President of the United States, as the dinner guest of the King of England, makes a fine concluding international event in this peace year which began so stormily, and will probably see the high tide of peace and war in world history.

The Women Voters' Anti-Suffrage Party has issued a vigorous protest against having women delegates at the Peace Conference in Paris. The request for such delegates had been made by one of the woman's organizations. In this protest they intimate that women delegates to such conference would be too soft hearted, and we quote the following paragraph from their document: "In view of the avowed pacifist sympathies of the promoters of this agitation for woman representation, and the character of the response, it is evoking, we question if the United States can in fairness to its Allies introduce this element at the peace table." Since there are many women who would vigorously deny any "pacifist sympathies" and the appointment of women delegates might have precipitated a small-size war around the peace table itself, it is probably just as well that the President did not heed the appeal of the International Woman Suffrage Alliance and had no feminine representatives among our Peace Commissioners.

The Armenians.

I heard the Armenians speak,
Tortured, enslaved and weak;
Heard down the wind their wailing and their sighing;
"From the most monstrous wrong
Borne by us ages long
Save us, a nation dying!"

"You that are strong and free
As the unfettered sea,
List to our plea! we yearn for your
replying;
In this, your triumph hour,
With your embattled power
Save us, a nation dying!"

"In fire, in blood, in shame,
The inscrutable years proclaim
Our wretched fate; hark to our
For liberty at last!
From horrors like the past
Save us, a nation dying!"

"Smite off the intolerable
Chains of the hordes of Hell Forevermore! Not vain be our relying
On mercy, justice, right!
From the dread thralls of Might Save us, a nation dying!"
—Clinton Scollard.

BISHOP FUNSTEN—AN APPRECIATION.

The Rev. Edwin S. Hinks.

In the passing on of Bishop Funsten to the higher realms, the Church in Idaho has lost an untiring worker. He was a man of executive talents and progressive spirit. He was anxious to lay firm and strong foundations for the future, both in institutional and missionary work he combined the strong sense of the business man with the evangelical fervor of a true apostle of the Master.

As Dean of his Cathedral, I worked with him for five years, and my tribute to his memory can be best expressed by saying that he exemplified in his daily life the import of consistency.

Make any man a Bishop, and we still have a man; and the Diocese is always to be congratulated when the Bishop is approachable, genial, firm and not conscious of ecclesiastical preferment. Bishop Funsten once had printed and published for circulation a little pamphlet entitled, "Christ or the World," and he called on Christians to hew the line. Then he practiced what he preached; he hewed to the line; his example gave weight to the import of consistency.

If we can secure, both in the Episcopal office and in the ranks of the Clergy, more men like the late Bishop of Idaho this Church of ours will have the greater honor as the years roll on.

When a man is punctiliously a man, a Christian and a gentleman, as he was, the import of consistency sets forward the nobler civilization, and the world is a better world because he walked its way.

I have traveled with him over the mountains and across the mesas, and for five years we worked together in the growing capital of the State. He was a brother and a friend—never once an autocrat. Vigorous in mind and body, it would be impossible to think of him broken down or invalided. So God took him without an hour of sickness, and opened for him the door of Paradise, the Church's loss but his eternal gain.

A "Y" GIRL IN PARIS.

(Excerpts from a private letter)

"... At Havre we were put into our compartment with our hand baggage and then taken to the dining car, where our dinner was all arranged for. One cannot pass from one coach to another on these trains, so at the first stop we piled out of the diner and ran the length of the train to our compartment. Found a porter madly throwing our luggage out on the platform and an American sailor even more madly throwing it back. The compartment held eight and was reserved, but that didn't mean anything and we found a Belgian soldier, a middle-sized couple and another very fat soldier in it, and then all eight of us and two more Y people were put in. The men stood up all the way and we girls took turns. . . . The country is as hilly as upper Fauquier, and the valleys are lovely with the Seine winding in and out. I don't know how many times we crossed that river. The hills are all cultivated and some are very chalky. We saw some women working in the fields, but not many. At Paris we were met by a contingent of Y men, among them Mr. Jeter Jones, of Richmond. We were taken to headquarters in autos and waded through red tape for three hours. I know I signed my name over a hundred times. . . . Saturday we had to go to be registered or something at police headquarters, which is just opposite Notre Dame, so we went over there. It was wonderful beyond words. I do wish you could see some of this perfect architecture. . . . The side chapels aren't as gaudy as those in St. Patrick's, and the altar isn't as large or imposing as at St. John's the Divine. There is a beautiful white marble statue of Jean d'Arc at the edge of the chancel, and in front of it were three flags, ours in the middle and the French on each side. That really touched me; it seemed so significant, almost like a sacrament. We walked around the ambulatory, and I know now what a dim religious light is. I have seen it before in a deep pine woods, but this was different. Sunday there was a special service at Notre Dame, so we went down there again. The crowd filled the square and the neighboring streets. Admission was by card, but our uniform took us in. The front of the building is covered with sand bags, and only one narrow door was open. I was never in such a push, but I finally got right behind a nice big Red Cross man and got through beautifully. I had to leave before service was over, but when I came out there was a crowd of, say, five hundred outside, Belgian, French, English and American soldiers, and people of every age and walk in life. Most of them had open books and were chanting what was unmistakably a requiem. I felt entirely one with them as they mingled their prayers and thanksgivings (this was the Sunday after the armistice) and when the chant changed to the Gregorian (239) we sing to the Nunc Dimittis, I sang that softly with them as a memorial requiem. . . . It was too wonderful and significant! . . . When the other girls joined me they had acquired a lieutenant and two privates and we went to join the other Y women in the great parade. We were near the end so did not see much of it, but we passed the Alsace and Lorraine section, and how radiant their faces were! There were a great many Greeks, too. At the Arc de Triomphe we each were given a tiny piece of Alsatian pine.

You cannot imagine the jam, but when it was very bad we would just catch hold of some American officer or soldier and he would do a center rush for us.

" . . . I wish you could see some of the restaurants we have patronized. The one to which we have been going for breakfast has a bar in front and a tiny room behind with three or four little tables, and we get chocolate, bread and butter and a generous portion of jam or apple-butter for 1 f. 50., with smoking and drinking going on around us. But it's all right, for we always find officers or Red Cross women there; and the broken English and fractured French that is spoken is truly remarkable.

" . . . This morning (Sunday) Miss R. and I went to Holy Trinity. We were late, because we had to hunt for the church in another part of the city, but I did enjoy the service so, though the church was quite cold. It is a lovely church. The preacher was Bishop Remington, and after service I went up and introduced myself. He remembered meeting me at the Seminary and was very cordial, and also called Mr. Cumpston up and introduced him, and we had quite a chat. Mr. Bev. Tucker is near here, and there is to be a University of Virginia meeting or dinner here this week. We then took a bus to the Bastille monument and walked around there, found a small canteen and talked to a homesick soldier, and ran into three Y men who were going to Lafayette's tomb and joined them. It is in quite an old part of the city. I hope that when General Pershing put his wreath on the tomb with his simple, 'Lafayette, voici nous,' he had a more sympathetic audience than our three Y men, who talked incessantly and in very bad grammar. Coming out of the cemetery we passed the chapel of the asylum and hospital to which Lafayette left some of his property, and went in. About a hundred sisters were chanting vespers, and we did enjoy it so much. We then hustled back to the British Embassy church and heard the Bishop of London preach. The hymn before the sermon was 176, 'For All the Saints.' There were lots of British officers and people in mourning in the church, so we all felt alike. The Bishop's text was, 'God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross.' He spoke of this being a day of glorifying. He gloried, first, in the surrender of the German fleet, an event unparalleled in history. Then in 'what would have been considered a miracle five years ago. that America had put 2,000,000 fighting men in France.' He went on to say that ever since his wonderful visit to America ten years ago he had longed for some great event to show the real brotherliness and similarity of ideals which existed between the two countries, 'in spite of the petty mistakes your wretched histories implanted in your minds in childhood.' Then he mentioned France, the dead, the awakening of the religious instinct in men, as other causes of glorying; the conclusion being, of course, that the Cross was the consummation of it all, and that all who had died in the war were Christ's bodyguard, dying with Him for others. We sang 'The Re-cessional' to 306 for an offertory, and then a verse of 'The Star Spangled Banner' and 'God Save the King.' I knew the latter better than our own anthem, but I came out strong on 'O say, can you see,' and filled in that impossible middle part with our usual national words, 'dum de dee, de de, dee.' The service lasted from six to a quarter to eight. Then we went down to the big canteen, and it is now twelve and I must be up at six in the morning to start for D., so good night."

INTINCTION.

By the Rev. Samuel A. Wallis, D. D., Professor of Liturgics, Theological Seminary in Virginia.

The question of receiving the Holy Communion on the part of the people by intinction has been brought before our own Church for some time past on the ground of sanitary reasons. The use of the "common" cup on the railroad trains and in all public places and assemblies has been practically forbidden by law, certainly so far as to provide against it. Its sacred and reverent use in the celebration of Holy Communion, hallowed by the traditions of centuries and the loving command of our Lord to His Apostles in the right of institution, is now apparently under the ban of law in the Commonwealth of Virginia. Of course, it is only fair to state that the warnings of physicians in many cases against the danger of infection from the use of the common cup have already had their effect in leading ministers and church authorities, rightly or wrongly, to take means to guard against this danger. In other Protestant churches, the individual cup has come into general use. In our own communion the careful wiping of the edge of the cup after "each table" has been adopted by many clergymen, and to meet the emergency the old practice of intinction has been revived in a number of churches. It seems proper at this time to state within as short a compass as possible some historical data on this subject.

The word intinction has been used in two senses in connection with the Holy Communion. First in the early Roman Church, according to the Roman Church Order (which the learned and careful liturgical scholar, the late Bishop Wordsworth, of Salisbury, says we may reasonably suppose belongs to the time of Pope Victor, who died in 199 A. D.), it was held to be the duty of the Archdeacon in the Communion Service to pour wine from the chalice, from which the Clergy had communicated, into the larger vessel used for the communion of the people. According to the Bishop, it was not quite clear whether the wine in the larger vessel had been previously consecrated, but he sees no reason to doubt that a real consecration of the chalice was intended. So this infusion was the only consecration the wine for the communicants received, and was, therefore, in some sense the Archdeacon's act. It must be remembered that the Archdeacon at that time was only in deacon's orders, for this office was not held by a presbyter until the ninth century.

In the second sense the word "intinction" refers to the dipping of the consecrated bread into the consecrated wine, for the communion of the people. This is the practice of the Greek Church to-day. The priests themselves receive the communion in both kinds separately and then these are placed together in the mouth of the laity by means of a spoon with a cruciform handle. This custom passed into the Western Church possibly about the seventh century, although it was practiced in Carthage as early as the fifth century, but only in the case of the sick. The practice, however, became general about the beginning of the twelfth century, although it was condemned by the Fourth Council of Braga in 675, because it was held that our Lord delivered the elements separately to His Apostles. But the custom spread gradually until it became, as Scudmore writes, the recognized, if not the prescribed, rule of most of the churches. John of Avranches, however, about 1070, assigns as the reason for this that the people are exempted from the rule of receiving the elements separately, and are permitted to communicate in steeped bread, not by authority, but from extreme necessity of fear lest the Blood of Christ be spilt. In the same manner to-day those clergy in our Church who practically hold the view that the wine actually, or in some real sense, becomes the blood of Christ in consecration, unscrupulously refuse to place the cup in the hands of the recipient. The words of delivery to the people in the eleventh and twelfth centuries often show that intinction was commonly practiced, for this formula was in use, "The Body of our Lord Jesus Christ, steeped in His Blood, preserve Thy soul unto life everlasting." The custom of intinction, however, gradually fell into disuse on account of a prejudice against it, which took its rise from an impression that it was suggestive of the sop that Christ gave to Judas. Then the unscriptural custom of the Roman Church of denying the cup to the laity, which was only finally ordered by conciliar action so late as 1415, at last removed the question of intinction from the domain of ecclesiastical order so that in the present Catholic Encyclopedia no reference is made to this particular custom at all. In the valuable "Prayer Book Dictionary" published in England in 1912, there is no article on the present controversy with reference to this form of intinction because, of course, it is not legal, according to the rubrics of our Prayer Book. The act of commixture in the order of the Roman mass is also illegal in the Anglican Communion since 1549. In our next article we will consider the present aspect of this question.

RECONSTRUCTION.

From the Thanksgiving Day Sermon of the Right Rev. W. F. Faber, D. D.

* * * "A new day shines about us," says the President. "A glorious day indeed, and risen more quickly than the most sanguine among us would have dared six months ago to predict; cause for thanksgiving such as never was before in our history. A new day; but all too obviously, a day only of progress, not of consummation. Very justly the President characterizes it as a day in which our hearts take new courage and look forward with new hope to new and greater duties." We thank God for the new courage and the new hope; for certainly the new and greater duties are before us.

"After the war nothing will be as it was before." How often we have heard that.

The danger is that most things which matter will be as they were before; some things perhaps in outward form different, but with the same old spirit underneath them still. * * *

To-day "Reconstruction" is on everybody's tongue. How easily we fall victim to a sounding phrase! What are we going to "reconstruct"?

* * * "Reconstruction" may mean so many different things. It carries the suggestion attractive to many minds, of pulling a thing to pieces and putting it together on a different plan.

It may mean, rebuilding what is broken down, according to its original plan. It probably means, with most people, improving what exists, or repairing what remains.

 There is one thing we need to-day above all else unless our "after-the-war" projects and our "reconstructions" are to be but fantastic and ephemeral—nay, disastrous blunders: we need a reverent and humble sense of the Supreme Law for man's world, the Law which demands truth and justice, mercy and freedom; which is but another way of saying, the Law of the Brotherhood of man; which is itself rooted in the Fatherhood of the eternal God. Building or rebuilding, in the great realms of man's corporate life, in ignorance or disregard of God's will and God's design, is like rearing a tower without taking account of the law of gravity.

As Alfred Noyes so nobly voiced it three years ago at Harvard University, in lines which I make no apology for repeating here at length:

"There was a song in Heaven of old,
A song the choral seven began,
When God with all His chariots rolled
The tides of chaos back for man;
When suns revolved and planets wheeled,
And the great oceans ebbed and flowed,
There is one way of life, it pealed,
The road of law, the unchanging road.

"The trumpet of the law resounds,
And we behold, from depth to height,
What glittering sentries walk their rounds,

What ordered hosts patrol the night,
While wheeling worlds proclaim to us,
Captained by Thee thro' nights unknown—

Glory that would be glorious
Must keep Thy law to find its own.

"Beyond rebellion, past caprice,
From Heavens that comprehend all change,

All space, all time, till time shall cease,
The trumpet rings to souls that range,
To souls that in wild dreams annul
Thy word, confessed by wood and stone—

Beauty that would be beautiful
Must keep Thy law to find its own.

"He that can shake it, will he thrust
His careless hands into the fire?
He that would break it, shall we trust
The sun to rise at his desire?
Constant above our discontent,
The trumpet peals in sterner tone—

Might that would be omnipotent
Must keep Thy law to find its own.

"Ah, though beneath un pitying spheres
Unreckoned seems our human cry,
In Thy deep law, beyond the years,
Abides the Eternal memory.

Thy law is light, to eyes grown dull
Dreaming of worlds like bubbles blown;
And Mercy that is merciful
Shall keep Thy law and find its own.

"Unchanging God, by that one Light
Through which we grope to Truth and Thee,
Confound not yet our day with night,
Break not the measures of Thy sea.

Hear not, though grief for chaos cry
Or call at Thine unanswering throne,
Thy law, Thy law is liberty.
And in Thy law we find our own.

 The war is over; our men are coming back. We have been told that when they return, after facing death daily over there, they will not accept as a matter of course everything they find established here as if it must be immutable and sacrosanct; that they are coming back with more than the usual questionings and challenges of youth; that they may not be counted upon to follow meekly the old party-cries; that in the trenches they have done much thinking, and their education in the camps has fitted them to think as they were not fitted before.

Much of this may be discounted, with other fancy picturing of the "war literature" whose stream has gone over us. But it is fairly safe to assume that our political life stands to be greatly enriched and strengthened by the return of these men. Consider how many of them are foreign-born, how many more the sons of foreign-born parents; and consider that they at least have forever done with the "hyphen." Consider how many have learned English in the camps. Consider how all of them have been taught about our institutions and our history. Consider how contact has been established between races and classes, so that these men can never again be as ignorant of, and as prejudiced against, those not "of their kind" as are most of us here. I say nothing now of that physical and moral discipline which, thanks to the kind of administrators and leaders we have had, both civil and military, who, by example as well as precept have stressed cleanness, temperance, honor, self-respect and respect for others, has given us an army and a navy whose praise is in all lands and will be through all time.

Almost, then, could I fall in with the prediction of a new era to come to America, politically, industrially, socially, religiously, through the return of "our men." But will not, after all, very much depend upon us here? In the discussion of "Reconstruction" for America, is there not a constant recurrence of the note of "What shall we have?" "How shall we command the most and the best markets?" "How shall we be first in the scramble and get the biggest prizes?"

The whole thing is revoltingly sordid. The man who could take advantage of the war to wring excessive gains for himself out of the necessities of his fellows we have branded as "profiteer" and have tried to restrain and punish. But how much better are the rest of us, if now that we are mercifully delivered from the tragic miseries of the past months, we cease to be interested in the well being of our allies, we cease to care about the future peace and harmony and safety of the world, we cease to concern ourselves about the fate of the new born nations of Europe; we cease, indeed, to care about our own people except as furnishing us with "business" and the means of increasing "business"?

Consider, then, that by far the larger portion of these men returning to us are of what we blunderingly call "the laboring class." They now come from an atmosphere of freedom, of adventure, of self-respect, of comradeship, of national, not class, feeling. Manhood has counted; not the dollar mark, nor the social stamp. The splendid material of democracy! And what do we purpose to do now? We are going to reconstruct America. How? By making it the richest, the busiest, the biggest in commerce and world trade this globe has ever seen!

Is that all? If so, God pity us!

We gloried in war time in our "dollar-a-year" public servants, abandoning cheerfully their great business positions to serve the country. Is it too much to ask that many more, in similar positions, shall dedicate themselves—not abandoning their "business," but putting the first emphasis upon their patriotism—shall dedicate themselves, I say, to the great task of "keeping the war won for democracy"; shall find the way to bring generous dealing into the relationship between capital and labor; shall find the way to apply the principle of Brotherhood—or say, American fellow-citizenship—into the shop and the factory; shall throw to the junk-heap where autocrats and war-lords have been cast that other hideous invention of "labor as a commodity," and insist upon the laborer's being dealt with always and everywhere as a man?

It is impossible? Then is democracy impossible.

But it is no more impossible—it is not nearly so impossible—as was the overthrow of Germany. There is nothing impossible to the American who puts into the employ of his idealism—which religion calls "faith"—his initiative, his efficiency, his will to win.

We are wearied utterly with the daily scold of our newspapers about the "I. W. W." and the "N. P. L." and the "Socialists." I detest the principles of sabotage, I have no use for demagogues, I abhor the creation or fostering of class feeling. I am by conviction not a Socialist. Indeed, I agree with Mr. Otto Kahn that probably to-day our great danger is a tendency to increased paternalism; that bureaucracy may get a stronger and stronger footing among us as it did among the Germans; that we must do what we can to preserve the future for the individual man. The reconstruction which we need is that of fellowship between citizens, not fellowship of members of a class against fellowship of members of another class. Nothing in all our history has given us, if we will use it now, such an opportunity for unifying the people of the United States as has this war.

If you tell me that the great combinations of labor are unscrupulous, that they break agreements and bring on strike after strike, that it is they who really foster class feeling, I admit there is much truth in what you say. But that is a long story, and I am not going into it. I simply say, There is the problem. You have never had so splendid an opportunity to begin solving it, right from the heart of it, as you have to-day. Say, "America"; say, "The Stars and Stripes"; say it, and mean it, with all your soul and all your brains, and there will be bound to come with you all except the ignorant and the wilfully disloyal—of whom to-day the percentage is smaller than ever before. "Come with you," I say; not that you may exploit them more successfully, but that they with you, and you with them, may aid in building up America.

That way lies the real "reconstruction" of America. She is not ruined, that she needs to be rebuilt; she is giant among the nations now. She is not built on a wrong plan, so that she needs taking to pieces and putting together after a better fashion: the old Declaration of Independence is all right, and the Constitution, and our "traditions." Nor is she left without a soul, without vision. Thank God for the voice which has uttered the past two years what is her true principle and her deep faith, the President whose words have gone out to the ends of the earth, and have prevailed. No, she stands as she has always stood—perhaps more than she has ever stood—for that Law of which Alfred Noyes sings, that Law whose outraged majesty "hath put down the mighty from their seat, and hath exalted the humble and meek." The "reconstruction" she needs is that all her sons cease putting self before her welfare and begin bringing themselves to practice, in peace as in war, what their citizenship professes. And most of all, those whose wealth and position, whose gifts of leadership, will tell the most. "Noblesse oblige."

"O beautiful for patriot dream

That sees beyond the years
Thine alabaster cities gleam
Undimmed by human tears!
America! America!
God shed His grace on thee,
And crown thy good with brotherhood
From sea to shining sea."

"MONEY! MONEY! MONEY!"

The Rev. C. A. Ashby.

I received in my mail one day last week seven appeals for money. These appeals were evidently widely circulated. All of them had merit—or, at least, they indicated conditions of "help us, or we perish." In a very prosperous section of the country (one which boasts of its wealth), I learned that the Church could not get the money it needed and was breaking down for the want of it. The folks there just would not furnish the necessary support. In the seven cases brought to my attention they were in the hole, and the hole was caving in fast; it could only be sheered up by money.

I read, last summer on my vacation, Eleanor Porter's book, "Money! Money! Money!" It was, of course, not an ecclesiastical work, but the title had such a familiar ring! The cover caused me to feel quite at home. It has been increasingly borne in upon me, during my seven years in the ministry, that money and money-getting played much too prominent a part in Church activities. The command of money is the open sesame to perferment and influence. Our most important Church body is made up of those who come from rich churches. Our most important posts are filled by men who control money. We are somewhat of a plutocracy, there is no doubt about it.

I read the Church papers. I am told that Brother Bluefish, of Skinnerville, has split a little horn crosswise—he has raised $433, and paid off the debt on the little pipe organ. I find out that Brother Goldfish, of Mammon City, has split a big horn crosswise—he has raised $9,641 and paid off the debt on the grand melodion. Brothers Bluefish and Goldfish have modestly let us in on these accomplishments.

Our Church is, I suppose, an average one. I receive from headquarters, or rather from many headquarters, through the year, from small bodies of good men who run affairs, directions that during such a season or on such a day we will raise money for this or that Church undertaking. I spend my efforts in trying to do what I am told. The revenues of our Church are not sufficient to do more outside matters than those so handed on to me. I am fortunate if I can care for these. If I get what is assessed and requested—and in increasing amounts each year and from new directions—I feel like a returned trench hero. We have no idea of initiating anything; the initiators are the folks who put out the work. One of the leading clergymen of this Diocese said to me quite recently, "I feel just like a fly on a driving wheel." I have heard it said that we commercialize everything that comes along, even the passing away of our leaders. One must be convinced that we have more enterprise than we can support; or that what we offer does not appeal to the people as meriting support; or we do not go at the thing in the right fashion. We do not get the money, even though all of these cries for money rend the air.

I meet our vestry, it is "Money! Money! Money!" I go to Synod, it is "Money! Money! Money!" I go to General Convention, and it is the same there. And the sad part of it is that we do not get the money. And not only is that true, but it does seem to me that with system upon system, and precept upon precept, and board upon board, wheeling about in jangling despair, we are in danger of losing something—something most precious. Jesus said little about money. St. Paul had a notion about money—we might ponder it over. He stated it as a principle that if the Church could get one's soul the person's money followed on as an incidental. He did not say that a money tie was worth while. At first the Church emphasized conversion—its leaders were men who could win a fellow's soul. The difference in the method of those men is striking. There was more initiative in the first days of the Church, in its greatest days, than there has been since. There was a steam-roller process. We look again, and the Church has become the most wonderful business machine in history and is superb as a money-getter. The appeal has moved from a glowing faith in Christ as the one and only object, with money nowhere on the horizon, but coming along as needed, to faith in money. The backwash of that perversion is with us yet. Patterson, in his history of the Church, asserts that the Reformation was due in part to the fact that the bishops then were all good business men, and organizers of the first order.

We speak of this as the great missionary age of the Church, but it is not. The Book of Acts tells the greatest story of this activity. Then follows those martyrs of enthusiasm and faith of the early days, say, Ulphilas, Remigius, Brendan, Columba—O, a host of them, who changed whole civilizations by the power of Christ, without organization and system upon system behind them. Missionary zeal ebbed as a perfect organization came into play and money-getters advanced upon the field. These old saints, full of faith in "The White Christ," are the giants of Church history.

I mean no reflection upon our missionaries; I hold them in the highest esteem. But I do wonder at times at this near bankruptcy which is widespread in the Church, the agonizing cries of "Money! Money! Money!" I wonder if our Christian philosophy is not too material. Have we now any men who can add to their congregations by conversion? Who will take the place of these dear, good women raised under a different appeal, who know their Bibles and love their Church? Children studying (or rather assumed to study) courses that theological graduates have not grasped, and knowing nothing of the Bible itself, and utterly indifferent toward Church attendance. Our danger is of a Bibleless, Churchless people. Where is there family religion now? "Family religion is the seed-bed of religion in the Church and home. If the fire has died out upon your family altars, the worship in your churches must progressively degenerate into a form of godliness, with the power gone. Religion in your home is the mother of religion in your Church." So wrote the great Bishop Randolph. No person can be a Christian by a contribution. Christ should not receive one cent that does not come from the loyal, loving impulse of him who believes in Christ and attends His Church because there he finds food for the soul.

I realize that there must be method; I know there must be money; but I fear the emphasis now is creating the impression that money itself is the main thing, and I do feel very deeply that if money is not forthcoming it is because we are over-organized and the souls of the people are not reached. They will back up a spiritual church to the hub, in my judgment; if they will not, it is better that it go slowly and go spiritually, than that it smatter and scatter about in money.

ADVANCE PROGRAMME OF THE BROTHERHOOD OF ST. ANDREW.

Great eagerness is shown by the Bishops and other Clergy of the Church in the new Advance Programme of the Brotherhood. Rectors in all parts of the country are making inquiries at the national headquarters regarding the revival and establishment of Chapters, and a large correspondence is being carried on between the central office and all parts of the Church. Already a number of field secretaries have been engaged and are at work. Mr. Percy J. Knapp and Mr. Frank C. DuMoulin, two of the newly appointed secretaries, have now been on the Brotherhood staff several weeks. Their first work has been in the Dioceses of Pennsylvania and Harrisburg. They have been received with great cordiality by Bishops and rectors. These two men are now opening up the opportunities to be found in the Diocese of Connecticut with New Haven as a center, and a number of Chapters are in the process of formation. Mr. Gordon M. Reese has been engaged for special duty among the boys of the Church. At the present time, he is located in Michigan with Detroit as a center for the investigation and establishment of the boys' work in that Diocese. To augment the efforts of the field secretaries, Mr. Shelby, General Secretary, and his associates in the national office are being used in many meetings and conferences and as speakers in the churches, in promotion of the new Brotherhood plan. Mr. Shelby was recently present at the Synod of the Second Province held at Syracuse, where he addressed the meeting of the Synod as a whole and also a luncheon attended by many of its delegates. He has addressed luncheon meetings in Boston and Wilkes-Barre and a number of Assembly meetings have also had a visit. Mr. Spencer and Mr. Randall have also made visits in the Dioceses of Delaware, Connecticut, New York, Central New York and Western Massachusetts.

The outlook for the Brotherhood financially is bright. A large budget is needed and is being successfully raised. In each Province wardens have been appointed selected from among the best available representative men, irrespective of membership in the Brotherhood. Through a personal canvass on the part of the wardens and by the impact of strong presentations made at carefully organized luncheon meetings, the Advance Program has been given wide and thoughtful publicity among the leading men of the Church.

When the Advance Programme was announced, striking commendations relative to its various points were received from forty-five of the Bishops of the Church, indicating a keen interest in and an appreciation of the extensive plans of the Brotherhood. The letters all show that the Bishops regard the Program of the Brotherhood as one in which the entire Church should be vitally interested. As an aid to those not familiar with the seven objectives of this Program, they are restated here: First, to create in every parish a service group of men and boys who will be of genuine value to the rector. Second, to make personal prayer and service a living factor in every parish. Third, to make practical the Threefold Endeavor in every parish; increasing church attendance, men's Bible classes, men's Corporate Communion. Fourth, to promote the devotional life of the family through the practice of family prayer. Fifth, to bring fathers, older brothers and kinsmen of enlisted men into practical and inspiring relationship to Christian service. Sixth, to show young men with increasing clearness the vision of the second ministry, serving as officers in Christ's army. Seventh, to strengthen the Brotherhood's Junior Department by training and actively enlisting boys of every parish in Christ's army.

As an example of the inspiring letters received from the Bishops, we are glad to print herewith that of Bishop Moreland, of the Diocese of Sacramento. This letter sums up in a very interesting way the various phases of the Advance Programme and the writer's viewpoint regarding them. It says: "Godspeed to the Brotherhood, as it organizes for an advance all along the line. The plan proposed goes down to the vital, fundamental things of the Christian life. Picture in every parish a group of valiant men, going over the top in every enterprise for Christ. See them bringing in prisoners with hearts surrendered at every service. Among these are young men who have seen God in the trenches, their fathers and kinsfolk, all alive with the new spirit of love and sacrifice. See the early Communion thronged, the Bible classes full of adults, the house of God crowded with eager listeners hanging upon the preaching of the Eternal Christ. Look into the homes and see parents and children kneeling about the family altar, all hands bowed in gratitude to God at meals and family prayer. Following the inspiring example of the men is an army of boys. From this consecrated host, as from those who have come out of the furnace of war, will be selected men who have seen God, with the eye of the soul, who henceforth will be happy only as they preach and glorify Him. What a glorious Programme! God help the Brotherhood to make it a reality!"

General Theological Seminary.

The Alumni have elected the Rt. Rev. Dr. Thomas F. Gallor, D. D., Bishop of Tennessee; the Rev. John Keller, of Glen Ridge, N. J., and Robert L. Gerry, of New York City, to be Trustees of the General Theological Seminary, Chelsea Square, New York, for three years from January 1, 1919.

PITTSBURGH.

Rt. Rev. C. Whitehead, D. D., Bishop.

The Pittsburgh Clerical Union met on Monday, December 16, at Grace Church, Pittsburgh, as the guests of the rector, the Rev. William Porkess. The gathering proved to be one of the largest known, twenty-seven of the Clergy being present. An excellent "Victory" luncheon was served in the rectory, where all were conveniently accommodated. In the afternoon a most able and practical essay was read by the Rev. C. C. Durkee, rector of St. Thomas Memorial Church, Oakmont, on "The Use of Laymen in the Church." A good discussion of the subject followed. The Clerical Union began its session with the celebration of the Holy Communion at 11:30 A. M. League.

Two of the Clergy who had been in the Training Camp for Chaplains at Louisville, Ky., have returned home with their commissions in the reserves. The Rev. S. H. Bishop will resume his rectorship at the Church of the Holy Cross, Pittsburgh, and the Rev. T. M. Browne will probably take up parochial or missionary work at the opening of the New Year.

Noonday Victory Services are being held during Advent at Trinity Church, Pittsburgh, with addresses on the general subject, "Reconstruction Thoughts." The speakers during the different weeks have been the Rev. Dr. W. J. Holland, of Carnegie Institute; the Rev. Dr. H. T. Kerr, of the Presbyterian Church, who spent considerable time in France during the war; the Rev. Dr. S. B. McCormick, Chancellor of the University of Pittsburgh; and the Rev. Dr. J. R. Wightman, Chaplain of the Laymen's Missionary League.

Fifty-fourth Annual Convention of the Diocese: The Bishop, in accordance with the provisions of Section 2, Article 2 of the Constitution, has postponed the meeting of the fifty-fourth annual convention from the date previously appointed (January 28, 1919), to Tuesday, April 22, 1919.

He deems his slow recovery to health and inability to prepare for the meeting of the convention sufficient reason for postponement.

LEXINGTON.

Rt. Rev. L. M. Burton, D. D., Elshop.

Council: The twenty-fourth annual Council of the Diocese will be held (D. V.) in Trinity Church, Covington, Ky., the Rev. J. Howard Gibbons, rector, on Tuesday, February 11, 1919. This council meeting will combine the postponed special fall council and the spring council usually held in May or June. It is hoped that the meeting at this time will prove more satisfactory than the meetings heretofore held in warm weather. An item of interest to come up is woman representation.

Thanksgiving: Because of the prevalence of influenza in Lexington, all churches, etc., being closed, the special service of Thanksgiving for victory prepared for Christ Church Cathedral was unable to be held. This service will be held, however, as soon as the present "ban" is lifted and opportunity for it given.

In Service: This Diocese has two of its clergy in active service as chaplains. The Rev. Arthur H. Marshall, rector of St. Andrew's Church, Fort Thomas, and formerly chaplain at that post, is now chaplain at the Base Hospital, Camp Zachary Taylor, Louisville, Ky., and awaits his early return to parish duties, now that the camp is being demobilized. The Rev. J. J. Gravatt, Jr., formerly rector of the Ascension, Frankfort, Ky., and who had resigned that charge to accept a call to Staunton, Va., just before receiving orders, in answer to his previous application, to report to the Chaplains' Training School at Camp Taylor, Ky., has graduated from that school, and has been rushed "overseas" with a company of seventy-five chaplains.

The Advent Call in the Diocese of Lexington has been greatly interrupted because of the influenza epidemic. Though the call has been responded to in some parishes, Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, and Trinity, Danville, have postponed the plan until the pre-Lenten period, 1919.

The Sunday schools of this Diocese are now engaged in securing their Advent offering, to be devoted this year to St. John's, Corbin, our Diocesan Missionary School.

Burton Cottage, one of the new buildings of St. John's Collegiate Institute and Industrial School, and Wentworth Agricultural School Farm, is now being furnished in preparation for its increased enrollment. The Guild of Christ Church Cathedral is fitting up one room; Dean R. L. McCready, of the Cathedral, Louisville, Ky., is furnishing another in memory of his mother; and Mrs. Wilkins has contributed a large part of the funds necessary to help completely furnish the building. Mr. Fred Burman, Barboursville, Ky., has been appointed lay-reader in charge of the mission here, the former lay-reader, Mr. Ira D. Lang, having recently been placed in charge of Bellevue-Dayton.

The Very Rev. R. K. Massie, Dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Lexington, is expected to return to his duties December 15.

WASHINGTON.

Rt. Rev. A. Harding, D. D., Bishop.

Archdeaconry Meeting.

The adjourned meeting of the Archdeaconry of Washington met December 16 in the evening. It was one of the largest meetings of laymen ever held in Washington. The order of business was drawn up by eleven laymen, and was as follows:

1. An adequate salary for our clergy.
2. A more earnest and systematic effort to induce all Church attendants to support the Church.
3. Co-operation between parishes in Church activities; especially in behalf of weak parishes and missions.
4. A more clearly defined understanding as to the reciprocal rights and duties of clergy and laymen in the spiritual and secular affairs of the Church. Will the rectors and vestries unreservedly welcome the assistance of the laymen, if they will proffer their services, in the business administration of the Church?
5. A larger vision and more readiness to aid and extend diocesan objects, and a sincere and active interest in the cause of missions.

6. An unfeigned interest in social work, to the end that we may adopt modern methods to meet modern conditions.

7. Improved methods in the election and selection of our vestries.

8. A list of our Church membership to be in the keeping of the Bishop or some one designated by the convention.

Specially appointed speakers discussed the first four of these topics, and they were unanimously adopted.

It was resolved that a salary of $1,500 should be the minimum salary of our clergy, with a substantial increase for those now receiving this amount or somewhat more.

The Duplex Envelope and the Every-Member Canvass were adopted as essential. The success of these methods in one parish ought to be extended to others, through the help of the parish that has learned how to do it.

The fourth topic was the crucial one on the program, and called forth so much discussion that it took up the rest of the time for the meeting. In fact, a resolution proposed in connection with this topic, "That the Bishop should appoint a 'Board of Strategy' composed of laymen' to carry out the object of resolutions under No. 4," remained unfinished through adjournment.

For several years a few laymen in the Diocese have felt that there was some reason for the failure of the laity to respond to the appeals of the Church in an adequate way. After close observation of the conditions they concluded that the laity were failing, not because of an inadequate appeal on the part of the clergy, but because their full responsibility was not placed upon them. The question was asked by the leader of these men: Would the clergy welcome the co-operation of the laymen in such Church affairs as are not specifically within the province of the clergy, and in such a way and to such an extent as to leave the initiative in the hands of the laymen? That is to give the layman a man's job, to be done in his own way. The clergy did not grasp the significance at first of what was asked them; their idea was that every layman in the Church ought to be put to work for his own good and the good of the Church; and such co-operation as this they heartily welcomed. This is the old way and leaves the initiative and responsibility with the rector. In support of this a very prominent layman said that what was needed was a more earnest and direct preaching of the gospel. If the clergy would do this the other problems would be solved. This attitude, which appealed to a good many of the clergy and laity, leaves the situation where it was. The real opposition voiced on the part of the clergy to any change was that it would interfere with their autocratic hold on the parish; and they most decidedly do not welcome any independent effort on the part of the laity. The laymen interested in this movement say they must have a man's job, for no self-respecting man of ability is going to be interested in doing a little school-boy's job dictated by the clergyman. There is no doubt that the management of the business affairs of the Church by the clergy has lowered their spiritual tone, and destroyed largely their spiritual leadership. It is the most dangerous situation that confronts the minister in his work. It is the easy road to gratify ambition and has wrecked many a promising career. The missionary income of the Church has been dried up by this narrow parochialism, which the laity visualize in the person of the rector, and confound with his personal interests. It is believed by the men back of this movement that there is no lack of money for the great enterprise of the Church; and what is needed is the placing upon the laymen the responsibility which is decidedly theirs. They believe that a full opportunity will call for the zeal, the enterprise and the ability to bring the Church to a full measure of her responsibility.

Some of the clergy and laity are satisfied that they have downed the issue. The friends of the movement feel they have had an opportunity and have gained real ground, through the wider presentation of their ideas.

The idea of the Board of Strategy in the Diocese is to extend this movement beyond mere parish limits, and do for the Diocese what the Allies and America did for the war when Foch was placed at the head of all their armies. It is merely to bring to bear upon the various parts of the work of the Diocese the whole power of the laity, under skillful leadership; and with such power that the line will advance at every point with conquering force.

DELAWARE.

Rt. Rev. F. J. Kinsman, D. D., Bishop

The Mission of St. Stephen's, Harrington, has begun a promising chapter in its history, under the auspices of Archdeacon Thompson.

Thanksgiving was specially well observed in all the churches of the Diocese. The congregation of Immanuel, Wilmington, raised a special sum for the interest on the church debt, and increased the salary of the rector, the Rev. William H. Laird, D. D. Parishioners of St. Andrew's, Wilmington, presented the rector, the Rev. R. W. Trapnell, with money for an automobile.

The Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese tried to make good use of the Advent Call. In parishes where the plan proposed by the Board of Missions was carried out, the results were most gratifying. In some instances the ladies, where there was doubt as to whether the plan would work, proved by experiment that it worked surprisingly well.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. R. D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. A. C. Thompson, D. D., Suffragan.

The Diocesan Board of Missions held its regular quarterly meeting at the residence of Bishop Tucker, in Norfolk, Wednesday, December 11. All of the members were in attendance. The usual routine business was transacted and appropriation made for the coming year to the amount of $15,000 to maintain the missionary work in the Diocese.

The Rev. G. W. Phelps, a presbyter in canonical connection with the Diocese of North Carolina, but who for the last ten years has made his residence at Victoria, Va., died at that place on Thursday, December 6, and was buried on Saturday, the 7th. Bishop Tucker officiating. While Mr. Phelps was a retired minister, connected with another Diocese, he did faithful work, maintaining services at the church at Victoria; faithful in shepherding that small flock, and died loved and honored by all the community. One of his sons is the Rev. R. R. Phelps, of Norfolk, Va.

Mr. F. W. Bliss, who for some time had been in charge of the church at Big Stone Gap, as licensed lay-reader, was ordained to the Diaconate by Bishop Thomson at Big Stone Gap Sunday, December 8. Archdeacon E. A. Rich preached the sermon.

Bishop Tucker recently visited the church at Covington and confirmed a class of twenty-three, presented by the rector, Mr. Buxton. The same day he visited the Home for Homeless Boys and there, at Grace Mission, confirmed eight boys connected with the institution. The Home for Boys is in a prosperous condition and under wise and careful leaders. These eight boys who were confirmed show how those who would probably have been a menace to society were brought to see their full duty and to take their place in the Church.

SPOKANE.

Rt. Rev. Herman Page, D. D., Bishop.

Thanksgiving Services: At All Saints' Cathedral the service was the most largely attended of any of recent years. Addresses were given by Bishop Page, the Rev. Thomas Harper, D. D., of Westminster Congregational Church, who has just returned from France, and whose account of the work of the Y. M. C. A. will long be remembered, and Mr. Lester Edge, Roman Catholic, gave a helpful address.

Advent Call: In connection with the Advent Call, Bishop Page held a Quiet Day at All Saints' Cathedral December 7th, taking as his theme "The Lord's Prayer."

The Rev. W. C. Hicks, dean of All Saints' Cathedral, is to resume his work at Spokane after Christmas, he having spent nearly a year in France as chaplain.

The Rev. George H. Severance returns from Louisville, Ky., where he attended the Chaplains' School.

The Spanish influenza ban has made the work somewhat difficult, but the clergy are planning for the future, and it is hoped that the Church activities will be taken up with renewed enthusiasm.

The Church Home for Children at Lidgerwood, Spokane, having grown too small to satisfactorily accommodate the needs of the work, the old Houston School building is now to be taken over, and Mrs. F. W. Krause, who before her marriage was matron, is again taking up the work, and the outlook is more hopeful than it has been for many years. She will have the most capable assistants that can be secured at this time. The new home will accommodate about thirty children, and as Bishop Page says, "Our main aim will be to give close personal attention to each of the children, and create a real home atmosphere that will take away the tinge of the orphanage."

The Rev. Reginald T. T. Hicks, who has been acting dean for nearly a year of All Saints' Cathedral, has rendered valuable service during the epidemic of influenza, and amongst other work has gone out to Fort Wright and ministered to the soldier boys, who certainly appreciated all that he did for them. During his tenure of office at All Saints' he has won a large circle of friends, and his relation to the work and to his brother clergy has been exceptionally cordial.

The Rev. Leonard K. Smith, the new rector at Kenniwick, has met with a most favorable response from the people; consequently the work is growing, and the Church outlook in this field is at the present time most promising.

EASTON.

Rt. Rev. Wm. F. Adams, D. D., Bishop.

The winter meeting of the Southern Convocation will be held in St. Peter's Church, Salisbury, January 7 and 8. Last October the fall meeting was not held because of the prevailing epidemic.

Another epidemic of the so-called influenza is now prevailing, but it is thought the churches will not be closed this time.

The Diocesan Journals, which were delayed on account of the serious illness of the Secretary, have been printed and distributed.

The vestry of St. Peter's Church, Salisbury, have purchased a rectory immediately opposite the church, into which the rector has already moved.

Up to December 1 only seven parishes in the Diocese had met their apportionment for General Missions. Of these, two were in Cecil County, two in Queen Anne's County, two in Worcester County and one in Kent County. Each went considerably over the amount apportioned by the committee.

The management of the Children's Home, Easton, were made glad by the increased offering in cash and in kind words made by the parishes throughout the Diocese on Thanksgiving Day. All exceeded the amount of the preceding year.

The following clergymen have recently taken work in the Diocese: The Rev. Douglass I. Hobbs, Church Hill; the Rev. James M. Wright, Marion, and the Rev. F. H. Blunt, Quantico.

ALABAMA.

Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop.

St. John's Church, Montgomery.

On Sunday, November 24, at 9:30 A. M., the new chapel connected with this church was consecrated by the Rt. Rev. C. M. Beckwith, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese. This beautiful chapel is the very generous gift of Mrs. Alice H. Farley, one of St. John's devoted members, in memory of her husband, Mr. John J. Farley. At eleven A. M. the same day, the new rector, the Rev. Richard Wilkinson, D. D., formerly of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Lexington, Ky., was instituted as rector by the Bishop. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Richard L. McCready, D. D., Dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Louisville, who also preached in the evening, when a class of nineteen persons were confirmed.

During the following week an interesting series of meetings were held in the evenings. On Monday a smoker for the men of the congregation and their friends; Tuesday, after opening devotions, a discussion of "St. John's and Her New Responsibilities—Will She Be Able to Meet Them?" and Wednesday, "The Church at Her Task—Who is Doing What is Being Done?"

Thursday, Thanksgiving Service in the morning and a patriotic service in the evening; and on Friday, a congregational "At Home" in the Parish House. A specially arranged musical programme was a feature on these occasions. On Thursday evening the soldiers from Camp Sheridan and surrounding military posts and the men's organizations of the city were special guests.

NEWARK.

Rt. Rev. E. S. Lines, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. R. Stearly, D. D., Coadjutor.

Ordination: On the second Sunday in Advent in Christ Church, Hackensack, Rev. George F. Collard was ordained to the priesthood by Bishop Lines. He was presented for ordination by the Rev. Victor W. Mori, and the Bishop was the preacher. Several of the clergy were present assisting in the services. Mr. Collard is the curate in the parish, having charge of the work with the Rev. Robert Blickensderfer, absent in Y. M. C. A. work in France, with his term of service nearly ended.

St. Peter's Church, Clifton, is about to become a parish, with the Rev. John G. Martin, who recently returned from Y. M. C. A. service in France, as its rector.

The return of the Rev. Barrett P. Tyler, chaplain, who was recently very seriously wounded, is expected very soon. The wound was very severe, but it is thought that he will not be permanently disabled.

VIRGINIA.

Rt. Rev. R. A. Gibson, D. D., Bishop.
Rt. Rev. W. C. Brown, D. D., Coadjutor.

The "Peace of Jerusalem."

Resolved, That the Section on Religious Forces of the Virginia Council of Defense heartily endorse the suggestion that the Peace Conference at Versailles, in determining the place and official manner of making known the adoption of International Peace, be requested to proclaim it at the City of Jerusalem; and that it be called The Peace of Jerusalem, and that the day on which this Peace of Jerusalem is proclaimed be instituted an international Thanksgiving Day, on which all peoples of all countries and all beliefs shall repair to their respective house of worship to offer thanks unto God.

The above action was taken with a view to submitting the proposition named to the National and other State Councils of Defense. The Chairman of the Virginia Branch of the League to Enforce Peace also heartily approves the proposition, and will submit it to the National League.

Armenian and Syrian Relief.

Appeals have been issued to every minister in Virginia to support the intensive campaign in this State for $300,000 for the relief of suffering Armenians and Syrians, which opens January 12, continuing for eight days, under the auspices of the American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief. The support of the people in every section of Virginia is urgently needed if the State is to raise its quota in the national campaign. The movement has been strongly indorsed by every one familiar with conditions in the near East; State Chairman Walker Scott, of Richmond, has appealed to the people throughout Virginia to contribute to this cause—one of the greatest movements ever undertaken for the relief of suffering humanity. Virginia ministers have just been sent the following letter by State Director Frank E. McCravy:

"We are entering into a nation-wide campaign, January 12 to 19, for $30,000,000 to save the lives of 4,000,000 people who are literally starving in the eastern war zone. At least 400,000 of these destitute are children without mothers. No government grants are available such as those given Belgium, France and Serbia. American generosity is their only hope.

"In this great cause of helping suffering humanity we know of no better man to ask for co-operation than a minister of the gospel, and so we are writing to you, asking that you co-operate with us to the greatest possible extent, and do everything in your power to help us put this drive over.

"We are earnestly requesting every minister in Virginia to preach a special sermon along the lines of the great need of the Armenians and Syrians on January 12, using, if possible, the text: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, we did it unto me." Then on January 19, the closing day of the campaign, we earnestly request that you will take an offering for this fund and turn it over to your county chairman.

"This is indeed a great opportunity, and we know the cause of suffering humanity will appeal to you."

By the will of Miss Mary Custis Lee, Old Christ Church, Alexandria, in which General Lee worshipped, is to receive $10,000, and the R. E. Lee Memorial Church, Lexington, is to receive $10,000. Other institutions named in the will are: The Alexandria Hospital, Alexandria, $5,000; the monument of General Lee in Richmond, $5,000 for its preservation and upkeep; the Society for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities, the "Virginia Room" and the Virginia Division of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, $3,000 each; the Virginia Historical Society, $2,000, and Washington and Lee University, $10,000.

The Needy Confederate Women's Home of Richmond is to receive $5,000.

MIKE.

Rt. Rev. Rogers Israel, D. D., Bishop.

Archdeaconry of Meadville.

"Sympathetic Religious Education for Our Brethren of Other Communion" was the plea made by the Rev. George Sutton, curate of St. Clement's Church, Greenville, Pa., at the meeting of the Archdeaconry of Meadville which had its autumn session in St. Mark's Church, Erie, Pa., December 10 and 11. Mr. Sutton preached the Archdeaconry sermon, and as he has lately been received into the Church from the Presbyterian ministry he spoke with full knowledge and conviction. He stated there was a lamentable lack of knowledge of the Church and its teaching. It was supposed to be part of the Roman Church, or with a dividing line so tenuous no one could find it. If we would only get in closer touch with our Christian brethren in a sympathetic way they were ready to listen and to receive instruction. In the debate that this subject occasioned, the Rev. Bruce Reddish, rector of Trinity Church, New Castle, said, "Come into close contact with the Ministerial Assoclation in whatever city you are, and you will receive a great deal of benefit."

The Archdeaconry opened with the report of Dr. Aigner, President of the Standing Committee, upon the condition of the missionary work of the Diocese. He stated that every mission station except one was filled and conditions were encouraging. The chapel at Lawrence Park, a suburb of Erie, where the government is building hundreds of houses and where Bishop Israel had anticipated religious needs by erecting a church, was showing steady growth under the care of the Rev. Harold Jenkin, the rector of St. Mark's. The new rector at Corry, coming in residence during the influenza epidemic, has achieved excellent results in spite of this handicap; and he is re-establishing the missions at both Watford and Union City.

Wednesday morning the Rev. Bruce Reddish, civilian chaplain at Camp Lee, gave a very interesting account of his experiences in camp. He found the work very necessary, and well worth while. The personal and hospital work were of the utmost importance. The rector of St. Mark's then read a very instructive paper upon Dean Abbott's book, "The Religion of the Tommie." This fitted itself in delightfully to the discussion on "Religious Unity."

The morning session of the Archdeaconry adjourned to the Hotel Lawrence, where, through the kindness of a member of the Cathedral Chapter, and with the cordial consent of the rector of St. Mark's, the delegates were guests of the Rotary Club and the Board of Commerce at luncheon given to Lieutenant Wierzbicki, who spoke about his native France and the work of the Peace Conference.

In the afternoon the dean led a discussion on "Missions and the Apportionment." After prayer by Archdeacon E. J. Owen the meeting adjourned.

HARRISBURG.

Rt. Rev. J. H. Darlington, D. D., Bishop.

News Items of Interest.

The Rev. James Hart Lamb has accepted a call to Christ Church, Coudersport, and will take up his work there in the near future.

The Rev. Frederick J. Compson, of the Diocese of Illinois, has accepted a call to St. John's, Huntington, and expects to be in residence in Christmas.

On account of ill health the Rev. George O. Eskins has resigned St. Paul's, Manheim and Hope Church, Mt. Hope.

The Rev. Charles Harris, Jr., has resigned St. John's, South Williamsport, and accepted an appointment to Grace Church, Riverside; St. Mark's, Northumberland, and All Saints, Selins Grove.

The Rev. Joseph Hinks has resigned Trinity Church, Renovo, and accepted a call to the Diocese of Bethlehem.

A rectory has just been completed at Riverside. It is of wood with concrete foundations. It is not only completed as a building, but it has been completely furnished with furnace, range, carpets, pictures, furniture, bedding, china and glassware, coal in the cellar, all ready for the occupancy of the newly appointed minister who will be in residence in a very short time. The rectory is a memorial of Mr. Lemuel E. Wells.

"Our Duty to the Present."

Matthew Arnold well expressed the modern spirit when he wrote: "An age which has its face towards the future, and in which men are full of plans for the welfare of the world, is not an age which has lost its faith. Its temper of mind is constructive; it is eager for new institutions, keen for new ideas, and has already a half-belief in a future in which all things will be new."

With these hopeful words ringing in our ears, let us attempt to face the religious problem of the present age. Men are certainly asking as they have never asked before, whether Christianity is competent for the task that it has undertaken to do, and it is for us in whom the Christian Church is at this moment partially embodied to give an answer to this question, and to declare fearlessly that the Christian faith and the Christian manhood can supply the world's needs. The Catholic faith is a religion of facts, not of speculations for Christ in His own religion. Christ is Christianity. But it is sometimes forgotten that Christianity appeals to the entire manhood for its acceptance; to the intellect no less than to the heart and conscience. The religious teacher of today must be ready to bring out of his treasures things new as well as old; he must never be weary of translating into current idiom the thoughts of old, but he must also be ever ready to welcome the fresh voices of later wisdom.

Ruskin once said that the greatest thing a man could do was to see something and tell the others what he sees; and surely the gospel as Christ gave it, was a gift of the seeing power in all men, for all Christian theology is the result of thought and reflection upon the life and teaching of Jesus Christ.

The Church of God is, in this age, beginning to comprehend more fully some of the profound teachings of her Master. Of one thing we can be sure—that people today are more intelligent, more sincere, and more independent than they were; the most timorous person now is more daring in his private meditations than the boldest of a former generation. A modern writer has well said that the passion for truth is the most significant demand in modern life.

We have for other phenomena identical precedents in history, but this new determination to take off, as it were, the blinkers and sit squarely and firmly, face to face with truth—in the hope of finding her companionable—is indeed a new inspiration on the part of the human race.

The ideal unity of many men, of many minds, is gradually shaping itself into actual existence, and the clearest lesson for our time is the need of tolerance and charity.

In Christianity the individual does not stand alone—"we are every one members one of another."

Truth is to be found not in the conclusions to which any single line of thought may lead, but in the totality of conclusions to which all lines have led, and are still leading the instructed reason of man. Today we have advanced far enough to see that amid all the varieties of religious opinion the goal of religious aspiration is one. Today the new is returning to the old, for it is returning to Christ Himself, and we may if we will see how all the previous movements have been preparing its way.

How many "Lives of Christ" have been written in our own generation?

And yet the conviction is growing that it has not been thoroughly written; for it is the living Christ of today whom the world in the great war, sickness and sorrow needs. If in this age we are determined to begin with a negation, to live without Christ, without sacraments, without prayer, until we have mastered all the speculations for and against these verities, then our life will be thin and unsatisfactory. The Christian religion is an existing fact. It is a fact which nineteen centuries have proved on the whole most in accordance with other facts, and with the deepest feelings and the highest aspirations of the noblest men and women of the foremost races in the march of the highest civilization. It requires no train of reasoning or labored reflection to convince us that it is better for ourselves and for others to act on the precepts of Christ rather than to obey the selfish promptings of our animal nature. Physical life is too short to exhaust all the secrets of Divine wisdom; it were presumption to assume it were possible; let us therefore begin with the accumulated experience of the past, and spend the future in honest endeavor to verify and enlarge it for ourselves. Then shall our experience become the witness, which the Church shall bear to future ages. For it is here that individual genius contributes an important element to the corporate reasoning of the world.

It is no mere polished formula, nor philosophic completeness of doctrine that will satisfy—for we seek to know One who will solve for us all the riddles of existence. And with life illuminated by that knowledge, we confess with gladness that it is in His light that we shall see light.—Rev. D. G. McKinnon, D. D., in Mission Herald.

The Christ of Christmas.

The Christ of Christmas came to earth
In simple, human guise;
'Twas but a Babe who from afar
Was sought by men most wise.
A star led them to where He lay,
In slumber deep and sweet;
Their royal gifts with deepest awe,
They laid before His feet

The Christ of Christmas came to bring
Sweet peace to every heart;
Good will should reign where He is King.
While bitter thoughts depart.
New hope and joy He brought to earth.
That all by faith might know
His perfect way of truth and love,
And in His likeness grow.

O Christ of Christmas, fill our hearts
With faith and trust this day,
For we would follow where Thy feet
Lead up the narrow way.
Oh! Grant us strength to bravely bear
The trials sent by Thee,
To make us worthy of Thy love
Through all eternity.

The spirit of Christianity is essentially socialistic—not the socialism of the Nihilist assassin or of the Communist petrolense—but the socialism of the New Testament, which would have us, recognizing the brotherhood of man, to come under the burdens of others to alleviate and bless. We, however, have left it to Red Republicans and visionaries to preach in the name of atheism a wild travesty of the truth committed to us by Christ, and God is visiting the sin of our neglect by the threatened outburst of many a slumbering volcano.

Christianity and the Community

Thy Kingdom Come on Earth

THE REV. R. CARY MONTAGUE, Editor

LET OTHERS FOLLOW THIS EXAMPLE.

We publish the following account of the work done by the Pittsburgh Room Registry, hoping that it may inspire our readers in other cities to adopt a similar plan for safeguarding the morals of the hosts of young people flocking to our cities in these days. The Secretary, Lillian M. Smith, of this organization, writes:

A most vital question these days when so many young people, especially young girls, are leaving the protection of their homes and parents to seek work in the city, is where and how shall these young people live. All the dormitories provided by the Christian Associations and other agencies are filled to their capacity all the time, and usually have a waiting list of those who desire the privileges of such homes.

It is absolutely unsafe for a young stranger in the city to start out to hunt a room or boarding house without the advice of some one familiar with the district and who can guarantee that the houses to which they are directed are respectable. This the Room Registry of Pittsburgh has undertaken to do. It does more than just guarantee respectability. Its object is to find real homes where a sympathetic interest is taken in the paying guest and where our young people will be safe from moral danger and temptation.

The modern rooming house is conducted as a strictly business proposition and ordinarily there is no responsibility assumed for the roomers so long as they pay their rent and do not mistreat the property. Frequently the owners seem to take pride in knowing nothing about the character or habits of their roomers. All this makes for a foot-freeness and lack of restraint that is not socially healthful. Young girls particularly need home relations even in rooming houses.

In the same rooming house with them may be other roomers who are highly immoral. Housekeepers who do not consider it their business to know anything about the moral or religious lives of their roomers, of course, make no effort to protect them from having others near who are of questionable character. Investigation has shown this actually to exist in many cases in the city. The situation is made still more serious by the presence of houses of questionable character which display the ordinary rooming house sign, so that a boy or girl, a stranger in the community and seeking a room, can very easily locate in one of these places in utter ignorance of its character. These houses are of a kind that are difficult for even a most careful police system to suppress and under looser administration may become quite numerous.

Every house listed with the Registry is personally inspected so that we know that all of our rooms are clean and have the necessary comforts and conveniences. The standards are high and no house is listed that does not measure up to them. Each landlady must furnish at least three references—her pastor, family physician and a business man or woman of reputable standing in the community. She must also state where she has lived and what business she has been engaged in for a period of three years previous to her application. This is in order that we may be able to trace up her reputation in the city or town from which she came. Most of those listed with us, however, have lived in Pittsburgh, and often in the same house or neighborhood for many years.

In order to distinguish our houses from the ordinary rooming house the Registry offers to its landladies the use of our distinctive furnished room sign, which is virtually a guarantee of respectability. This sign is never sold and must be returned if for any reason the house displaying it is stricken from our file.

The Room Registry is an incorporated body, created and sustained by six of the leading social and religious organizations of Pittsburgh. These six organizations are the Young Women's Christian Association, the Young Men's Christian Association, the Council of Churches of Christ, the Catholic Women's League, Council of Jewish Women and Associated Charities. It is not a commercial proposition, no charge being made for its services. It is entirely dependent on voluntary contributions for its support.

We have just completed our first year's work. During that time more than seven hundred persons have applied for rooms and received directions and sympathetic advice. Many happy connections have been made between lonely young people and the friendly householder, in numerous cases a lonely mother whose own boy or girl is far away from home.

The main office is at the Young Women's Christian Association on Chatam Street. A list of rooms for men is on file at the Young Men's Christian Association at Penn Avenue and Seventh Street.

If your boy or girl is coming to Pittsburgh, have them see one of our workers before seeking a room. You will then know that they are living in the right kind of environment.

The foregoing is a most excellent plan, and no doubt accomplishes great good, but what is most needed in our cities is more drastic legislation to compel landlords and real estate agents to inspect more closely the uses to which buildings are put.

If a heavy fine were imposed upon property owners when houses were occupied by tenants who were using them for immoral purposes, and such fines were divided between the owners and the agents through whom the leases were made it would do more to stamp out vice than all the volunteer organizations in the country.

PLAIN WORDS TO THE CHURCHES.

Writing in the Boston Transcript, William T. Ellis gives some very sensible advice of Church people and to the Clergy in particular concerning the great wave of radical ideas that is sweeping over the world to-day.

He says, as quoted in the Literary Digest:

"Certainly the churches should be sympathetic with every movement tending toward social progress, the amelioration of the masses, the righting of wrongs, and the emancipation of all men everywhere from bondage of mind or spirit or estate. Often the contrary attitude is charged against the churches. A hackneyed story has it that a group of workmen hissed the mention of the Church and cheered the name of Jesus. Radicals constantly claim that the Church is the defender and proponent of the privileged classes, the hiring of aristocracy and 'big business.'

"Whatever occasion there may have been for this indictment, it simply is not true as respects the Church as a whole, and in her spirit and doctrine and membership. While the awakening of the Church to her social mission has been recent, it has been rapid. Hundreds of books upon the social conception of Christianity have been issued within a decade. That whatever affects human life concerns the Church has now become almost axiomatic in religious circles. There are no more ardent or clear-eyed exponents of the new era of brotherhood, democracy and justice than ministers of the Gospel, who are heralds of the Kingdom of God on earth.

"Nevertheless, the churches will be found opposed to Bolshevism because of the essential nature of the latter. . . . It is more than a revolt against social inequalities and injustices; it is avowedly a class propaganda of hatred. It repudiates all law and authority, human and divine, and frankly seeks the subjugation and extinction, when convenient, of all persons who do not belong to the proletariat. It knows no right except the assured 'right of the toiler to rule.'

Now that Bolshevism is challenging the Western world, the churches must give themselves to self-examination. Mr. Ellis continues:

"For if the sincere and brotherly teachings of Jesus and of the New Testament have been practised, there can be no need for the inauguration of

"No fair-minded observer can claim that the churches of America are subordinated to what the Socialist calls 'the interests' and 'plutocracy.' Equally, though, no fair-minded observer can deny that many individual churches, especially in cities, and most denominations, show especial consideration to the wealthy and socially prominent. 'Leading laymen' is fairly a synonym for a man of wealth. A man does not need to display piety, brains, or activity in order to be listed as a 'leading layman'; a large bank account which is reasonably accessible to Church causes, and an occasional attendance upon church services, are enough to enroll a man in this category of eminence. Did anybody ever hear of a poor man, though a saint, a scholar, and a devoted Christian worker, becoming a 'leading layman'?"

"This condition proves the vulnerability of the Church. To this extent she is a class organization. And in so far as she has neglected to champion the cause of the oppressed, the neglected, the weak and the suffering, she has opened herself to the shafts of the radical's criticism; and, what is more important, to the condemnation of her Lord."

Collect For the Innocents' Day.

O Almighty God, Who out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast ordained strength and made infants to glorify Thee by their deaths; Mortify and kill all vices in us, and so strengthen us by Thy grace, that by the innocency of our lives and constancy of our faith even unto death we may glorify Thy holy name; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Collect For First Sunday After Christmas.

Almighty God, Who hast given us Thy only begotten Son to take our nature upon Him, and as at this time to be born of a pure virgin; Grant that we being regenerate and made Thy children by adoption and grace, may daily be renewed by Thy Holy Spirit; through the same our Lord Jesus Christ, Who liveth and reigneth with Thee and the same Spirit ever one God, world without end. Amen.

Collect For the Circumcision of Christ, January 1.

Almighty God, Who madest Thy blessed Son to be circumcised, and obedient to the law for man; Grant us the true circumcision of the Spirit; that our hearts, and all our members, being mortified from all worldly and carnal lusts, we may in all things obey Thy blessed will; through the same Thy Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Note: Dr. Andrews says: "The most probable arrangement is that the Lord, though taken to the palace of Annas first (if examined by him, which is not unlikely, no record of it is given), was after a short interval sent to Caiaphas, in whose palace the examination took place. This was preliminary to the trial before the Council, without formal sentence, witnesses or charges.

Christ For the New Year.

This New Year's morn, lo, Jesus meeteth thee

First at the open door, and greeteth thee

With His own blessed "Peace be unto thee!"

Fear not to tread the future's unknown ways!

Gird up thy loins! Lift up thy heart with praise!

For, lo, I will be with thee all the days!"

It is enough His cheering word to hear; Whatever may betide, thou need'st not fear

With Him to tread the pathway of the year.

All paths are safe where He doth lead the way,

All places Bethels are where He doth stay;

All darkness dies where He is light of day.

The New Year.

In many respects one day is much like another, and but for our calendars we would not know that at the stroke of midnight, before the sound of the striking clock has ceased, one year has glided silently into the next, and by our standards time has begun a new cycle.

It makes very little difference to this mysterious and durable element of time what our artificial divisions are, but in many respects it does mean much to us. We are ever in need of new beginnings, our poor efforts go so much awry as periodically to need readjustment, there are mistakes to be rectified and new ventures to begin.

In a hundred ways we need and welcome the chance for a new start and this the new year gives us. It is time for inventory, for taking stock and striking a balance in the things of life. This naturally leads on to new hopes, new plans and new resolutions for the year that is beginning. The old year shows so much that has been wrongly done or not done at all, so much that could be improved upon, that the individual with the slightest spark of ambition is glad of the occasion of a new start.

Happiness is perhaps the greatest desire of man, but the conditions of happiness go deeper than many suppose. Most of the mistakes in life are made in obedience to a wrong notion as to what constitutes happiness or in what direction it can be gained, but the universal wish for a "Happy New Year" is fundamentally right nevertheless. If by it we mean the absence of all annoyances, miseries and pain, it is bound to disappointment, for these things cannot be wholly avoided. For what measure of freedom we enjoy from the things that harass us, we are thankful, but only the superficial and short-sighted are content with this. Real happiness is a thing that springs from within and is not so much the creature of as the reaction from circumstances. It belongs to character, not to events, and depends upon interpretation which character gives to life.

This being true, essential happiness is indissolubly bound up with goodness, for only a character developed by goodness can find the satisfaction of its deepest and permanent needs. So to say, "I wish you a Happy New Year," while it includes such things as sunny skies and wealth and health and the laughter of friends, looks really to the wider, stronger, more joyous aspects of life in its essential character and not merely in its outward circumstances.

The new year throws the gauge of battle at our feet. It says, in effect, "I am here, what are you going to make of me?" It is a challenge to our best endeavor, for the real issue lies with us. In our parish life every sign is hopeful of splendid year. This in itself is a challenge to us not to fail in the opportunity for larger things which is given to us. The elements that make for parochial strength are constantly growing stronger, the corporate consciousness, the unity of purpose and action, the spirit of service and the spirit of friendliness. These, based on sincere devotion to our Lord, are the elements of success.

We have every reason to face the new year confidently, trusting if we be faithful that God will give us larger opportunity for service and greater measure of success.—Seattle Churchman.

The Secret of a Happy New Year.

We wish one another a Happy New Year. We wish it from our hearts as the best of gifts to the dear ones at home. We wish a Happy New Year to those whom we meet in business and to those who serve us and whom we serve. How shall we make the wish a practical entity? Suppose we look into the Book of God. What are the fruits of the Spirit? "Love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness and temperance." The secret of a happy New Year, of a happy home, of a happy heart life, may be read in this amazing list.

The first trio—love, joy and peace—would make the plainest household complete and beautiful, would enlighten toil, would render forever impossible strife and friction, and send parents and children forth ready for any adventure that might meet them on the road. The second trio—long-suffering, gentleness and goodness—if possessed by any of us, would surely make society better and purer, and forever do away with shameful conflicts between labor and capital; would trample down selfishness and harshness, and incline us to live according to the rules of our Lord in the Sermon on the Mount. The third trio—faith, meekness and temperance—contain in themselves the elements of heroism and conquest. Faith nerves the arm and strengthens the soul in critical moments. Meekness wins the hardest battles and finally inherits the earth. Temperance conserves youth and vigor to life's latest day, is limited to no asceticism, but enters into each new day as a saving grace. Temperance might be called with propriety the cement of character building. Without these fruits of the Spirit not one of us can hope reasonably for a happy New Year.—Margaret E. Sangster.

New Year's Eve.

The twilight of the year again has fallen,
Its darkening shades enveil the quiet land,

While o'er the hills of time a rosy dawn
Waits but the one consenting glance of God

To blazon forth and wake anew the world.

I turn me round and scan the path I've come;

'Twas pleasant there, and there 'twas toilsome, too.

Rough, smooth, wide, straight, in places, yet throughout

A Guiding Presence cheered the onward way.

When Joy enclosed my willing hand in hers,

Then was my gladness sweeter for His smile;

And when the hand of Grief oppressed my brow,

His gentle whisper soothed the aching throb.

Of times I wandered from the beaten track

To gather dainty flowerets by the way,
Or chase the golden-winged butterflies
That crossed my pathway in the summer noon;

But ever as I strayed that Guiding Hand
Back drew me to the road I ought to tread.

Some ill I've done, I know; perchance some good;

But much, I fear, the ill outweighs the good.

Yet still I've tried, though feebly, it may be,

To think of others, and not all of self;
And so I pray Him to forgive the ill,
And bless the good, and blessing it, bless me.

Now can I face the dawn with fearless eyes,

Whatever it brings to me of joy or pain

Cannot avail to quench my glowing hope;

For that same Hand that led will lead me still;

That same sweet Voice will cheer and comfort give.

Break forth in splendor o'er the ancient hills,

O glorious dawning of the glad New Year!

Flood all the world with Hope's rich light again;

Wake Truth, and Love, and Faith to warmer zeal,

And scatter Darkness to the winds of Heaven.

Probation.

By Herman J. Stich.

His Christian name was Timothy—Tim for short. He was the leader of the worst juvenile gang that infested his particular section of the water front. Though just entering his teens, in fearless pugnacity, in boyish personality, and in disdain and distrust of the "bulls," he had no peer.

His laws were inexorable and punishment for the offender was quick and inevitable. The unpardonable infraction of his code was to "peach." Whoever violated this mutuality would find his life made daily more miserable through general assault and molestation until he either moved far away or wound up in the hospital.

With a naturally rugged constitution developed by running the streets all day long, he was chock-full of vitality and could fight like a bulldog. His fleetness of foot, too, had stood him in good stead in eluding many a storekeeper or policeman, tantalized into hysterical fury. He could throw a stone further, swifter and straighter than any "bloke" in the vicinity.

And one unlucky day he was caught and brought down to the Children's Court.

His air was defiant and laconic. He denied participation in the robbery on the part of himself or his followers. The judge was urging him on.

"I want to tell you, Tim, that there is one kind of a boy that I can never do anything for, and that is a liar. I must have the truth before I can even begin to think of doing anything. I won't make any bargain with you. I won't say, 'If you tell me the truth I will let you go,' or anything like that. But I can assure you that if you tell me the truth—the whole truth—you will not be the worse off for it."

The boy looked sullen and distrustful.

"You see, Tim, to give you a chance at all I would have to put you on probation. Probation is given to boys who are sorry for what they have done and who want to turn over a new leaf. But if you say you haven't done anything, you have nothing to be sorry for. If you say that you didn't commit this robbery and I find that you did, I must send you away for several years. Even if you tell me the truth, I may have to send you away, but if I am convinced that you are lying you will have to go away. Tell me the truth, Tim. I won't hurt you."

The judge looked at him kindly. His voice was pleasing and sympathetic. Tim did not know it, but he was beginning to like this man. He talked to him so differently from what he was used to. He actually made Tim feel that he—Tim—was forcing the judge to do something unpleasant by sending him away. Tim looked up into his face.

"This is your court, you know," he heard him say. "I am here to do you good, to help you to become a better man, to make you a credit to your parents and to the community. See how you are disgracing your poor father and mother and breaking their hearts. You won't have them with you very long, you know. They are working day and night for you and hoping you will be a great man some day."

Tim swallowed hard and tightened his jaws to keep back tears to which he was a complete stranger.

"Won't you tell me the truth, Tim?" the judge asked.

The boy's demeanor changed.

"Yes, judge," he said.

In a few minutes the story came out; how they had wanted to get "hunk" on a certain storekeeper; how the gang had waited for the holiday when the shop would be closed up and everybody gone; how they had broken in through the back yard; how they had gotten the money in the cash register and celebrated.

"And who was with you, Tim?" the judge asked.

The old defiant look returned and he remained quiet.

"I only want to know who they are so that I can bring them here, Tim, and make better boys of them. We don't punish boys in this court. We try to correct their faults and reform them, Tim. We have to have your friends. You want them to be made better, don't you, Tim?"

Tim looked rather doubtful. He thought of the word "sissy." But somehow this seemed different.

"We want the whole story and the whole truth, Tim, for the good of you and your friends," he heard the judge continue. Slowly he melted. A few more questions elicited the names and addresses of the rest of the gang.

"Well, Tim, I won't decide what I will do until next week, when I have had a full investigation made. Come back a week from today."

"You mean—" Tim stopped short. He looked rather incredulous. He had always thought of the court as a place from which no one ever came out. But perhaps he had not heard aright. He looked up.

"You mean I can go home now," he quivered fearfully.

The judge smiled.

"Yes, Tim," he answered. "I'm going to trust you right now, you see. Come back a week from today."

During the week Tim was a great aid to the probation officer who was assigned to investigate conditions in that district. He showed him all their haunts, hiding places, tricks and schemes for evading the law and its representatives, and he succeeded in getting his friends and their friends to declare a truce with the neighboring blocks with whom they waged perpetual war with bricks, ash-can covers, bottles and other equally effective weapons. On the appointed day Tim appeared again before the judge.

The judge was reading the report of the investigation to himself, and from the expression on his face it was evident that it could easily have been more favorable. It was the old story of truancy, vagrancy and crime. It was a long report and he read slowly. After what seemed eons of time the judge looked up and said in a serious tone: "Tim, you have about the worst record I have examined in years. Why, you have hardly been to school half a dozen times this term, and here we are at the end of it. Don't you realize what this means, Tim? The city is spending over forty millions of dollars a year to educate its boys and girls. You know you never can make up a minute that you lose from school. That other fellow who attends regularly and studies, and is getting ahead of you, you call him a mamma's boy and a sissy; but don't you know that when you both get big, and go to look for a job—why, you won't have a look-in along-side of him. He will get along fine and work, while you—you won't be fit for anything because you haven't had any education."

Tim was beginning to understand. "And then you play craps. That's bad, Tim. It is not so terrible in itself. It is what it leads to. You get into bad company and you are liable to be arrested again and again, and finally sent away. You are lucky to have escaped so far. Crap-shooting leads to stealing and robberies, and worse. I had a boy before me the other day who lost his whole week's salary shooting craps. He was afraid to go home without his pay, so he went ahead and stole to get the money."

Tim understood perfectly. "And then here is a long record of thefts and burglaries in your neighborhood that the people blame you for. If you were a little older I would not be talking to you like this. We would use other words. You would be a criminal. You would have committed a crime, and you would be sent to a jail or prison. What do you think I ought to do with you, Tim?"

The boy hesitated for a few moments.

"Give me another chance, judge?" he cried suddenly.

"I don't think you deserve it, Tim, but what will you do if I give you a chance?" the judge asked.

"I'll be good, judge; see if I don't," Tim replied.

The judge looked at him impassively but kindly. Suddenly he leaned toward him and said, earnestly:

"I'll tell you what, Tim. I'll give you a chance on probation. Do you know what probation means? Probation is giving you a chance to show to me that you can make good of your own free will. If I put you in a reformatory, or some other place where you will be locked in, you would have to be good, because they would make you behave. But I would a thousand times rather have a boy make good on probation. It is the testing, the trying out, the proving that you can become a man of your own strength. I think you can do it, Tim. You are all right down at bottom, but you haven't thought enough about these things and the future. I will give you a chance and I want you to turn over a new leaf, and to get as many of your friends to do it as you can. Probation!"

"God bless you, judge!" came fervently from the lips of Tim's parents, as they moved toward the door.

"Thank you," said Tim, as he turned to go.

The judge reached over to take up the next case.

"Show your thanks, Tim, by making good," he said, and he smiled.—The Living Church.

My life is over! Lo, I stand
Upon the smooth, untrodden strand,
Which marks the shore of that vast sea
By mortals called Eternity.

My life is over! Hopes and fears
Have come and gone with vanished years.
Those hours of joy, those years of pain,
Henceforth can ne'er return again.

Time hath flowed on, a steady stream;
Darkened by shadows, lit by gleam
Of golden sunshine, till its waves
Now softly beat upon Love's graves.
For they are gone, who, side by side,
Once watched with me the rising tide;
When Pleasure's bark, with banners gay,
Bore youth along its joyous way.

The voyage was short! Stern Duty's call,
Sooner or later, came to all:
Singe, in God's world, work must be done,
Life's battle fought, Life's victory won;
And now 'tis o'er. Life's setting sun
Nears the horizon. It is run,
The race appointed, and the prize
Within the Master's keeping lies

But this I know, His loving hand
Hath guided me o'er sea and land.
It leads me still; His will is best:
Bright is the vision of His rest:
In Him I am, and shall be, blest.

The bearer of good news always has a sweet voice.

A New Year's Meditation.

As the winged arrow flies
Speedily, the mark to find;
As the lightning from the skies
Darts, and leaves no trace behind;
Swiftly thus our fleeting days
Bear us down life's rapid stream:
Upward, Lord, our spirits raise;
All below is but a dream.

Thanks for mercies past receive,
Pardon for our sins renew;
Teach us henceforth how to live
With eternity in view.
Bless Thy Word to young and old,
Fill us with a Saviour's love;
And when life's short tale is told,
May we dwell with Thee above.

The Tiddle-ly Twins.

Juliana had spent a delightful week at Aunt Mary's in the country. There were wide sweet fields of purple alfalfa, with bees and butterflies for company, and a brand-new family of kittens at the barn, so the week seemed all too brief to the little city girl.

However, when her father drove out for her and told her he had come to take her home "to see her new twin brothers," Juliana was greatly excited.

Aunt Mary thought it quite the most wonderful thing that ever happened, and reminded Juliana as she tucked in her forgotten toothbrush, "Did you decide which of the kittens you wanted? Take the small covered basket and choose for yourself while I visit with your father a few minutes."

A few hours later Juliana was at home, and up the steps she flew, straight through the hall and upstairs to her mother's room.

"Sh! called the white linen nurse from the hallway. "Your mother is napping, but you may come with me and see the babies."

Lugging her precious basket, Juliana tiptoed shyly after the nurse and looked with wonder upon the wee, blinking mites in the big white basket.

"Oh, they're awfully little and sort of wrinkled, aren't they?" she whispered. "May I touch them?"

The nurse nodded smilingly as Big Sister touched a wee cheek as softly as rose petals fall.

"Oh, one of them opened his eyes! And the other's holding my finger in his teensy hand. I do believe they knew me!" confided Juliana happily. "They feel as soft as—what I brought 'em."

She listened a breathless instant, then with a little cry of joy flitted away to her mother who was calling, "Juliana!" so eagerly.

"What is in the basket, dear?" inquired her mother after she and little daughter had enjoyed a good kiss-and-huggy time. With sparkling eyes Juliana opened the basket and mother and nurse laughed merrily as two small gray heads popped out at once.

"Twin kittens!" exclaimed Juliana's mother.

"Aunt Mary gave me my choice, and I left her half of 'em," replied Juliana, "but my brothers are not much bigger than the kittens. I see where I'll have to amuse all four of them until they can play with each other."

"What a busy girl you'll be!" laughed her father from the doorway. "Have you thought of a name for your brothers?"

Juliana was serious a minute, then she clapped her hands laughingly and sang her favorite kindergarten song:

"Tiddle-ly winks and Tiddle-ly wee
Are two little fishes that live in the sea;

They look just alike, so every one thinks

That Tiddle-ly wee is Tiddle-ly winks."

Juliana's family applauded delightedly, then her father stopped laughing to say, "But it would hardly do to give two such fine boys fish-names, now would it? They heard you and object. One of them is crying!"

"I was only joking," giggled Juliana. Then with a gray kitten under each arm she added, "We'll call the kittens Tiddle-ly winks and Tiddle-ly wee, and all of us think a long time over the babies' names."

"I think that is wise," agreed her mother. "Now, suppose you take the Tiddle-ly twins down to the kitchen, and ask Ellen to introduce them to a nice pan of milk."—Daisy D. Stephenson, in Sunday-school Times.

Our Gifts to God—Hearts.

For several weeks every Christian person in the world has been thinking of gifts, in one way or another. For it has been Christmas-time, that dear season which we keep in remembrance of that greatest of all gifts of God to man, our Lord Jesus Christ.

You know that is why we give gifts at Christmas-time—to remind us of God's great Gift.

I am sure we have all had a beautiful Christmas-time; and I am sure we have each one received at least some very small gift from some one. The gifts made us happy and light-hearted, didn't they? We loved to receive them, didn't we?

Then we all gave some gift or other to some one. And I know that the giving made us even happier than receiving gifts from others, didn't it? If we give because we love, it always makes us happy.

But did any of us remember to give God a gift this happy Christmas-time? Perhaps we did remember to give Him our dear love and our worship and our praise. I hope so.

Of course I have been speaking only of Christmas-time. But we must not think that we must give our hearts to God only at Christmas-time, and then forget about Him the rest of the year. God wants the gift of our hearts every day and every hour.

God knows what is best for us, and He is always watching over and loving us; He knows that if we give our hearts and souls into His keeping, they will be kept sweet and clean and pure and very safe.

You see it pays to give this greatest gift that we have to God. It brings a great peace into our lives, and makes us happy and strong and unafraid so long as we live.

We are told in the Bible that many hundreds of years before Christ came to live upon this earth there was a man named Caleb. Caleb lived in the time of Moses; and Moses sent him to find out all about a part of the country called Hebron.

This was not easy to do; but Caleb loved God, and did his duty every day the very best he could, no matter what other people did, or whether they were good or bad.

Moses told him that he had done so well and been so faithful to God that he should be given the land of Hebron for him and his children forever. After many years Caleb came to the great and good man Joshua, and told him of the promise which Moses had made him.

So Joshua gave him the land of Hebron, to be for him and his children forever, because he had been a loyal servant of God.

We must not love God with the idea that we are going to be paid in earthly goods, for that would be wrong indeed; but we must remember that if we do truly and honestly love Him with all our hearts, and serve Him, He will repay us by giving us His love always.—Shepherd's Arms.

How a Bird Helped Santa Claus.

The North Wind blew his trumpet shrill,
The Snowflakes danced with glee;
The Ice King donned his jeweled cap—
"We'll be in time!" cried he.
Then through the air they hurried fast—
These friends so blithe and gay—
And waited for old Santa Claus
To jump into his sleigh.

The North Wind tweaked old Santa's nose;

The Ice King chilled his feet;
The merry Snowflakes ran a race
Beside the reindeer fleet.
And when at length the ride was o'er,
Old Santa stopped his sleigh:
"My friends," quoth he, "it takes us all
To make a Christmas Day."

Just then a little chickadee
Perched on the reindeer's head,
And he sang his blithesome song
Old Santa, musing, said:
"One thing I had almost forgot—
Some birds like Christmas, too."
He pulled his furs up round his ears
And mused: "What shall I do?"

Then of a sudden he looked wise,
And fumbled 'round his sleigh,
And grinned and said: "I thought I had Some bird-seed stowed away."
The chickadee threw back his head
And sang: "Chick—chickadee!
There'd been no Christmas for the birds
Had it not been for me."

Uncle Ned's Mule.

(A True Story.)

Mary M. Van Doren, Aged 9.

As I was walking home from school the other day I came near being in an accident. I was walking real slow, studying my singing lesson, when all of a sudden I heard such a noise right behind me in the street I jumped most out of my skin! I turned around quick! and there was Uncle Ned—(he used to work for my father). He was driving his mule to a cart and the mule had slipped on his foot and fallen head over heels! I ran back and asked Uncle Ned if I could help him. He said yes'm, but just then a colored man came along and started to beat the mule, and Uncle Ned said, "Don't you whup my pore ole mule"; and the other man said, "What, don't you want him to git up?" Uncle Ned said, "Yes, but we can manage."

So I got behind the mule and pushed, and pushed so hard! and Uncle Ned got him in front by the head and he pulled and pulled so hard that the mule got up quick—so quick that Uncle Ned sat down himself bump! right on the hard road, and said, "Lordy!"

Then he got up real slow and thanked me very kindly for my 'sistance, and I ran on as fast as I could so as not to laugh at the way he sat down so hard on the stones. Tell you what! that was a dangerous accident for Uncle Ned and the mule, too.

Catching.

"Mother, do you think I could go and play with Edna tomorrow?" asked Lois, just before she went to bed.

One of her mother's old friends had just moved into the neighborhood. She had a little girl, and Lois had been promised that she could go and get acquainted just as soon as they were settled.

Instead of answering at once, mother looked at father and said, "Do you think it is catching?"

"I can't tell," said father, with a little wrinkle in his eye. "It may be. But you might let her go, anyway."

"Very well," said mother. "You may go tomorrow, Lois."

"Mother, has Edna the measles?"

"Oh, no, dear; nothing as bad as measles. Now, hurry to bed. It is five minutes past time."

Lois went to bed, wondering what Edna had that might be catching. If it had been as bad as measles, Lois would have given up the visit, for she had had measles that spring, and mother said she was fretful and whiny yet because of them.

The next afternoon she went to Edna's house and knocked on the door.

"Why," said Edna's mother, "here is Lois come to visit us. Edna, my dear, come get acquainted with Lois."

A little girl came flying into the room. She didn't look the least bit sick. If you can imagine the very nicest smile you know turned into a little girl, that would be Edna. There were smiles in her eyes and in her cheeks and in her voice, and by the way she skipped and pranced I think they were even in her feet. She took Lois out to the garden to see her play-house.

"Oh, I'm so glad you've come," she said. "Now we can play school."

"I don't like to play school," said Lois, with some of the fretfulness coming into her voice. "I'd rather play house."

"I like to play house, too," said Edna. "Of course we'll play what you'd rather, because you're company. Would you rather be the mother?"

"I'd rather you'd choose what you want to be," murmured Lois, the fretfulness quite gone, "and afterward let's play school, too. I think I'd like that."

So they played both games, and Lois hadn't a chance to whine. Edna said she was company and should have her own way, and Edna was so pleased with everything, and laughed so often, that Lois had to laugh, too.

Lois went home that night skipping and singing. Mother and father were on the porch.

"It was catching, after all," said father.

"Yes," said mother, "I see it was."

When Lois went to bed she examined herself carefully to see if there were any red spots on her arms or chest. There were not. She didn't have headache or sore throat. What could she have caught?

Edna came to visit Lois in a few days. Lois was very polite and asked Edna each time what she would rather do.

At length Edna said: "You choose this time. It's more fun sometimes to do what other people like."

So they played singing school, and Edna taught Lois some new songs.

"You think of the nicest things," said Edna. "You're just lovely for a best friend."

When Edna had gone home Lois said to her mother: "Edna thinks almost everything is lovely. I thought it was too hot; and she liked our house and orchard and my playthings, and the dog, and my mother and father and me."

"What good times she must have!" said mother. "I suppose she hardly ever finds anything to complain about."

"She doesn't," said Lois, "and she does have lots of fun. I'll look for the nice things, too. I'd like to have as much fun as Edna."

"I see it is very, very catching," laughed mother; but she wouldn't tell Lois what was catching.

The next time Lois went to visit Edna she carried five cents in her apron pocket.

"O Edna! Let's go down to the little store and get some ice cream."

"I don't believe I want any," said Edna.

"Won't your mother give you five cents?" asked Lois.

"Oh, yes; I have five cents, and lots more of my very own, but I'm going to do something nice with it."

"What is nicer than ice cream?" asked Lois.

"I will tell you," said Edna, "and you will see that it is more fun. The woman who washes for my mother brought her little girl with her once. The little girl is a cripple, and her mother had to bring her in a wheelchair. I showed her some of my birthday books, and what do you think—she never had a birthday present! The mother earns only enough to buy food and clothes. So I'm saving my money, and I'm going to have a real birthday for her. She shall have a cake with candles and flowers, and a book full of lovely stories. Her birthday is next month, and won't it be fun to see how glad she is when she gets her first present?"

"Yes," said Lois, slowly. "Can I go, too, and see her get it?"

"Why, of course. That will be lovely. It will be a regular party, won't it?"

"I guess I won't get any ice cream to-day. I will save my money, too, and I'll buy her a present."

"Oh, what fun that will be!" cried Edna.

Most of the afternoon the two girls talked about what they would do at the party.

Lois came home skipping and singing again.

"Mother!" she cried. "I'm not going to buy any ice cream or candy for a long time."

"Why should that make you happy?" asked mother.

"Because I'm going to help give a birthday party to a girl that never had a thing for her birthday before. We are going to have such fun!"

"I see you have caught it," said her mother. "You have a well-developed case."

"Mother, what have I caught?" begged Lois.

Then mother took Lois on her lap. "My dear, you have caught two of the best things a little person, or a big one, either, can catch; they are a merry spirit and a kind heart. Our little girl was getting fretful and cross. We knew that Edna was happy and sunshiny, so we hoped her merry spirit was catching. Father and I felt very sad when we saw our daughter growing selfish and caring for herself first. Edna was kind-hearted and thought of other people first. We hoped it was catching. And both of those good things were. Our little girl is growing more cheerful and kind each day. Aren't you glad you caught something?"

Lois was very glad, and she thought over it all the evening. She meant to catch more cheerfulness and kindness. Then she thought of something new.

"Mother," she said at bedtime, "perhaps some one may catch some nice things of me sometimes."

"I think they will," said mother. "I have noticed that smiles and kindness are even more catching than the measles."—Christian Standard.

The Visit.

It seemed so very strange last night,
Away from home, you know,
When grandma took away the light,
So when she turned to go
I said, "Please leave the door ajar
A little inch or two,
And then it will not be so far
From where I am to you!"

The bed seemed big enough for ten;
It is not like my own.
I thought of dad and mother—then
I felt so much alone.
I guess I should have cried some more,
But Billy Fluff, you see,
Came creeping through the open door,
And climbed up here with me.

And that was all I knew until
The sun shone in my face;
And Billy Fluff is sleeping still
Right in the self-same place.
But oh, it's different, now the sun
Has brought another day.
I'm sure the visit will be fun;
I'm sure I want to stay!

The Broken Window-Pane.

It was soon after Christmas when Jack broke the window-pane. He was playing with his fine new ball that Santa Claus had brought him, and he had just said to himself, as he tossed it up, "This time it will go as high as the housetop," when, crash; the ball went right into the little window and the glass came shivering down.

The little window was in Jack's own room. He could lie in bed at night and see the twinkling stars and the shining moon through its bright panes, and every morning the sunbeams came streaming in to fill the room with golden light. There were four panes of glass, each one as clear as crystal, and not one had ever been broken before that Jack could remember.

The north wind that had been singing all day in the treetops hurried into the house through the broken glass. It rattled the window and slammed the door and made such a stir in the little boy's room that his mother went in to see what was the matter.

"Dear me, dear me!" she said, when she saw the broken window-pane. And she made haste to sweep up the broken bits of glass and to fasten a blanket across the window.

"It would never do to have the north wind in the house on a day like this,"

she said, as she closed the door and went back to her work. She was still talking about it when Jack came in from the yard.

"Of all the days in the year for such a thing to have happened!" she said to the maid. "But I have fastened a blanket across the window, and that will keep the wind out till we can get a new glass."

She did not ask Jack any questions, and he did not say a word. He sat down behind the stove and listened to the north wind singing outside, "Oooooooo!"

"Who broke the little window, who? I know, and so do you."

That is what it seemed to say. He did not like to hear it, so by and by he got up and went out to the barn where the hired man was mending the harness. The hired man was singing, too:

"Yankee Doodle went to town
Upon a little pony,

He stuck a feather in his cap
And called it Macaroni."

"Did I ever tell you about the panther that I saw when I was about your size?" he said when he saw Jack.

The hired man knew the nicest stories. They were always about bears or squirrels or panthers, but this day Jack did not care to listen.

"Did you ever break a window?" he asked as soon as the story was ended.

"I don't know that I ever did," said the hired man; "did you?" But somebody called Jack, and he went out without answering.

The little boy who lived next door was calling. "If you will come over here I will show you my soldiers," he said. "I got them for Christmas, and they are made of wood. Go ask your mother if you may come."

But Jack did not feel like visiting. He went into the house again and up the stairs to his own room. The blanket was across the window just as his mother had said, and the room was so dark! It did not look like the same room that he had left only a little while before, even though his sled and his top and his new Christmas bank were there just where he had put them when he ran out to play with his ball. The ball was there, too, lying under the bed where it had rolled when it came through the window; but Jack did not look for it. There was a lump in his throat and an ache in his heart, and he lay down on the bed and hid his face in the pillow.

He lay there so long that he fell asleep; and when he waked up his mother was in the room. It was growing late, and she had a lighted candle in her hand that made the whole room bright.

"What was my little boy doing up here in the dark by himself?" she asked.

"O mother, mother," cried Jack, "it was I who broke the window-pane. I!"

But before he could say another word his mother's arms were around him. She sat down on the bed, and he sat close beside her and told her all about it. The lump had gone from his throat and the ache from his heart; and, when the north wind rushed round the house singing its song, "Oooooooo," it did not seem to say a word about the broken glass.

The very next morning Jack went to town and bought a window-pane as clear and as bright as the one he had broken. He paid for it, too, with some of the money from his Christmas bank; and when he went home the hired man helped him to put it in the little window. The blanket was folded up and put away then, for the wind could not get in. Only the sunbeams could come through the little window, and they streamed in to fill the room with golden light.—Maud Lindsay, in Kindergarten Review.

At the Sand Bank.

Lonely indeed was Thaddeus Quackenbush. Moreover, he was feeling unhappy because Ted Burns and Joe Rice, the two boys who lived nearest him, had laughed at his name and had called it "funny." It made him still more lonely and unhappy to see what Ted and Joe were doing. He was standing behind a pine tree watching them make their sand-cave house, and all the while he was thinking how lucky they were to have such short little names as Joe and Ted.

That very week Thaddeus and the rest of the Quackenbush family had moved to their new home in Thornton, and it did not seem to be easy to make friends. The first day, when Thaddeus tried to play with Ted and Joe, this is what they had said:

"You're smaller than we are, and you've got a funny name, Thaddeus Quackenquack, so we can't play with you."

"It isn't Quackenquack!" cried Thaddeus; but Ted and Joe had run away, and now they were making a house in the sands bank and having a great deal of fun. From his hiding place behind the tree Thaddeus could see them digging a square hole straight into the bank five feet below the top, and could hear their shouts of laughter as they threw shovelfuls of sand behind them. How he envied those two short-named boys!

The sand-cave house was nearly done now. Ted and Joe could almost stand up in it, and from the opening in front to the back it was so long that when the two diggers lay down to rest inside only their legs as far as their knees showed outside.

Thaddeus was feeling so sad that he stopped peeping round the edge of the tree and rested his head against the rough pine bark. Tears glistened on his dark eyelashes when he looked toward the sand house again.

Ted and Joe were lying on their stomachs, digging with sharp sticks, and Thaddeus could tell from the way they kicked their legs that they were having a good time.

Suddenly there was a peculiar sound, and the boy behind the tree jumped. The roof of the sand house had caved in and buried Ted and Joe! He could see their four legs sticking out and kicking, kicking, kicking as hard as they could kick. It was as if those legs said, "Help, help, help, before we smother!"

Thaddeus ran from behind his tree like a deer and, seizing one pair of legs, began to pull with all his might; but he could not budge them. Then he picked up a shovel and threw the sand back shovelful after shovelful behind him for half a minute. Again he seized that pair of legs, and this time he pulled out a gasping, frightened boy. It was Ted.

Without waiting for Ted to help him, Thaddeus took hold of Joe's legs, which were now moving very feebly as if their owner had given up hope. He pulled and pulled, and at last out of the sand came Joe, taking quick breaths of air like a fish on the bank of a stream.

The two diggers sat near the ruins of their house. Sand was in their hair and down their necks; sand was in their ears and in their mouths; it covered them from head to toe; but as Queer Arithmetic.

I've found a queer arithmetic.

When mother brings a treat,

If I divide my part with Bob

It tastes ten times as sweet.

And once when Brother Bob was ill

They gave me ice cream twice;

Though I had all and he had none,

It wasn't half as nice.

The Tree That Hung Up Its Stocking.

It was the day before Christmas, and everybody was as busy as busy could be. That is, everybody but Rosemary, who stood forlornly by the window. She could hear the clatter of things in the kitchen where they were getting supper, and she knew that in the parlor they were trimming the Christmas tree. She wanted to be down there helping, even if there were some surprises that little girls were not supposed to see just yet.

By and by the door opened, and Uncle Rob came in.

"Hello, Rosemary," he said, and then he began to read his paper.

Rosemary was more lonely than ever after that, and presently a queer little noise made Uncle Rob look up.

"Why, what's the matter, Rosemary?" he asked, for big tears were rolling down the little girl's cheeks.

Soon Uncle Rob had her up in his arms trying to comfort her, and in a few minutes she was chattering happily. But before long she began looking wistfully toward the door again, and wondering what they were doing downstairs, so Uncle Rob had to try to find something new to talk about.

"I see that the big tree out here by the window has hung up its stocking," he said.

"That isn't a stocking," said Rosemary. "That's the oriole's nest, and they don't want it any more 'cause they've gone down south where it's all warm."

"If we were fairies we might play it was a stocking," suggested Uncle Rob.

The next minute he wished he hadn't spoken of that, for Rosemary clapped her hands and said, "Oh, let's do it! You can get right out on the porch; father often does it in the summer. I'll find some nice presents"; and she jumped down and began looking for gifts for the tree.

Uncle Rob wished that somebody would come to make her forget it, or that the supper bell would ring, but nothing happened. Soon the big "fairy" was climbing out on the roof and filling the tree's stocking with candy and nuts that Rosemary gave to him. Then he climbed back and shut the window, and all the time two small bright eyes were watching him from the other side of the tree, where a squirrel sat huddled up trying to keep warm.

So after Uncle Rob had climbed back into the house the squirrel crept slowly, slowly over to the "stocking," ready to whisk back if he saw anybody. A few minutes later Rosemary looked out of the window and then gave a little scream of delight. Reaching down into the stocking with his cunning forefeet was the squirrel, who soon brought up a fine nut, and then sat on the limb and ate it.

After that he had no more chance to be hungry, for Rosemary gave him so many nuts every day that he had to get some of his friends to come and help eat them. Before spring came he was so tame that he would eat out of Rosemary's hands.

So she and the squirrel were glad the tree had had a Christmas stocking.—Louise M. Ogilvie in The Mayflower.

Christmas Poem.

By Anne R. Wayland, Age Eleven Years.

Happy Christmas! Merry Christmas!
Time of joy and time of cheer,
Bells are ringing, people singing
"Peace has come to us this year!"

Let every Christmas joy-bell chime,
In voices sweet, glad and sublime,
The words of love and Christian cheer,
"May peace come to your heart this year!"

A True Scott.

When one of the first railways was laid in North Britain, there lived at Whinnynknowe a staunch old covenant, named Reid, who was subjected to a loss that called for compensation from the railway company. William Reid, there is no reason to doubt, gave careful consideration to the question of injury, and when the railway official waited upon him he had decided the exact amount of damage that he had suffered.

The official told the farmer that the company had agreed to allow him the sum of one hundred pounds in recompense.

"A hundred pounds!" exclaimed the old covenant. "I winna touch it; I have considered the matter and I have made up my mind as to what I should get. I winna tak' a hunder."

"I would strongly advise you to accept," replied the official. "You are not likely to get more. I think the directors have been generous."

"Too much so! Too much so!" was the startling reply. "I winna tak' the hunder; I'll hae forty pounds and not a penny more."

"Oh, is that the trouble?" was the laughing response. "Well, here is the order for one hundred pounds, which you will receive when you call at the office at Perth."

William Reid accepted the order, and a week later presented it at the company's office. A clerk asked him to sign a receipt, and this the farmer did for forty pounds.

"You are to receive one hundred pounds, not forty," said the clerk, counting out the money.

The old farmer was angry. "I told your man," he cried, "that I would tak' forty and not a penny more; and I will God's Sunshine.

Never—once—since the world began
Has the sun ever once stopped shining,

His face very often we could not see,
And we grumbled at his inconstancy;
But the clouds were really to blame—
not he,
For, behind them, he was shining.

And so—behind life's darkest clouds
God's love is always shining.

We veil it at times with our faithless fears,
And darken our sight with our foolish tears,
But in time the atmosphere always clears,
For His love is always shining.

FLOWERS FOR ALL OCCASIONS

The First Christmas Tree.

The legend of St. Boniface and the first Christmas tree has been beautifully told. The scene lives before us—the wintry night, the swelling hillock crowned with the great oak tree—the "Thunder Oak," sacred to the Pagan god, Thor—the tongues of ruddy flame, the fountains of ruby sparks from the great fire kindled near the altar at its foot, the curved ranks of white-clad warriors, women and children facing the altar, the hoary High Priest and kneeling child—the victim doomed to die by the blow of the hammer, a sacrifice to Thor, the Hammerer.

Then the coming of St. Boniface, the blow from the hammer turned aside by the Cross, the rescue of the boy, the fall of the oak before the mighty blows of the Apostle, the story of Jesus simply told and how sin, not human life, is the sacrifice He asks.

"And here," said the Apostle, as his eyes fell on a young fir tree, standing straight and green with its top pointing toward the stars, amid the divided ruins of the fallen oak, "here is the living tree, with no stain of blood upon it, that shall be the sign of your new worship. See how it points to the sky. Let us call it the tree of the Christ-child. Take it up and carry it to the Chieftain's hall, for this is the birth-night of the White Christ. You shall go no more into the shadow of the forest to keep your feasts with secret rites of shame. You shall keep them at home with laughter and song and rites of love."

Thus did "the hour of darkness, the power of winter, or sacrifice, and mighty fear" vanish before the glad radiance of redeeming love, and the Pagan oak, whose roots were fed with blood, fall before the fir tree which "points to the stars."—Selected.

Carry On.

No man or leader ever so utterly and completely disesteemed the inconsistent, the vacillating and the wavering as did Jesus Christ. He always dealt with life's positives and its affirmatives. There is something splendid about His unflinching perseverance in the face of all obstacles. We like the expression, "He set his face to go up to Jerusalem."

In all His dealings with men, especially with His disciples, He seeks to inspire them with a reasonable enthusiasm, a positive conviction, and an unwavering purpose. A doubting Thomas He makes an apostle of glorious power and martyr-like spirit. An impulsive and uncertain Simon He makes a Petros, a stone of adamant, impossible of dislodgment. He transforms the fanaticism and unreasoning zeal of Saul of Tarsus into the intelligent positiveness and heroic enthusiasm of Paul, the mighty apostle. What a magnificent evidence of this we have when the brutal Nero attempts to silence this hero of the cross; from his prison he cries in triumphant tones, "I have finished my course, I have kept the faith," and the enthusiasm of his zeal stirs even the household of the voluptuous emperor.

Desultory and indifferent as many of our modern tendencies are, capricious and mercurial as the present age may be, the world at large has a deep and unfailing admiration for the man or woman, who, with stout perseverance and in the face of all difficulties, prosecutes with indomitable energy, some definite purpose. It is not the man with the hoe, but the man with the plough who challenges our attention and admiration.

Balzac once said, "Genius is intensity." Yes, it is intensity, plus determination and perseverance. I will be the word of power. I can't be the word of weakness and despair.

In no sphere of our life does the desultory tendency disclose itself more completely than in our religious habits and practices. We begin the life of faith with fine enthusiasm and splendid determination, only to find at length that we lack both conviction and perseverance. Our spiritual plowshare rusts in the furrow, our hands grow weary, and we lose our zest.

How unlike the Master we are. He saw at the end of His way the cross;

The Rev. Charles D. Lafferty, of Grayton, Md., Diocese of Washington, has accepted the call to the rectorship of Silver Spring Parish, Silver Spring, Md., in succession to the late Rev. Dr. George H. McGrew. Mr. Lafferty has taken charge and should now be addressed at Silver Spring.

Ordinations.

On Friday, December 20, Bishop Darlington ordained to the Diaconate Mr. John H. Schwacke, head master of Yeates School, Lancaster, Pa. He was presented for ordination by the Rev. George I. Browne, rector of St. John's, Lancaster. At the same time he ordained to the priesthood two deacons, the Rev. Joseph Herbert Pond and the Rev. Clayton E. B. Robinson, presented by the Rev. H. B. Pulsifer, rector of St. John's, Marietta. The sermon was by the Rev. John Frederick Virgin, of the staff of St. Paul's, Harrisburg. The Rev. Mr. Schwacke will remain in charge of Yeates School; the Rev. Mr. Bond will remain in charge of St. Andrew's, Tioga; St. John's, Lawrenceville; St. John's, Mansfield, and St. Joseph's, Mt. Pleasant.

Mr. William James White, of the Senior Class of the General Theological Seminary, New York, was ordained to the Diaconate in the Chapel of the Good Shepherd of that institution, on December 6, by the Rt. Rev. Reginald H. Weller, D. D., Bishop of Fond Du Lac, acting for the Bishop of Pittsburgh.

At All Saints' Cathedral, Spokane, Wash., on Thursday, November 21, Bishop Page advanced to the priesthood Carl Montgomery Budlong, who was presented by the Very Rev. Floyd J. Mynard, rector of North Yakima, and William Alfred Sharp, who was presented by the Rev. J. A. Palmer. Morning Prayer was read by the Rev. R. T. T. Hicks, acting dean of All Saints' Cathedral, assisted by the Rev. M. J. Stevens, and the Litany was read by the Rev. Irving E. Baxter. Bishop Page preached the ordination sermon and was assisted at the celebration of Holy Communion by the Very Rev. Gilbert W. Laidlaw. The Rev. C. M. Budlong has done singularly effective work as rector of Colville and adjacent mission stations, and the Rev. W. A. Sharp has served the church at Roslyn and Cle Elum for many years as lay-reader, and was ordained deacon last year, and now returns to his work there. The Bishop entertained the newly ordained priests and the clergy at lunch at the University Club.

Above Every Name.

Jesus, fountain of my days,
Wellspring of my heart's delight,
Brightness of my morning rays,
Solace of my hours of night!
When I see Thee, I arise
To the hope of cloudless skies.

Oh! how weary were the years
Ere Thy form to me was known!
Oh! how gloomy were the fears
When I seemed to be alone!
I despaired the storm to brave
Till Thy footsteps touched the wave.

But Thy presence on the deep
Calmed the pulses of the sea,
And the waters sank to sleep
In the rest of seeing Thee,
And my once rebellious will

Heard the mandate, Peace, be still!

Now Thy will and mine are one,
Heart in heart, and hand in hand;
All the clouds have touched the sun,
All the ships have reached the land;
For Thy love has said to me,
No more night and no more sea!
—George Matheson.

Do little things as if they were great things, because of the majesty of Jesus Christ, who works within our souls and who lives our life. And do great things as if they were little and easy, because God is all-powerful.

LETTERS FROM RHEUMATICS

Possibly you have imagined that you could never get your own consent to write a testimonial letter, but if you have ever experienced the excruciating pains of Rheumatism you can at least appreciate the feelings of those who have been relieved of this terrible disease by drinking the Mineral Water from the justly celebrated Shivar Spring at Shelton, S. C. This water overcomes many diseases, including Indigestion, Gout, Uric Acid Poisoning and Liver and Kidney diseases, but no patrons of the Spring are more enthusiastic in their praise of the water than those who have been relieved of their Rheumatism. Hundreds of letters like the following have been received by the Management:

Dr. Cooby, a South Carolina physician writes:—"I have tested your Spring Water in several cases of Rheumatism, Chronic Indigestion, Kidney and Bladder troubles and in Nervous and Sick Headaches and find that it has acted nicely in each case, and I believe that if used continuously for a reasonable time will produce a permanent cure. It will purify the blood, relieve debility, stimulate the action of the Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, aiding them in throwing off all poisonous matter."

Dr. Avant, of Savannah, writes:—"I suffered for years with a most aggravating form of stomach disorder and consulted a number of our best local physicians, went to Baltimore and consulted specialists there and still I was not benefited. I had almost despaired of living when I began to use Shivar Spring Water and in a short time was cured."

Mr. Rhodes, of Virginia, writes:—"Please send me ten gallons of Shivar Spring Water quickly. I want it for Rheumatism. I know of several who were cured of Rheumatism with this water."

Editor Cunningham writes:—"The water has done more good than any medicine I have ever taken for Rheumatism. Am entirely free from pain."

Mr. McClam, of South Carolina, writes:—"My wife has been a sufferer from Rheumatism and after drinking twenty gallons of your Mineral Water was entirely cured of the horrible disease."

Mr. Carter, of Virginia, writes:—"Mrs. Carter has had enlarged joints upon her hands, caused by Rheumatism. Shivar Spring Water removed every trace of the enlargement. The water is simply excellent."

If you suffer with Rheumatism, or with any chronic disease, accept the guarantee offer below by signing your name. Clip and mail to the

NOTE:—"I have had the pleasure of serving the little church at Shivar Spring as Pastor for years, and am therefore well acquainted with Mr. Shivar and his associates, whom I gladly commend as honorable business men and worthy of the confidence of the public. I have personally derived great benefit from the use of the Shivar Mineral Water and have knowledge of its beneficial effects in a great number and variety of cases."—Rev. A. McA. Pittman.

"To help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron," says Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital. Nuxated Iron often increases the strength and endurance of weak, nervous, run-down people in two weeks' time. It is now being used by over three million people annually, including such men as Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, formerly Secretary of the Treasury, and ex-Governor of Iowa; former United States Senator and Vice-Presidential nominee, Charles A. Towne; General John A. Clem (Retired), the drummer boy of Shiloh, who was sergeant in the U. S. Army when only 12 years of age; also United States Judge G. W. Atkinson of the Court of Claims of Washington and others. Nuxated Iron is dispensed by all good druggists everywhere.

Thoughts For the Thoughtful

Do not be anxious about God's part of your work.Noble characters do not alone bear trouble, they use it.—Fosdick.Whoever will do good, will find life too short for the work he will find to do.—Ex.By persistency in doing our duties, even self-denial may become habitual and a joy.Jesus knew what it was to be weary and disappointed, but He never complained that His lot was hard.—Ex.There is no such thing as leading a successful Christian life without making it the very first business of life.—Ex.There is no sin so little, but that if it had the right of way and time enough, it would wreck the universe.—
Ex.He doth give His joy to all:
He becomes an infant small;
He becomes a man of woe;
He doth feel the sorrow, too.
Think not thou canst sigh a sigh
And thy Maker is not by:
Think not thou canst weep a tear
And thy Maker is not near.

—William Blake.

"There is

One great Society alone on earth,
The noble Divine and the noble Dead."The most trivial tasks can be accomplished in a noble, regal, gentle spirit, which overrides and puts aside all petty, paltry feelings and which elevates all little things.—Dean Stanley."Speak a shade more kindly than the year before,
Pray a little oftener, love a little more;
Cling a little closer to the Father's love;
Thus life below shall liker grow to life above."New Year comes to us with the presentation of the great things of life.
Greatness and littleness are terms not of the quantity but of the quality, of human life. If a man has a great conception of life, and is putting allthe little things he is doing into that conception, he is a great man.—Phillips
Brooks.For the sake of our work, as well as for our peace of mind, we ought to cast our burdens on the Lord. No one can do his best work while carrying a load of care."Blessed are they that hope," is not formally among the Beatitudes; but it is a summary of very much of the
New Testament teaching.—Bishop E.
King.Be ready. Your business is to be ready. Have your tools well sharpened, and know how to handle them.
The place will come to you, the best place for you, if you are not so much looking after that which meets your taste, as after that which proves you to be a vessel fit for the Master's use.—
C. H. Spurgeon.Do not let us complain over the place in which we are compelled to serve.
The Lord hath made us, and the whole plan of our life is so arranged as to bring to their most perfect development the faculties with which we have been endowed. Let us only be concerned that we run not counter to His plans.—The Presbyterian.The humility of God is difficult to grasp. We seem so unworthy of it and seem so unimportant in the great universe, with its many constellations and myriads of worlds. Perhaps the fact that God came to this little planet and took upon Him our flesh, and lived in the little town of Nazareth for nearly thirty years, being so different from our conception of greatness and glory, we do not appreciate the humility and love of God. Unless we can in a measure grasp the love of God for us,
His coming and living on earth must be an enigma.—Bishop Weed.

The Best Christmas Gift

A year's subscription to the Southern Churchman is a Christmas gift that lasts for 52 weeks.

Your Rector would appreciate it, and each week would be reminded of your thoughtfulness. Then there are many of your friends in the parish who would enjoy it. Few of our church people read any church paper. Send the Southern Churchman for a year, and thus help to interest church families in what their church is doing. The rates are: Single subscriptions, $3.00 a year; to the clergy, $2.00.

If we receive your renewal, together with one new subscription, before January 1, 1919, the cost of the two will be $5.00.

In making up your Christmas list this year give the Southern Churchman a place.

We will mail an attractive card to reach your friend on Christmas telling of your gift of the Southern Churchman for a year.
